SPECIAL SESSION OF THE SENATE

AND

FIRST SESSION, FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

SPECIAL SESSION OF THE SENATE.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 4, 1885.

Hon. THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, Vice-President of the United States, having taken the oath of office at the close of the last regular session of the Forty-eighth Congress, took the chair.

PRAYER.

Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Thou who art the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, we are grateful for another opportunity of appearing before Thee in the attitude of humble worship, and though we tarry but a moment in Thy presence, it shall suffice to quicken our consciences and to remind us that for the performance of all public as well as of all private duties we are amenable to Thee.

We come to thank Thee for the mercies of the past and to implore the continuance of Thine all-favoring providence.

We come to ask Thy blessing upon the retiring President of these United States and upon him whose presidency of this Senate has added steadiness and safety to its legislation and maintained impartially the rights and privileges of all its members. And though these officers transfer their responsibilities to other hands, we ask that they may never cease to be the objects of Thy care and the recipients of Thy godly favor.

We ask Thy blessing upon him who is about to be inducted into the high office of President of this Republic. May his life and health be precious in Thy sight. May he receive the hearty, honest, and unbegrudged support of all good citizens; and may he, together with those who shall be constituted his advisers, be so under the direction of Thy Holy Spirit, that his administration shall prove a signal blessing to this nation and so a blessing to the world.

Be Thou with him who is to preside over the deliberations of this body, the Vice-President of the United States. As the eyes of the servants look unto the hand of their masters, so may his eyes look unto the Lord his God. May he be faithful to his trust, and may he be supplied with wisdom from on high for the discharge of all his duties.

We ask Thy special blessing upon those who for years have been honorable members of this Senate, and who this day retire from the public service appertaining to this body. May the years which remain to them be crowned with tokens of Thy love. May goodness and mercy follow them all the days of their life. And may those who come to take their places be men who, fearing the Lord and working righteousness, shall be acceptable to Thee.

Regard in mercy all who occupy advisory, legislative, or judicial relations to the Government. Dispose their hearts to keep Thy law, and may they so direct in public matters that all nations shall be constrained to recognize us as a happy and prosperous people, and to ascribe our happiness and our prosperity to the readiness with which we yield ourselves to Thy suggestions and the promptness with which we follow Thy commands.

Our petition is before Thee, Lord, and we humbly pray that Thou wilt answer it according to thy riches in glory by Christ Jesus. Amen.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators, in entering upon the duties of the office to which I have been chosen, may I express the hope and the desire that our relations may at all times be harmonious and agreeable. I beg to assure you that in the discharge of my duties I will seek to observe the most absolute impartiality.

It is some years since I was connected with the business of the Senate, and it may be that I shall find myself less familiar with its rules, usages, and modes of proceeding than formerly, and therefore I may have occasion to lean upon your indulgence and to ask your support.

The Senate is now in session by virtue of the proclamation of the President, which the Secretary will read.

PROCLAMATION.

The Chief Clerk (Mr. CHARLES W. JOHNSON) read the following proclamation:

By the President of the United States of America:

A PROCLAMATION.

Whereas objects of interest to the United States require that the Senate should be convened at 12 o'clock on the 4th day of March next to receive and act upon such communications as may be made to it on the part of the Executive:

Now, therefore, I, Chester A. Arthur, President of the United States, have considered it to be my duty to issue this my proclamation, declaring that an extraordinary occasion requires the Senate of the United States to convene, for the transaction of business, at the Capitol, in the city of Washington, on the 4th day of March next, at 12 o'clock at noon on that day; of which all who shall at that time be entitled to act as members of that body are hereby required to take notice.

Given under my hand and the seal of the United States at Washington, the 27th day of February, in the year of our Lord 1885, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and ninth.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

By the President:

FRED'K T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Secretary of State.

INAUGURATION CEREMONIES.

The persons entitled to admission on the floor of the Senate Chamber having been admitted to the places reserved for them, the President, Hon. GROVER CLEVELAND, of New York, entered the Senate Chamber, accompanied by the late President, Hon. CHESTER A. ARTHUR, and Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. RANSOM, and Mr. HAWLEY, members of the committee of arrangements, and was escorted to a seat in front of the Secretary's desk, and the late President and the members of the committee were seated on his right and left.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will now execute the order of the Senate relative to the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States.

Those in the Senate Chamber proceeded to the platform on the central portico of the Capitol in the following order:

The marshal of the District of Columbia and the marshal of the Supreme Court.
Ex-Presidents and ex-Vice-Presidents.
The Supreme Court.
The Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.
The Committee of Arrangements.
The President and the President-elect.
The Vice-President and the Secretary of the Senate.
Members of the Senate.
The Diplomatic Corps.
Heads of Departments.
Members of the House of Representatives and members-elect, governors and ex-governors of States, officers of the Senate and officers of the House of Representatives.
All other persons who have been admitted to the floor of the Senate Chamber.

The President-elect delivered the following

INAUGURAL ADDRESS.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: In the presence of this vast assemblage of my countrymen I am about to supplement and seal by the oath which I shall take the manifestation of the will of a great and free people. In the exercise of their power and right of self-government they have committed to one of their fellow-citizens a supreme and sacred trust; and he here consecrates himself to their service.

This impressive ceremony adds little to the solemn sense of responsibility with which I contemplate the duty I owe to all the people of the land; nothing can relieve me from anxiety lest by any act of mine their interests may suffer, and nothing is needed to strengthen my resolution to engage every faculty and effort in the promotion of their welfare.

Amid the din of party strife the people's choice was made; but its attendant circumstances have demonstrated anew the strength and safety of a government by the people. In each succeeding year it more clearly appears that our democratic principle needs no apology, and that in its fearless and faithful application is to be found the surest guarantee of good government.

But the best results in the operation of a government, wherein every citizen has a share, largely depend upon a proper limitation of purely partisan zeal and effort, and a correct appreciation of the time when the heat of the partisan should be merged in the patriotism of the citizen.

To-day the executive branch of the Government is transferred to new keeping. But this is still the Government of all the people, and it should be none the less an object of their affectionate solicitude. At this hour the animosities of political strife, the bitterness of partisan defeat, and the exultation of partisan triumph should be supplanted by an ungrudging acquiescence in the popular will, and a sober, conscientious concern for the general weal. Moreover, if, from this hour, we cheerfully and honestly abandon all sectional prejudice and distrust, and determine, with manly confidence in one another, to work out harmoniously the achievements of our national destiny, we shall deserve to realize all the benefits which our happy form of government can bestow.

On this auspicious occasion we may well renew the pledge of our devotion to the Constitution, which, launched by the founders of the Republic and consecrated by their prayers and patriotic devotion, has for almost a century borne the hopes and the aspirations of a great people through prosperity and peace, and through the shock of foreign conflicts and the perils of domestic strife and vicissitudes.

By the Father of his Country our Constitution was commended for adoption as "the result of a spirit of amity and mutual concession." In that same spirit it should be administered, in order to promote the lasting welfare of the country, and to secure the full measure of its priceless benefits to us and to those who will succeed to the blessings of our national life. The large variety of diverse and competing interests subject to Federal control, persistently seeking the recognition of their claims, need give us no fear that "the greatest good to the greatest number" will fail to be accomplished if in the halls of national legislation that spirit of amity and mutual concession shall prevail in which the Constitution had its birth. If this involves the surrender or postponement of private interests and the abandonment of local advantages, compensation will be found in the assurance that thus the common interest is subserved and the general welfare advanced.

In the discharge of my official duty I shall endeavor to be guided by a just and unstrained construction of the Constitution, a careful observance of the distinction between the powers granted to the Federal Government and those reserved to the State or to the people, and by a cautious appreciation of those functions which, by the Constitution and laws, have been especially assigned to the executive branch of the Government.

But he who takes the oath to-day to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States only assumes the solemn obligation which every patriotic citizen, on the farm, in the workshop, in the busy marts of trade, and everywhere, should share with him. The Constitution which prescribes his oath, my countrymen, is yours; the Government you have chosen him to administer for a time is yours; the suffrage which executes the will of freemen is yours; the laws and the entire scheme of our civil rule, from the town meeting to the State capitols and the National Capitol, is yours. Your every voter, as surely as your Chief Magistrate, under the same high sanction, though in a different sphere, exercises a public trust. Nor is this all. Every citizen owes to the country a vigilant watch and close scrutiny of its public servants and a fair and reasonable estimate of their fidelity and usefulness. Thus is the people's will impressed upon the whole framework of our civil polity—municipal, State, and Federal—and this is the price of our liberty and the inspiration of our faith in the Republic.

It is the duty of those serving the people in public place to closely limit public expenditures to the actual needs of the Government economically administered, because this bounds the right of the Government to exact tribute from the earnings of labor or the property of the citizen, and because public extravagance begets extravagance among the people. We should never be ashamed of the simplicity and prudential economies which are best suited to the operation of a republican form of government and most compatible with the mission of the American people. Those who are selected for a limited time to manage public affairs are still of the people, and may do much by their example to encourage, consistently with the dignity of their official functions, that plain way of life which among their fellow-citizens aids integrity and promotes thrift and prosperity.

The genius of our institutions, the needs of our people in their home life, and the attention which is demanded for the settlement and development of the resources of our vast territory, dictate the scrupulous avoidance of any departure from that foreign policy commended by the history, the traditions, and the prosperity of our Republic. It is the policy of independence, favored by our position and defended by our known love of justice and by our power. It is the policy of peace, suitable to our interests. It is the policy of neutrality, rejecting any share in foreign broils and ambitions upon other continents and repelling their intrusion here. It is the policy of Monroe and of Washington and Jefferson—"Peace, commerce, and honest friendship with all nations; entangling alliance with none."

A due regard for the interests and prosperity of all the people demands that our finances shall be established upon such a sound and sensible basis as will secure the safety and confidence of business interests and make the wage of labor sure and steady; and that our system of revenue shall be so adjusted as to relieve the people of unnecessary taxation, having a due regard to the interests of capital invested and workingmen employed in American industries, and preventing the accumulation of a surplus in the Treasury to tempt extravagance and waste. Care for the property of the nation and for the needs of future settlers requires that the public domain should be protected from purloining schemes and unlawful occupation.

The conscience of the people demands that the Indians within our boundaries shall be fairly and honestly treated as wards of the Government, and their education and civilization promoted, with a view to their ultimate citizenship; and that polygamy in the Territories, destructive of the family relation and offensive to the moral sense of the civilized world, shall be repressed. The laws should be rigidly enforced which prohibit the immigration of a servile class to compete with American labor, with no intention of acquiring citizenship, and bringing with them and retaining habits and customs repugnant to our civilization.

The people demand reform in the administration of the Government and the application of business principles to public affairs. As a means to this end civil-service reform should be in good faith enforced. Our citizens have the right to protection from the incompetency of public employés who hold their places solely as the reward of partisan service and from the corrupting influence of those who promise and the vicious methods of those who expect such rewards. And those who worthily seek public employment have the right to insist that merit and competency shall be recognized instead of party subserviency or the surrender of honest political belief.

In the administration of a government pledged to do equal and exact justice to all men there should be no pretext for anxiety touching the protection of the freedmen in their rights or their security in the enjoyment of their privileges under the Constitution and its amendments. All discussion as to their fitness for the place accorded to them as American citizens is idle and unprofitable, except as it suggests the necessity for their improvement. The fact that they are citizens entitles them to all the rights due to that relation and charges them with all its duties, obligations, and responsibilities.

These topics, and the constant and ever-varying wants of an active and enterprising population, may well receive the attention and the patriotic endeavor of all who make and execute the Federal law. Our duties are practical, and call for industrious application, an intelligent perception of the claims of public office, and, above all, a firm determination, by united action, to secure to all the people of the land the full benefits of the best form of government ever vouchsafed to man. And let us not trust to human effort alone; but humbly acknowledging the power and goodness of Almighty God, who presides over the destiny of nations, and who has at all times been revealed in our country's history, let us invoke His aid and His blessing upon our labors.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m., and the Vice-President took the chair.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I move that the daily hour of meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian until otherwise ordered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont as to the hour of meeting.

The motion was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following resolution. I ask its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That a committee of three members be appointed by the Vice-President to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the Senate has assembled, and that the Senate is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The consideration of this resolution is asked. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The resolution was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. BECK, and Mr. VOORHEES as the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, March 5, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., of Washington city.

The Vice-President on taking the chair was greeted with applause in the galleries.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

EXPENSES OF INAUGURAL CEREMONIES.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the necessary expenses of the recent inaugural ceremonies be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, subject to the approval of the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT.

Mr. ALLISON, Mr. BECK, and Mr. VOORHEES, the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared at the bar of the Senate, and

Mr. ALLISON said: Mr. President, the committee appointed under a resolution of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the Senate is present in the Senate Chamber and ready to receive any communication from him, respectfully report that they have performed that duty, and in response thereto the President of the United States informed them that he would presently communicate with the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President, appeared at the bar of the Senate and said: Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate sundry messages in writing.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, March 6, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BACKBONE AND OTHER RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the consideration of a resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read for information.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether patents have been issued for the lands granted in 1871 to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Vicksburg, popularly known as the Backbone Railroad; if so, for what number of acres, to what corporation or individuals, whose receipt was taken for the same, when signed, whether unusual means were used to hasten the preparation and execution of said patents, whether the clerical force employed worked nights and Sunday so they might be completed before March 4, what day they were ready for the signature of the President, what the necessity for any special execution to secure the completion and signature before the 4th day of March, whether anything was done to protect the actual settlers in their rights to any such lands; also whether previous to the 4th day of March anything was done or written in regard to any other of the unearned land grants, the forfeiture of which had been considered by the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the present consideration of the resolution, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Vermont to withold the motion that I may have a communication printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the motion for the present; but I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then it will go over until to-morrow. I ask that it may be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed, unless there be objection, and go over until to-morrow.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. HOAR. I have a communication from the president of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, made to me during the last session of Congress, in regard to certain legislation then proposed affecting the interests of that company. I supposed then that the measure to which he referred would be before the Senate for discussion, and withheld his communication until the discussion should arise, but as it was not reached, I desire that the communication may be printed for the information of the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the letter lie on the table and be printed for the information of the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did not hear the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. It is a letter from Mr. Adams in regard to the Union Pacific Railroad Company. I desire to have it printed for information.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to say in this connection that after the communication is printed it may be necessary to have printed also some counter-statement in regard to the matters therein contained.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the matter to which it relates will come up at the legislative session next winter. This paper merely contains some information about the condition of the road, which it will be convenient for Senators to have in print during the summer. Of course if there is any other contribution to that matter, which the Senator from Nebraska has, it may come in also.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the communication will lie on the table and be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 41 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 9.

MONDAY, March 9, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of State, which will be read.

The communication was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 6, 1885.

SIR: I beg leave to notify the Senate of the United States that I have this day forwarded to the Legislature of the State of Delaware my resignation as a Senator of the United States from that State.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Vice-President of the United States and ex officio President of the United States Senate.

SENATOR FROM MISSISSIPPI.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, which will be read.

The communication was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 6, 1885.

SIR: I have this day accepted the position of Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and in consequence thereof my office of United States Senator from the State of Mississippi has become vacant.

Will you be kind enough to inform the executive of that State of this fact?

Very truly and respectfully, yours,

L. Q. C. LAMAR.

To Hon. THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

SENATOR FROM ARKANSAS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Attorney-General, which will be read.

The communication was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

WASHINGTON, March 6, 1885.

SIR: I have this day accepted the office of Attorney-General of the United States, and in consequence thereof my office of United States Senator from the State of Arkansas has become vacant.

Will you be kind enough to inform the executive of that State of this fact?

Very truly and respectfully, yours,

A. H. GARLAND.

To Hon. THOMAS A. HENDRICKS,
Vice-President of the United States and President of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, communicated to the Senate sundry messages in writing.

BACKBONE AND OTHER RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] on Friday last, which went over, because of objection, under the rule. The resolution will be read.

SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. PIKE. I rise to a question of privilege.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. PIKE. I send to the Chair the certificate of appointment by the governor of the State of New Hampshire of Henry W. Blair as a Senator to fill the vacancy in the delegation to the Senate from that State by the expiration of the term ending on the 3d of March instant, and I desire that the Senator appointed, who is present, may be sworn in, if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the credentials be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To all persons to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Know ye that the executive of said State hereby appoints Henry W. Blair, of Manchester, in said State, Senator of, for, and from said State to fill the vacancy happening in the Senate of the United States by the expiration of the term of Henry W. Blair on the 4th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1885, during the recess of the Legislature of said State and by the non-election of said Blair's successor—

To have and to hold said office of United States Senator until the next meeting of the Legislature of said State said next meeting being the meeting of the Legislature designated by the laws of the United States for the election of such successor, and being the first meeting of the Legislature at which such successor could be legally elected, and until the expiration of the time for which the executive of said State is authorized to make a temporary appointment for filling the vacancy now existing.

Witness his excellency Samuel W. Hale, governor of New Hampshire, and our seal hereunto affixed at Concord this 5th day of March, in the year of our Lord 1885, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and ninth.

[SEAL.] S. W. HALE, Governor.

By his excellency the governor:

A. B. THOMPSON, Secretary of State.

Mr. VEST. I move that this paper be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so referred, unless objection be made.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. We object to that. We want to take the question on the reference.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the credentials will not be referred. The Committee on Privileges and Elections has not yet been appointed, and I trust the Senator may be sworn in without objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say to my friend from Missouri that whatever question may exist on these credentials arose in the case of Mr. Bell under precisely similar circumstances and the same state of the law, and after full discussion on all sides of the Chamber and without any party division it was decided by the Senate by a decided majority—I do not remember how large—that such an appointment was within the Constitution and the duty of the governor. So the Senate having settled this question fairly and fully and without party division, I hope the Senator will not object to the Senator from New Hampshire being sworn in, and if he thinks on reflection there is enough left of question let him afterward move to have the matter referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am aware that the question arose in a similar case from New Hampshire and that the question was then decided, but Senators who were then present remember that the right of Mr. Bell, the appointee at that time, was very strongly contested. For the first time, I believe, in the history of the Senate it was then decided that the governor might commence a term. Prior to that there had never been, so far as my remembrance goes, any decision of the Senate favoring that conclusion. On the contrary, the implication from arguments which have been made upon questions of a cognate nature have been adverse to such a conclusion.

The Senate is not composed to-day as it was at the time Mr. Bell's case was before the Senate, and I think it is eminently proper that the motion of the Senator from Missouri should prevail, and that the Senate should upon due deliberation re-examine the question of the right of the governor of a State not to fill a vacancy, but to commence a Senatorial term.

For one I do not hesitate to say, notwithstanding the conclusion at which the Senate arrived in the case of Mr. Bell, that my opinion after a thorough investigation of that case remains unchanged. I believe that whatever right a governor may have to fill a vacancy occurring in a term there is no constitutional right or authority in the governor of a State to commence a term, and that it can only be filled by the action of the Legislature itself. I hope, therefore, that the credentials will be referred.

Mr. VEST. I was a member of the Senate at the time the Bell case was discussed and determined. I remember very distinctly that there was a great difference of opinion among the eminent lawyers of the Senate at that time, and that the weight of authority was against the power of the executive of the State of New Hampshire to make that appointment. But whatever may be the legal status of this question, with all deference to the statement of the Senator from Vermont in regard to the facts of this case, it seems to me pertinent that the Committee on Privileges and Elections should determine whether this is an identical case, and then it will be for the Senate to say what is the weight of the precedent, if a precedent has been established. It seems to me that in a question of such grave importance, a question of the highest privilege in regard to the representation of a sovereign State, if there is any doubt about this precedent it should be investigated and determined again. That there is great difference of opinion among eminent lawyers, with the weight of authority against it, I have no sort of question. For this reason I insist upon the motion.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me the Senate may as well settle this question for itself now. The case of Mr. Bell, which, as has been said, was precisely similar to the present case in all particulars, was considered by a Democratic Senate, and a majority of the Senate then of the party opposed to Mr. Bell decided that he was entitled to the seat under circumstances like those in the present case, and as I was then satisfied, and I believe a large majority of the Senate was then satisfied, the question was determined by a clear and unbroken line of precedents going back to the beginning of the Government, some ten or a dozen cases, in which the same question had been presented—going back to the case of Mr. Tracy, a Senator from Connecticut in the very earliest days, which settled the law, as was claimed by Mr. Bell and as is now claimed in behalf of Mr. Blair.

Therefore I think it is not presumptuous to say there can be no serious question as to what will be the decision of the Senate at the present time; and the delay of this gentleman's taking his seat until after the committees of the Senate are appointed prevents him and the State he represents so far as his right is concerned from receiving a proper representation upon the committees of the Senate; and it will embarrass the Senate in framing its committees to postpone the question to a later day in the session. The Senate certainly is as well prepared to deal with the question now as it ever can be.

Mr. DAWES. Whatever may be the weight which may finally be attached to the objection raised by the Senator from Missouri, according to the uniform practice in both Houses of Congress when a commission is presented under the seal of a State and in due form the precedents are that the person presenting it should be sworn in and the objections considered afterward. It seems to me, therefore, that if there were any weight to be attached to these objections, they are objections which should more properly be considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections after Mr. Blair shall have been sworn in, following the precedents of the Senate and of the House in those cases with scarcely a single exception.

When a commission is presented in proper form and under the seal of a State the member presenting it is always sworn in and his right to hold the seat is decided, if at all, after that. It is rare indeed that any person presenting such credentials as these is held outside until the investigation of his right to his seat, and when that is done it is under circumstances rare, and which do not exist in this case. Here is a certificate in precisely the same form which has given a member of the Senate his place, and after that and after a report from a committee and an investigation his right to his seat has been confirmed.

I think that the Senate would not only be justified but would be called upon to admit this man to his seat, and then if the Senator from Missouri or any one else should suggest a contest of his right to that seat it would be perfectly open to him and would be decided in the ordinary course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri, that the credentials be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I now move that Henry W. Blair, a Senator appointed from the State of New Hampshire, be admitted to take the oath of office.

Mr. VEST. I object; and I ask that the motion lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. This is a mere question of Senatorial privilege. I submit that it does not lie over under the objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the motion be postponed until to-morrow? The Chair understands the proposition of the Senator from Missouri to amount to a motion.

Mr. VEST. I understand that under the rules of the Senate the original notice must go over until to-morrow where a Senator objects to its consideration. I have no disposition to delay this matter. It has been said here that this would deprive a State of its rights and would inconvenience the committee who are now arranging the general committees of the Senate. It is an open secret that the committees will be arranged to-day or to-morrow, and that then if this gentleman be admitted he can receive his position.

Mr. HOAR. I am constrained to say that I understand the rule of the Senate to be that the motion which I made, if required to be put in writing by the Chair, or without being put in writing, is in the nature of a resolution, and it is the right of any Senator, if he sees fit, to require its postponement for one day.

Mr. VEST. That is my understanding of the rule.

Mr. HOAR. I concede the right of the Senator from Missouri to demand that this lie over until to-morrow, but I wish to say to him if he will permit me, in all courtesy——

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The only practical effect of the matter will be, unless a considerable number of gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber have changed their minds——

Mr. SHERMAN. Here is rule VI.

Mr. HOAR. I beg pardon; under the new rule, Rule VI, it is said that all questions made upon the presentation of credentials "shall be proceeded with until disposed of." So that is an exception to the general rule which I had in mind.

Mr. VEST. Whatever the rule may be, I want simply to make this statement: I am not objecting to these credentials for any purpose of delay. I know very well that a majority of the Senate——

Mr. HOAR. If my friend will pardon me, I was about suggesting to him that the only practical point of this matter, as we both, I think, will see, is that the postponement of Mr. Blair's swearing in makes an interruption in his term of Senatorial service, so that his place upon committees, which he has earned by six years of faithful service, will be lost, and he will stand as a new member. It will be an interruption of his Senatorial service, and it would, therefore, of course, be a great personal gratification if without any failure of duty in whatever the Senator thinks the public good demands the question might be dealt with to-day, so that that Senator may know where he stands. That is all there is of it.

Mr. VEST. I presume that all of us, no matter what has been our term of service in this body, know how the committees are organized and appointed; and I take it for granted that the committee upon the part of the majority of the Senate would not be controlled by any such technicality as that stated by the Senator from Massachusetts, but that this gentleman, the newly appointed Senator from New Hampshire, would be treated in a spirit of equity and of Senatorial courtesy, and would receive his place according to his term of service in this body without reference to the narrow and contracted rule which is suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

There are a number of new Senators here who, whatever may be their legal attainments or legislative experience, must find this a new question to a very large extent. As I said before, I was a member of the Senate when the Bell question was considered and discussed, and I confess that I should like a few hours in which to look at that debate, and particularly at one argument which I recollect very distinctly, that of the late lamented Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Carpenter, which I thought then to be conclusive.

All I ask is that we may be permitted to look at this question for a few hours only, without prejudice to the claims of this gentleman or the State he claims to represent.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe, with the Senator from Missouri, that as a matter of courtesy to that Senator or to any Senator who says he is not prepared to vote on the question presented, the matter might properly go over, although I deny that it is the right of any Senator to object to the swearing in of a person appearing to have a prima facie right as a Senator at the moment he presents his credentials. The rule is very clear and very express. It is founded upon the clearest reasons. If a single objection could put the question over for a day, a majority might put it over for a longer period; one-third of the Senate might at the beginning of the session be kept out of their seats by a single objection. If the objection had been made here on the day of inauguration, it might have prevented the Senate from being organized except by two-thirds of the body. Therefore, the rule was founded upon good reason, that any question affecting the right of a Senator presenting credentials should be at once determined without the ordinary delay of legislation.

Still, as it makes no difference at all to the Senator from New Hampshire that he shall be sworn in to-morrow rather than to-day, and as the Senator from Missouri desires to look at the authorities, I think it is but a reasonable request and that under all the circumstances we should allow the delay at this time, but as a matter of right I should insist upon the newly elected Senator being sworn in. I have no objection whatever to conceding a reasonable opportunity to look into the authorities.

Mr. PIKE. If this matter goes over until to-morrow I hope it will be the general understanding by unanimous consent that it shall be disposed of to-morrow morning without asking a reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. This case is precisely like the one which occurred six years ago in the Senate in all its particulars, and that was decided after very long and full discussion. It seems to me that no new fact can be produced here and no reason assigned why this case should not be disposed of to-morrow. I hope it will be understood that the case shall be disposed of then.

Mr. HOAR. I should like for the information of the Senate to read from the Journal what the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] has called my attention to as to the point of order. This is the Journal of the Senate of October 17, 1877:

Mr. THURMAN presented the credentials of Henry M. Spofford, elected a Senator by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana for the term of six years, commencing March 4, 1877.

The credentials were read.

Mr. THURMAN then submitted the following resolution, and asked for its present consideration:

Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford, whose credentials as a Senator from the State of Louisiana have been this day read, be now sworn and admitted as such Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS objected to the consideration of the said resolution this day, and raised the point of order that, under the thirty-third rule of the Senate, which requires that all resolutions shall lie over one day for consideration, the resolution could not now be considered.

The Vice-President overruled the point of order raised by Mr. EDMUNDS, and decided that, under the seventh rule of the Senate, the presentation of the credentials of a Senator being a question of privilege, all questions and motions arising thereon were in order at this time, and that the consideration of the resolution could now be proceeded with.

The Chair will observe that that was the ruling of Vice-President Wheeler, a predecessor of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. FRYE. And Rule VII then referred to is Rule VI now.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, the same rule.

Mr. FRYE. It is practically the same rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts lie over until to-morrow? Is there objection to that proposition?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I understand that under the rule the question is to be proceeded with, unless by unanimous consent it lies over. If it requires unanimous consent to lay it over, I make objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California object?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do. If the rule requires that this matter must be proceeded with at once until it is finished, it can not be laid over without unanimous consent, and I object to its being laid over.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think the Senator from California is mistaken in saying that it requires unanimous consent to lay the matter over. I presume there is no question that a majority of the Senate can postpone action upon it until to-morrow. I hope the Senator from California will make no objection, and that the matter will be postponed until to-morrow, and then it will be proceeded with as a question of privilege.

Mr. FRYE. That motion should be made. I suggest to the Senator to move to postpone further consideration until to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move, then, that the further consideration of the matter be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. HOAR. In order to have no question about it, I have put my resolve in writing. Then let it be postponed until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Henry W. Blair, appointed a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, be now admitted to take the oath of office.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let that go over.

Mr. HOAR. Now let it go over.

Mr. FRYE (to Mr. COCKRELL). Make your motion.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the resolution be postponed until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the resolution be postponed until to-morrow?

Mr. TELLER. I am quite willing for one that it shall go over; but I am not willing that the Senate shall make a precedent that anybody has a right to put it over. I think on this side of the Chamber we are willing that it shall go over, but not on a motion that will commit the Senate to the principle that anybody has a right to put it over.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that the resolution lie over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California has objected.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not object if consent is asked. If all Senators desire that it shall go over, I do not object. I desire to make the same point the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] did.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the motion for the present.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Has it been announced that this matter goes over by unanimous consent?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That is not settled. The proposition now is to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HOAR. No; that motion is withdrawn.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to be committed for one to the proposition that the Senate can not, a privileged resolution being before it, postpone it until to-morrow or lay it on the table or do anything else that it thinks fit to do with it. I have no objection, on the request of the gentlemen on the other side, to this matter going over until to-morrow by motion or otherwise, but I do not wish to give in my adhesion to the proposition that it is not in the power of a majority of the Senate to postpone this resolution until to-morrow or next week or next year if a majority thinks it fit to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Shall the resolution be postponed by unanimous consent? It is so agreed. The matter stands until to-morrow.

T. C. QUANTRILL.

Mr. MILLER, of California, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the Senate to T. C. Quantrill the sum of $564 for services as clerk to Senator J. T. Farley, of California, from December 1, 1884, to March 5, 1885, inclusive, and one month's extra pay, as provided for under the provisions of the act making appropriation to supply the deficiencies for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885.

BACKBONE AND OTHER RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the reading of the resolution offered by me on Friday last, if it is now considered as the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK on the 6th instant:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether patents have been issued for the lands granted in 1871 to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg, popularly known as the Backbone Railroad; if so, for what number of acres, to what corporation or individuals, whose receipt was taken for the same, when signed, whether unusual means were used to hasten the preparation and execution of said patents, whether the clerical force employed worked nights and Sunday so they might be completed before March 4, what day they were ready for the signature of the President, what the necessity for any special exertion to secure the completion and signature before the 4th day of March, whether anything was done to protect the actual settlers in their rights to any of such lands; also, whether previous to the 4th day of March anything was done or written in regard to any other of the unearned land grants, the forfeiture of which had been considered by the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, it will be considered by the American people a matter of sincere regret that an administration, a successor to those commencing a quarter of a century ago to break the power of organized capital and check the aggressions of the greatest monopoly that ever cast its blight on this continent, should have clouded its good name far more than any word or act of its enemies in the last day of its existence; that in the last agony of dissolution its final act should be at the dictation and in the interest of corporate wealth, whose power has grown to be as omnipotent and whose aggressions as deadly as those of the one overthrown.

Beginning for the establishment of universal rights, it has traversed all zones to the highest elevation, only to be hurled in the end to the antipode of abject and humiliating surrender in the face of the nation to a more tyrannizing monopoly than dominated the Republic in former years. Breaking the bonds of slavery, it subjugated the nation to the fetters of corporations.

This last chapter is the most remarkable in the mysterious record of the Backbone Railroad.

In 1871 a large grant was given this road with condition that it should be completed in five years. During that time not a mile was built; its only act was to issue millions in bonds. Five more years passed; its grant became doubly dead. Not a rod of road constructed; its route had not even been definitely located; it was absolutely bankrupt. Debts for salary of officers, for the pictures which adorned its bonds, could not be collected.

Where were the Executive Departments of this Government then that they did not interfere and protect the public domain and the rights of the people? It may be replied, where was Congress then? Certainly. But that prince of truthful historians, Huntington, in his interesting letters to his friend Colton, forcibly portrays the management, the means and cost of controlling legislative bodies; but the people will be slow to believe that such influences can reach the Executive Departments.

It will be claimed that the New Orleans and Pacific in 1881 became the successor of the Backbone, and built not the road mentioned in the grant but a road on the faith or expectation of this grant, dead and forfeited by reasons of condition twice broken. But mark, this New Orleans and Pacific was incorporated in 1875 as a rival to the Backbone, and commenced work during the lifetime of the grant, and continued its work during the period of the second five years, with bitter denunciations against its rival, and with repeated attempts to have its grant forfeited by Congress, and modestly asked the transfer to itself. The committee were willing to declare forfeiture but not the transfer. To the schemers behind the New Orleans and Pacific—the Central and Southern Pacific—it became actually necessary to have a road of their own to the Gulf. And the New Orleans and Pacific boldly proclaimed that they had the means and would push the road to New Orleans without land or aid, and they did.

The Gould and Huntington crowd were scheming with this as they were with Scott and the Texas Pacific—the same tactics and the same influences. They fought Scott, hoping to secure the large grant. They fought the Backbone, hoping to secure their dead grant.

They would not consent that Congress should forfeit this grant, unless they would at the same time convey to them. This proposition was so infamous that Congress, manipulated as Huntington delineates, would not consent. They preferred to take the chances to force an assignment from the bankrupt company of the dead grant.

Marvelous apology, built on the faith of the dead grant; when they were demanding and, at much necessary outlay of money, convincing Congress that this grant in the hands of the Backbone should be forfeited, and in the end received from the same bankrupt road the assignment of this, as claimed by themselves, worthless grant in 1881, when the New Orleans and Pacific had nearly completed their road.

There was never a definite location of the line by either road. The Backbone operators were never willing to put money enough in its treasury for that purpose, and the New Orleans and Pacific did not consider it necessary, as they were antagonizing the land-grant road; they did not attempt to comply with the law, as they knew the only way for them to obtain it was by stealing, in which they have partially succeeded, against the protest of the nation and a portion of Congress.

It is claimed that there was a special meeting of the Cabinet—the last act of the last meeting—to legalize this fraud. Did the actual settlers on this land hire any advocates there and were their rights protected? Under the granting act the right to pre-emption and homestead was guaranteed until the line of road was definitely fixed. The report of the Land Office of 1881 said it was not fixed then; and the opinion of the Attorney-General of June 13, 1882, which will probably figure in this discussion, stated that it had never been fixed. The law secured this right. Did the Cabinet protect them or were they turned over to the tender mercies of this corporation?

It is further claimed by way of apology or defense that Mr. Kirkwood desired the opinion of the Attorney-General as to the validity of this grant. With few notable exceptions the history of the Land Bureau of the Interior Department is a record of the demands of land-grant corporations and decrees of the Department in obedience thereto; but when the demand has been too exacting an opinion of the Attorney-General was sought behind which to escape until the storm of public indignation passed by. In this case the Attorney-General was equal to the occasion and sustained the reputation of the office in that direction.

Very learned arguments by Judges Dillon, Greene, and Pierrepont on behalf of Gould and Huntington were made before the Attorney-General; but alas! no one appeared on behalf of the people. From all the officers of this great nation no one appeared to defend the public domain. No wonder the Attorney-General readily accepted the arguments of Gould's attorneys.

The ingenuity of an Attorney-General is valuable to suggest doubts where none exist and then resolve those doubts in favor of the corporation. In the Forty-eighth Congress the Public Lands Committee of the House reported in favor of forfeiture, but by some political legerdemain it was afterward referred to the Judiciary Committee to report as to legality of forfeiture, a majority reporting adversely, which was sustained in the House by a close vote. That the symmetry of history may be preserved it is hoped that some Huntington may hereafter give sketches of the means and manner of this achievement.

The Senate Committee on Public Lands reported a bill forfeiting a portion of the lands, which was placed on the Calendar but was not reached during the short session.

Fearing an attempt would be made to obtain patents a protest was prepared and signed by members of both Houses, most of them on the Public Lands Committees, respectfully asking that action be withheld, as the subject-matter was under consideration in the Senate. The question of forfeiture belonged to Congress. The controversy had not been concluded. This grant had been held for ten years and more without any attempt to comply with the conditions; and what right had that company or its assigns to stand at the doorway of Congress and demand immediate action at the peril of being compelled to deliver nearly a million acres of land, worth from seven to ten million dollars? By what mysterious power could they coerce this Government into an extra session of the Cabinet in its expiring days and secure action which will be sought to foreclose Congress and the people from effective action to rend the spoiler of his prey? What right has even the President and Cabinet to waive broken condition? That power is vested in Congress alone. But why this haste?

Why should clerks work nights and insult the religious sentiment of the nation by working on Sunday? What the necessity, public or otherwise? This Republic was not to perish on the 4th of March; its continuity was not disturbed by changing the Executive; there was no suspension of power and duties; all business proceeded as heretofore. Was all other business concluded and finished by March 4 in the Interior Department? Did other of the Executive Departments work their force nights and Sunday to have the incoming administration start with only new business?

The people will ask, Why this haste? Was it dangerous to trust the representatives of the people in the next Congress? Was it dangerous to trust the incoming administration to do justice to the men claiming this grant? Was there danger the rights of settlers on these lands would be recognized and the public domain protected by the incoming administration? If so, then it evidently has not been installed too soon.

I desire to give this public notice that the legality of these patents will be contested, so that purchasers of bonds now to be issued may not claim the protection accorded to innocent purchasers without notice.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, my experience in this body has not been as extended as that of some who sit before me; it is something over eight years that I have been in the public service. I confess to considerable astonishment at this resolution, so discourteous, so unsenatorial, directed to a co-ordinate branch of the Government. I suppose, Mr. President, it has accomplished the purpose for which it was introduced. It has enabled the mover of this resolution to appear before the public, not for the first time, but as he has on various occasions, as the special champion of the laboring classes, the down-trodden people of the country, and as the special opponent of corporations and corporation influences.

I presume that the Senator when he introduced the resolution expected nothing more. He hardly expected that any Department of the Government would allow itself to be thus assailed and answer the resolution. Before this discussion is closed, or on some other occasion when I have an opportunity, I shall call the attention of the Senate to the very remarkable character of various resolutions coming from this same source that have been directed to the Executive Departments of this Government within the last three years, and I want to give notice here to everybody that although the administration has passed into the hands of the political party with which I am not affiliated, yet as a Senator, having due respect to the dignity of the Executive Departments of the Government, I never intend without at least a protest, that that administration shall be treated by resolutions of this Senate as the late administration has been treated.

Why, Mr. President, if you would listen to and believe what this honorable Senator has said to-day you would suppose that in the issuing of this patent or the certification of the land earned by this company there had been something done that had never been done before.

Sir, every Secretary who has sat in that chair for the last sixteen years has done exactly what the Secretary who has just retired has done, and during a good portion of that time the honorable Senator has been a member either of the other House or of this body and he has been a member of the Committee on Public Lands, and he never before this body or in the committee has been heard to find fault with their acts. It is in the public press, it is where he can get the credit of being the champion of all the down-trodden and oppressed and the opponent of corporations that he is heard. When legislation can be had, when the interests of the Government can be protected when it is desirable to protect them, he has been as silent as the grave.

There are on the records of the General Land Office patents for millions of acres of land issued exactly under the same situation that this was issued. The company of which I speak appeared as the assignee of a corporation recognized by the act of 1871, known as the Texas Pacific act. It was the policy of the General Government in 1871 to give the people of the Southern section of the country what it had given to the Northern section of the country, a continental line to the Pacific coast; and for that purpose it recognized certain corporations, by name conferred upon them grants. Among others was the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, commonly called the Backbone Railroad. This railroad company was organized under the laws of the State of Louisiana with remarkable powers and privileges, and the Congress of the United States provided for it in the twenty-second section of the Texas Pacific act, which I will have the Secretary read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 22. That the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, chartered by the State of Louisiana, shall have the right to connect by the most eligible route to be selected by said company with the said Texas Pacific Railroad at its eastern terminus, and shall have the right of way through the public land to the same extent granted hereby to the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and in aid of its construction from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, thence by the way of Alexandria, in said State, to connect with the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company at its eastern terminus, there is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns, the same number of alternate sections of public lands per mile, in the State of Louisiana, as are by this act granted in the State of California, to said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and said lands shall be withdrawn from the market, selected, and patents issued therefor, and opened for settlement and pre-emption, upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas Pacific Railroad Company, within said State of California: Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act.

Mr. TELLER. The whole question arising here is contained in the last clause, "Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years;" a provision that has been put in every railroad grant made from the time when grants were first made by the Congress of the United States. The only question before the Department for three years (gentlemen may cover it up and disguise it as they may) has been this, whether, having completed the road out of time, the assignee of the original company was entitled to the lands as if it had completed the road within time.

The question whether the original grantee had the right to assign, as it did assign, to another corporation has been abandoned long since by everybody who has been making attacks upon this company. It has been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States upon more than one occasion that these grants are grants in præsenti. Every lawyer in this body—and I only regret that every man who speaks upon a subject of this kind is not a lawyer, for it would not then be necessary to explain perhaps some of the primary principles governing cases of this kind—every lawyer understands what a grant in præsenti means.

It means that it conveys to a grantee a present existing interest. Nobody will deny it, not even the Senator from Nebraska. The Supreme Court has held it, the Attorney-General has repeatedly so held. If it conveys a present interest, then it is a subject of sale and conveyance. It may then be bartered or traded; and whatever the original grantee was required to do the assignee is also required to do; and the assignee stood in exactly the same position when the assignment was taken that the other company did.

The New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company were unable or unwilling—it makes no difference which, whether organized for the purpose of issuing two millions of bonds or two hundred millions is perfectly immaterial—to complete its road, and it saw fit to sell and assign its right to these lands to another company, called the New Orleans and Pacific. The New Orleans and Pacific accepted in the most formal manner this conveyance. It received the lands, and of course received them upon the condition that it would abide by the condition subsequent, and that was for the building of the road. The company then came to the Department for instructions. After this assignment the assignee railroad company appeared before the Department of the Interior in 1881, when Mr. Kirkwood was Secretary, and addressed to the Commissioner of the Land Office the inquiries which I will send to the desk, and received from him the letters which I will send up to be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 26, 1881.

SIR: On the 17th instant you filed with me certain papers, showing the transfer by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, of the land grant to the former company. You verbally asked me for an expression of opinion as to the effect and sufficiency of the transfer.

On the same day (17th instant) I addressed a letter to Hon. W. H. Barnum, president of the first-named company, expressing the opinion that the transfer would fully vest in the last-named company, upon a formal acceptance thereof by it, all the right, title, and interest of the first named.

On the 21st instant you filed a letter from Mr. Barnum, dated 19th instant, addressed to me, covering a telegram from E. B. Wheelock, president of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, dated New Orleans, 19th instant, being the required acceptance of the transfer.

By letter to Mr. Barnum, dated 21st instant, I acknowledged receipt of his letter and inclosure, and stated that the transfer was not complete.

On the 24th instant you referred a letter dated New York, 23d instant, addressed to you from William M. Barnum, secretary of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, covering the original of the telegram of acceptance above referred to.

Yesterday you telegraphed me, asking if the papers last described had been received; to which I at once responded by telegraph in the affirmative.

All the papers in the case have been filed.

Very respectfully, &c.,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

Hon. J. H. KETCHAM,
House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1881.

SIR: In compliance with the verbal request of Hon. J. H. Ketcham I make the following statement:

By the twenty-second section of an act of Congress, entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company," &c., approved March 3, 1871, a grant of land was made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company for the purpose of aiding in the construction of its road.

At a special meeting of the directors of said New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, held December 29, 1880, a resolution was adopted authorizing the president and secretary of the company to transfer all the right, title, and interest of said company in and to said grant to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, and to make and execute such instruments as should be necessary for that purpose.

On the 5th day of January, 1881, the president and secretary, pursuant to said authority, executed a deed, in the name of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company, conveying all the right, title, and interest of said company in and to said grant to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company.

On the 3d day of February, 1881, the directors of the last-named company adopted a resolution authorizing the president of the company to accept said conveyance, and to execute any documents necessary to evidence the acceptance.

There can be no doubt that when the president of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company accepts said transfer the company will be fully vested with all the right, title, and interest which the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company has in and to said grant.

Very respectfully,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

W. H. BARNUM, Esq.,
President of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company.

NEW ORLEANS PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT,
New Orleans, February 19, 1881.

SIR: In pursuance of the resolution of the board of directors of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, passed February 3, 1881, I hereby accept, in behalf of said company, the deed and transfer executed by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, bearing date January 5, 1881, conveying all its right, title, and interest in, to, and under the land grant made by section 22 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871.

THE NEW ORLEANS PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY,
By E. B. WHEELOCK, President.

Hon. W. H. BARNUM,
President N. O., B. R. and V. R. R. Co., 52 William st., N. Y.

Received the within acceptance this 23d day of February, 1881.

THE NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE AND VICKSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY,
By WM. M. BARNUM, Secretary.

(Indorsements:) 1377, C. 6. Department of the Interior, Lands and Railroad Division. Received October 29, 1881.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 21, 1881.

SIR: The president of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company has duly accepted, in behalf of said company, the deed referred to in my letter addressed to you, dated February 17, 1881, being the deed to the said New Orleans Pacific Railway Company by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, of all its right, title, and interest in and to the grant to said last-named company by the twenty-second section of an act of Congress entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company," &c., approved March 3, 1871.

The transfer by the said New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company of all its right, title, and interest in and to said grant to the said New Orleans Pacific Railway Company is now complete.

Very respectfully,

J. A. WILLIAMSON,
Commissioner.

W. H. BARNUM,
President of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company.

Mr. TELLER. Now, Mr. President, this railroad company was prepared to go to work. They had received from the original company the grant. There was some delay in the recognition by the Department of the transfer. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the united delegation of the State of Louisiana, including her two Senators, neither of whom now sits on this floor, and all her members of Congress, petitioned the Department in a letter that I hold in my hand to recognize this transfer and allow this company to go on and build the road.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator allow me a question right there?

Mr. TELLER. I will.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand the Senator to remark that after this communication from the Land Commissioner in 1881 this company was allowed to go on and construct the road. What I desire to ask is if it is not the fact, as I have already stated, that this company was organized in 1875, in the lifetime of the grant, and that during the summer of 1875 it did some work in the lifetime of the grant?

Mr. TELLER. Which company do you speak of?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I mean the New Orleans and Pacific. After the letters written in 1881, which have been read, the Senator said the company was ready to go on and build this road—the New Orleans Pacific. Now I ask if the New Orleans Pacific was not organized in 1875, during the lifetime of this grant, and if it did not do some work on this road in 1875 and continued work on this road down to 1881, when these letters were written?

Mr. TELLER. If there was anything that could convince me that the honorable Senator from Nebraska has not any conception of this case it is the question he has asked me now. I am ready to reply to it, but it has nothing to do with this case. The company was in existence, but the company had no right to this grant; it had not been named in the act; it appeared then as the assignee. Does the Senator say that as the assignee it could not take this grant, that it did not stand precisely in the same situation that the old company would have stood if it had completed the line? If he does, he has parted company with everybody else on his side who has been attacking this grant.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now, if the Senator will allow me right there, I will ask him further if this New Orleans Pacific was, as is true, organized in 1875 before the grant made the Backbone road expired, if they did work in 1875 and continued work until 1881 without this grant and fighting it, was there any pretense for them to claim any land adjoining the road they had built at the time when they were fighting the grant?

Mr. TELLER. This company have claimed nothing except for the road they have built after receiving this grant, and the Senator knows that. An attempt to make it appear here that they have claimed anything else is unworthy of his position. He knows very well that that was the question submitted to the Attorney-General. Having earned this grant, having finished this road subsequent to the purchase of the grant, are they entitled to the land? The Senator has been heard on the stump, he has been heard in the newspapers, and he has been heard everywhere claiming that this was a precedent for the granting of 15,000,000 acres of land to the Texas Pacific Company. I excuse the gentleman. I do not charge that he ever stood up and willfully made the statement, for I doubt to-day whether he can appreciate the difference between this case and that of the Texas Pacific or Southern Pacific, although the Attorney-General, ex industria in this case, declared that it was not a case similar to the Texas Pacific and the facts are as widely different as it is possible.

The Southern Pacific built the road on the route of the Texas Pacific, not having any privity of estate or connection with the grant made to the Texas Pacific—not having any interest that enabled them to perform the condition, and that is the difference between the Texas Pacific and this case. This company claims nothing except that it had done a little work; it had completed no portion of its road; and if the Senator makes that statement it is utterly untrue, and without a foundation of fact, and he ought to know it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Right there——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Senator as to the road constructed by the New Orleans Pacific from 1875 down to 1881, whether there was any more privity or connection between the New Orleans Pacific and the Backbone in the work done between these periods of time than there was between the Southern Pacific and the Texas Pacific?

Mr. TELLER. I reply that not an acre of land has been granted conterminous with any portion of the road that was not built after they had received their grant from the other company; and that ought to be answer enough. The sixty-eight miles that they bought they have had no land for, and the Attorney-General declared that they were not entitled to land for that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Have they received for the balance besides the sixty-eight miles?

Mr. TELLER. They have received just as much land as they were entitled to by the side of the road built after the grant was issued to them, and no more.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me ask——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. I decline to yield unless the Senator founds his question on facts.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me ask another fact. I ask whether the New Orleans Pacific, beyond the sixty-eight miles the Attorney-General said they were not entitled to lands for, have received a grant for all the miles of that road beyond the sixty-eight?

Mr. TELLER. I do not know how many miles they have received for. It is utterly impossible for me to say; but I do know this, that the order was that they should receive for so much as they had built subsequent to the assignment, and they have received no more.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now, one moment. Allow me there. The sixty-eight miles the Attorney-General spoke of were built by the Morgan Company in Louisiana. That had no connection either with the Backbone road or the New Orleans Pacific. That is one point. But the point which I was endeavoring to get the attention of the Senator to was this: Have they built beyond the sixty-eight miles up to the year 1881, with no privity between these roads but in antagonism, as there was between the Southern Pacific and the Texas Pacific. I ask him now again if patents have been granted to them for that portion of the road? We shall see when the answer comes to the resolution from the Interior Department.

Mr. TELLER. I say that lands were granted for only so much of the road as they built and constructed after purchase of the grant as the assignee of the grant. Now, the gentleman ought to be satisfied with that. On other parts they had done some work; but the road had not been constructed and was not built.

When this company came before the Department in the fall of 1881 they came just as twelve or fourteen other roads had come claiming to have built the line out of time; they came just as several other roads had come claiming to have built the road as the assignee of the original grantee, and the question was never raised in the Department whether they had the right to build out of time and thus claim title; but the question was raised whether as the assignee they had the right, and this question was raised by the original company or the bondholders or stockholders thereof. Thereupon the Secretary of the Interior, my predecessor, submitted that question to the Attorney-General to determine whether they had a right to the land that they were claiming or not.

I do not think I need say to the American Senate that when resort is had to the provision that authorizes and in some instances requires the head of a Department to inquire of the Attorney-General the law of a case, by common courtesy, by common decency, if not the very terms of the law, that head of Department is bound to recognize that opinion as the law of the case in which the inquiry is made.

If that is not the law, then for the many years that the Departments have been in the habit of having questions of this character decided for the government of the other branches of the Executive Departments than the Department of Justice by the Attorney-General the various Executive Departments have been in error; then all the Executive Departments of the Government have proceeded upon a false basis; and it is left to the distinguished lawyer from Nebraska to overrule the precedents of many years and insist that it was the right, nay, that it was the duty, of the Interior Department to say to the Department of Justice, "Notwithstanding we have asked your opinion upon the law; notwithstanding we confessed that we had not confidence in ourselves to determine so grave and weighty a question, when you have determined it we will turn around and say your law is bad, and we decline to be governed by it." That never has been the practice.

But I do not desire to shield the Interior Department under the opinions of the Attorney-General. I make no such defense as that. It was the law, settled and adjudicated, that these men had this grant, having bought it. Does anybody deny that it was assignable? That point was yielded by the House Committee that made a report, five in favor of the company and six against it, yet the majority of the House committee declared that it was an assignable grant. They said there is a present interest in the Vicksburg company, and there being a present interest, they may sell and assign to somebody else, subject only to the conditions of the grant.

Why, Mr. President, I should be ashamed to cite an authority upon such a proposition. It has never been questioned since the days of Coke. It has never been questioned by any reputable lawyer, it has never been questioned by any court. Where there is an interest coupled with a condition, the party holding the interest may perform the condition. And there is another principle as well understood by lawyers—I do not know how it is in Nebraska, but I know where people study the profession and where people understand the law it is understood—that a condition attached to an estate once performed is performed forever. There is not anywhere a dissent from that doctrine. A subsequent condition, says the Supreme Court, is a condition attached to the estate, and until the grantor shall step in and re-enter or by some act equivalent to a re-entry shall declare that the condition can not be fulfilled hereafter, it is to be considered as still existing, and its performance at any time is a performance forever and deprives the grantor of the right of re-entry.

Mr. President, this question of assignment I said was submitted to the Attorney-General, and of course all the other questions were submitted, too, especially, however, that of the assignment. Various questions were submitted to the Attorney-General, who, after months of attention to the matter, returned it with the declaration:

First, that the grant of lands was a grant in præsenti; nobody doubted it.

Second, that the assignment was a valid assignment; nobody ought to have doubted it.

Third, that this company was entitled to these lands as the assignee, having performed the condition subsequent attached to the grant.

The Attorney-General distinguished in that opinion the difference between that case and the case of the Texas Pacific and the Southern Pacific. It has always been distinguished in the Department. It was not a precedent recognized as having any bearing upon the question of the right of the Southern Pacific. I ask that the Attorney-General's opinion be put in the RECORD, but not read, for it is too lengthy. I have no doubt it has been read by everybody who gives any attention to this matter, but it is too lengthy for me to wait now to have it read. In order to make up the history of this case I desire that it shall go into the RECORD.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., June 15, 1882.

SIR: By a letter dated the 5th of January last, your predecessor submitted to me a number of questions arising upon an application of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company for certain lands claimed under the land grant made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by the act of Congress of March 3, 1871, chapter 122.

The land grant mentioned is contained in the twenty-second section of that act, which provides:

"That the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, chartered by the State of Louisiana, shall have the right to connect, by the most eligible route to be selected by said company, with the said Texas Pacific Railroad at its eastern terminus, and shall have the right of way through the public land to the same extent granted hereby to the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and in aid of its construction from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, thence by the way of Alexandria, in said State, to connect with the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company at its eastern terminus, there is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns, the same number of alternate sections of public lands per mile, in the State of Louisiana, as are by this act granted in the State of California to said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and said lands shall be withdrawn from market, selected, and patents issued therefor, and opened for settlement and pre-emption, upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas Pacific Railroad Company within said State of California: Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act."

The eastern terminus of the Texas Pacific Railroad, as fixed by the same act, was a point at or near Marshall, Tex.

The New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature of Louisiana passed December 30, 1869, which authorized it to construct and operate a railroad "from any point on the line of the New Orleans, Jackson, and Great Northern Railroad, within the parish of Livingston, running from thence to any point on the boundary line dividing the States of Louisiana and Mississippi," the route here indicated lying east of the Mississippi River. It was also authorized to construct and operate a branch railroad from its main line (above described) to the city of Baton Rouge; and for the purpose of connecting its railroad with the railroads of other companies, &c., it was furthermore authorized "to construct, maintain, and use, by running thereon its engines and cars, such branch railroads and tracks as it may find necessary and expedient to own and use;" and such branch railroads were, for all the purposes of the act, to be deemed and taken to constitute a part of the main line of its railroad within the State of Louisiana.

On November 11, 1871, that company filed in the General Land Office a map designating the general route of a road projected thereby from Shreveport, by way of Alexandria to Baton Rouge, and thereupon a withdrawal of the public lands along the same was ordered, which became effective in December following.

Subsequently by an act of the Legislature of Louisiana, passed December 11, 1872, the same company was given "full power and authority to commence the construction of their road in the city of New Orleans or Shreveport, or at any intermediate point on their line of road, as may best suit the convenience of said company and facilitate the speedy construction of a continuous line from the city of New Orleans to the city of Shreveport, or perfect railroad communication with the Texas Pacific Railroad, or any other railroad in Northwestern Louisiana, at or near the Louisiana State line: Provided, however, That the said company shall construct the line of its road between the city of New Orleans and the city of Baton Rouge on the east side of the Mississippi River, to the corporate limits of the said city of Baton Rouge, or adjacent thereto."

In the mean time, by the act of Congress of May 2, 1872, chapter 132, the Texas and Pacific Railway Company (formerly styled the Texas Pacific Railroad Company) was "authorized and required to construct, maintain, control, and operate a road between Marshall, Tex., and Shreveport, La., or control and operate any existing road between said points, of the same gauge as the Texas and Pacific Railroad." The same act further provided that "all roads terminating at Shreveport shall have the right to make the same running connections, and shall be entitled to the same privileges, for the transaction of business in connection with the said Texas Pacific Railway, as are granted to roads intersecting therewith."

On February 13, 1873, a second map was filed in the General Land Office, by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, designating the general route of a road projected thereby from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, and a withdrawal of the public lands along the same was ordered, which took effect in April, 1873. The route between those places, those designated, lies on the east side of the Mississippi River. "That company has not constructed any part of its road either on the route between New Orleans and Baton Rouge or on the route between the latter place and Shreveport; nor, indeed, has there been a definite location of its road anywhere between the points mentioned." Nothing beyond the designation of the general route thereof appears.

Pursuant to a resolution of its board of directors, adopted December 29, 1880, all the right, title, and interest of that company in and to the aforesaid grant of public lands made by the act of March 3, 1871, were deeded by it to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company. This action of the board of directors and officers of the former company was afterward approved and ratified by the stockholders thereof at a meeting held in December, 1881.

The New Orleans Pacific Railway Company was originally incorporated under the general laws of the State of Louisiana in June, 1875. Its charter was subsequently amended by acts of the Louisiana Legislature, passed February 19, 1876, and February 5, 1878. It is thereby authorized to construct a railroad "beginning at a point on the Mississippi River at New Orleans, or between New Orleans and the parish of Iberville, on the right bank of the Mississippi, and Baton Rouge on the left bank, &c., or from any point within the limits of this State, and running thence toward and to the city of Shreveport," which is made its northwestern terminus.

The route of this company as projected is understood to extend from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, and thence by way of Alexandria to Shreveport. Between New Orleans and Baton Rouge it lies on the west side of the Mississippi River, while the designated route of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company between the same points lies on the east side of that river. Between Baton Rouge and Shreveport its general course and direction correspond in the main with the route designated by the last-named company. It is throughout its entire length from New Orleans to Shreveport within the limits of the before-mentioned withdrawals of public lands.

In October, 1881, the president of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company made affidavit that three sections of its road were then completed and ready for examination by the Government; whereupon a commissioner was appointed to examine the same, the result of whose examination appears in a report made by him to the Secretary of the Interior under date of the 26th of that month. One of the sections embraces sixty-eight miles of road, beginning on the west bank of the Mississippi River, opposite New Orleans, and ending near the town of Donaldsonville; another embraces twenty miles of road near Alexandria, and the third embraces fifty miles of road terminating at Shreveport. For each of these sections lands are claimed by that company under the aforesaid land grant as assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company.

No map of definite location of any portion of its road has been filed, other than those of constructed portions.

It appears that in February, 1881, the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company purchased from Morgan's Louisiana and Texas Railroad and Steamship Company the road constructed on the west bank of the Mississippi River by the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company, from Westmego to White Castle, a distance of sixty-eight miles, and that the same has become a part of the main line of the road of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company.

The following are the questions submitted:

"1. Was the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company a grant in præsenti?

"2. Had the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, at the date of its alleged transfer of lands to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, such an interest in the lands, under said act, as was assignable?

"3. Is the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company such a successor to or assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company as is contemplated by said act?

"4. Should it appear that the sixty-eight miles of the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad was constructed prior to the act of March 3, 1871, granting lands to aid in the construction of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad, can the New Orleans Pacific Company (its assignee) claim any benefit from the grant? Or in case of such prior construction, and the non-construction of any portion of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg road, has the purpose for which the grant was made failed, and the grant consequently lapsed?

"5. If the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas road was constructed subsequently to the date of said act, is so much of its road as is now owned by the New Orleans Pacific Company such a road as is contemplated for acceptance by the President within the meaning of said act, and may patents issue to the latter for lands opposite to and conterminous with such constructed portion of road?"

These questions are accompanied by a request for an opinion upon such other questions of law as may suggest themselves touching the transfer of said land grant to which reference is above made.

Of the above-stated questions the first three may be considered together in connection with the following inquiry, which presents itself at the outset: whether the assent of Congress to the transfer made by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company of all its interest in said land grant to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company is necessary (by reason of anything in the provisions of the grant itself) to entitle the latter company to the benefit of said grant in aid of the construction of the road projected by it?

The act of March 3, 1871, passed to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Vicksburg Railroad Company a present interest in a certain number of alternate sections of public lands per mile within the limits there prescribed. Its language is "there is hereby granted to the said company" the number of alternate sections mentioned; words which import a grant in præsenti, and not one in futuro, or the promise of a grant. (97 United States Report, 496.) But the grant thus made is in the nature of a float. It is of sections to be afterward located, their location depending upon the establishment of the line of the road. Until this is definitely fixed the grant does not attach to any specific tract of land. Upon the line of road being definitely located the grant then first acquires precision, and the company becomes invested with an inchoate title to the particular lands covered thereby, which can ripen into a perfect title only as the construction of each section of twenty miles of road is completed and approved, when the right to patents for the lands opposite to and conterminous with such constructed section accrues.

The proviso in the grant that the company shall complete the whole of its road within five years from the date of the act is a condition subsequent, the failure to perform which does not ipso facto work a forfeiture of the grant, but only gives rise to a right in the Government to enforce a forfeiture thereof. Yet in order to enforce a forfeiture such right must be asserted by a judicial proceeding, authorized by law, or by some legislative action amounting to a resumption of the grant. (Schulenberg vs. Harriman, 21 Wall., 44.) Hence, until advantage is taken of the non-performance of the condition, under legislative authority, the interest of the grantee in the grant remains unimpaired thereby.

Such being the nature and effect of the grant and its accompanying condition, and no action having been taken either by legislation or judicial proceedings to enforce a forfeiture thereof, it follows that at the period of said transfer by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company this company was invested with a present interest in the number of alternate sections of public lands per mile granted by the act of 1871, notwithstanding it was already in default in the performance of the condition referred to, and that it still retained a right to proceed with the construction of the road in aid of which the grant was made until advantage should be taken of the default. But as it had not then definitely fixed the line of its road, although a map designating the general route thereof was duly filed, that interest did not attach to any specific tracts of land, but remained afloat, as it were, needing a definite location of the road before it could become thus attached. Was the interest here described assignable to another company, so as to entitle the latter to the benefit of the grant in aid of the construction of its road between the places named therein, without the assent of Congress?

Doubt has perhaps arisen on this point in view of the fact that in one or two instances it has been thought expedient to obtain legislation by Congress confirming or authorizing a similar assignment (see section 2 of the act of March 3, 1865, chapter 88, and section 1 of the act of March 3, 1869, chapter 127), and also in view of the adverse ruling of this Department in the case of the Oregon Central Railroad Company. (13 Opin., 382.) However, a similar assignment made in 1866 by the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company to the Pike's Peak Railroad Company, afterward known as the Central Branch Company, was held to be valid by Attorney-General Stanbury in an opinion given to the Secretary of the Treasury under date of July 25, 1866.

In the latter case the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Company, which was incorporated by the State of Missouri, with authority to construct a railroad between Hannibal and Saint Joseph, within that State, was, by the Pacific railroad act of July 1, 1862 (section 13), "authorized to extend its road from Saint Joseph, via Atchison, to connect and unite with the road through Kansas, * * * and may for this purpose use any railroad charter which has been or may be granted by the Legislature of Kansas," &c.; and by the fifteenth section of the same act it was provided that "wherever the word company is used in this act it shall be construed to embrace the words their associates, successors, and assigns, the same as if the words had been properly added thereto."

Subsequently, in 1863, an assignment was made by that company of all its rights under said act (which included an interest in both a land and a bond subsidy) to the Atchison and Pike's Peak Railroad Company, a company previously organized under a charter granted by the Legislature of Kansas. The latter company, having constructed a section of twenty miles of the proposed road west from Atchison, claimed the benefit of the grant made to the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Company, as its assignee, and this claim was recognized and allowed, in accordance with the opinion of the Attorney-General. It will be observed, however, that the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Company was authorized to "use any railroad charter which has been or may be granted by the Legislature of Kansas," and this, together with the provision in the fifteenth section quoted above, may have been regarded as sufficient to sustain the assignment.

In the case of the Oregon Central Railroad Company, mentioned above, a grant of a right of way through the public lands, and also of alternate sections thereof, was made to that company, "and to their successors and assigns," by the act of May 4, 1870, chapter 69, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line in certain places in Oregon. In August following an instrument was executed by the company assigning all its interest in the grant to the Willamette Valley Railroad Company, and thereupon the question arose whether the grant was susceptible of being thus transferred. The Attorney-General (Mr. Akerman), to whom the question was submitted, after reviewing the various provisions of the act, some of which (see section 5) imposed certain duties and required certain important acts to be performed by the company, decided in the negative, holding that, upon consideration of those provisions, the Oregon Central Company was alone within the contemplation of Congress in respect of the donation made and duties imposed by that act. The words "their successors and assigns," as used in the act, were regarded as words of limitation merely.

But the grounds upon which that decision appears to have been based are not found to exist in the case now under consideration. Here a grant of a certain number of alternate sections of public lands per mile is made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, in and of the construction of a road from New Orleans, by the route indicated, to connect with the eastern terminus of the Texas and Pacific Railroad, which lands are required to be "withdrawn from the market, selected, and patents issued therefor, and opened for settlement and pre-emption upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas Pacific Railroad Company."

The grant is coupled with no special duties or trusts for the performance of which there is reason to believe the particular company named therein was more acceptable to Congress than any other. Its purpose is to secure the construction of a railroad between the points designated, and whether this purpose be fulfilled by that company or by another company must be deemed unimportant in the absence of any provision indicative of the contrary. The interest derived by the grantee, though it remain only afloat, is a vested interest, and it is held under the same limitations which apply after it develops into an estate in particular lands until extinguished by forfeiture for non-performance of the condition annexed to the grant. I perceive no legal obstacle arising out of the grant itself to a transfer of such interest by the grantee to another company, and should the latter construct the road contemplated agreeably to the requirements of the grant, and thus accomplish the end which Congress had in view, I submit that it would clearly be entitled to the benefits thereof.

The question of the assignability of the interest of the grantee would be more difficult if, after definitely locating the line of its road, and thus attaching the grant to particular lands along the same, it was proposed to transfer that interest to another company for the benefit of a road to be constructed by the latter on a different line, though following the general course of the other road. But in the present case the facts give rise to no such difficulty. The grant had not previous to the transfer become thus identified with a particular line of road; and was thereafter susceptible of location upon the line of the road projected by the assignee (the New Orleans Pacific Company), provided this road met the requirements of the grant in other respects, as to which no doubt is suggested.

My conclusion is that the assent of Congress to the assignment made by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, as above, is not necessary in order to entitle the assignee to the benefit of the land grant in question.

The remaining questions relate to the sixty-eight miles of railroad formerly belonging to the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company, but now owned by the New Orleans Pacific Company, and made a part of its main line between New Orleans and Baton Rouge.

The land grant in question was, as its language imports, made in aid of the construction of a railroad between certain termini, contemplating a road to be constructed, not one already constructed. It has not been the policy of Congress thus to aid constructed roads. Had a constructed road existed at the date of the grant, which extended from one terminus to the other, and afterward the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, instead of entering upon and completing the construction of a road, had purchased the road already constructed, this, it seems to me, would not have satisfied the purposes of the grant so as to entitle the company to the benefit thereof.

The same objection would apply where the constructed road extended over only a part of the route contemplated by the grant. So far as I am advised, the action of the Government hitherto has accorded with this view. On the other hand, if such road was constructed subsequently to the date of the grant, and is owned by the grantee or the assignee of the latter, I see no ground for excluding it from the benefit of the grant should it otherwise fulfill the requirements thereof.

Agreeably to the foregoing views, and in direct response to the several questions submitted, I have the honor to reply as follows:

The first, second, and third questions I answer in the affirmative. The fourth question (including the alternative added thereto) I answer in the negative. The fifth question I answer in the affirmative—assuming, as I do, the company named therein to be an assignee of the grantee in the act referred to.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Secretary of the Interior.

This came to the Interior Department on the 15th of June, 1882. Congress was in session; it was the Forty-seventh Congress. There were bills pending in both branches of Congress, or had been recently, to forfeit the grant. Originally bills were introduced in the Forty-fifth Congress to forfeit this grant for the express purpose of transferring it to the present corporation, the New Orleans and Pacific. A bill was introduced into the Senate calling upon Congress to give this grant by statute, so that the latter company might hold it as well by grant from this Government as by assignment, and that bill went to the appropriate committee. A memorial to forfeit the grant was sent to the Senate of the Forty-seventh Congress. On the 7th day of June, 1882, the Committee on Railroads of this body, to which the memorial had been referred by Mr. Jonas, then a Senator from Louisiana, presented to the Senate a report, in which the committee declared unequivocally that this railroad company, as the assignee of the Vicksburg Company, was entitled to these lands, and the Senate accepted that report. Let me read it:

Mr. Jonas, from the Committee on Railroads, submitted the following report: The Committee on Railroads, to whom the subject was referred, submit the following report:

A petition has been referred to the Committee on Railroads of certain citizens of Louisiana, asking for the forfeiture of the land grant made to the New Orleans, Vicksburg and Baton Rouge Railroad Company by the ninth section of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Texas Pacific Railroad Company, and to aid in the construction of its road, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1871, on the ground that the company to whom the grant was made has failed to build the road within the time prescribed by the act.

The grant was made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, its successors and assigns. That company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature of Louisiana, approved December 30, 1869. The object of Congress in making the grant was to aid in the construction of the proposed road from New Orleans, via Baton Rouge, Alexandria, and Shreveport, to connect with the eastern terminus of the Texas Pacific Railroad, and thus connect that road with the Mississippi River and the Gulf of Mexico.

The committee find that this connecting road, on almost the same line, and between the same points (if not built by the original grantees), has been built by the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, which was organized under a charter confirmed by an act of the Legislature of Louisiana, approved February 19, 1876. This road is now completed and running between New Orleans and the eastern terminus of the Texas Pacific Railroad, at or near Marshall, Tex., its route being via Baton Rouge, Alexandria, and Shreveport.

The New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company (which still has corporate existence), by deed dated the 5th day of January, 1881, granted and transferred to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company all its right, title, and interest in and to the lands granted to it by the before-mentioned act of Congress incorporating the Texas Pacific Railroad Company. This transfer was approved, ratified, and confirmed at a meeting of the stockholders of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by a vote of two-thirds of its entire capital stock. The transfer was formally accepted by the board of directors of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company.

The deed of transfer, a certified copy of the resolution of the stockholders of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company ratifying the transfer, and a certified copy of the resolution of the board of directors of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company accepting the transfer, have been filed in the Department of the Interior.

A commissioner to inspect a portion of the railroad built by the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company was, upon the application of that company, appointed by the President of the United States, and the report of the said commissioner, approving the construction of the portion of the railroad inspected by him, was duly filed in the Department of the Interior.

Application is now made for the issuance of patents to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company for the lands granted by Congress to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, and by the last-named company assigned to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, as heretofore stated.

The grant was originally made to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purposes above stated.

The road has been built by the assignee of the grantee, and the objects of the grant have been fully attained.

No forfeiture of the grant was made before the completion of the road on the grounds alleged, and we think it would be unjust and inequitable to make such forfeiture now when the work has been completed by the assignee company, which has built the road in good faith and in full expectation of receiving the benefit of the grant which remained unforfeited and assignable in the control of their grantor.

Your committee think no consideration of public policy requires the forfeiture of the grant, and they recommend that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the memorial.

This report had been made to this body eight days before the Attorney-General's opinion came, but when the opinion of the Attorney-General came to the Department of the Interior it was supposed by everybody in that Department, by every lawyer certainly, by every clerk, by the head of the Department, that common courtesy required at least that the opinion should be enforced. There was not upon the records of that Department another case where the Attorney-General had certified that a road was entitled to lands—and there were several such cases—that it had not been carried out according to the opinion of the Attorney-General. Had that been in an ordinary period when there was not a pressure of business I have no doubt the patent would have issued, or, which was the same thing, the certification would have been made at once.

Later in the season a distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives addressed a letter to the President and Secretary of the Interior asking that there might be no patents issued, saying that he doubted the law as laid down by the Attorney-General, and he wished further to examine the case. Nothing further was done in the Interior Department during the rest of the Forty-seventh Congress, which adjourned on the following 4th of March. On the 13th of March, 1883, the Secretary of the Interior addressed a letter to the President of the United States, in which he recited the fact that there was not then pending in either branch of Congress any bill to forfeit this grant. He cited the fact that the opposition which had been made to it had been withdrawn. In the Forty-seventh Congress there was pending before the Judiciary Committee of the House a resolution to forfeit this grant.

That resolution was disposed of by the consent of that committee, as appears unanimously, by allowing it to be withdrawn by the mover thereof. Now I ask to have inserted in the RECORD this letter of the Secretary of the Interior to the President, and also the President's approval thereon declaring that this company was entitled to these lands; and now, mind you, there was nobody in this broad land that could be heard against the grant, there had been no steps taken to prevent the issuing of this patent when that letter was sent to the President and the President approved of it.

The letter and approval are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, March 13, 1883.

SIR: The New Orleans Pacific Railway Company applied to this Department more than a year ago for a transfer to itself of the lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company by the twenty-second section of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1871, presenting, at the same time, satisfactory proofs of said transfer as between the two companies. I have delayed action thereon for many months, against the persistent pressure of parties in interest, in the expectation that Congress might legislate upon the subject-matter thereof; but that body having adjourned without action thereon, and knowing of no reason for further delay, I have now the honor to submit the same for your consideration.

In reply to my predecessor's request of January 5, 1882, the Attorney-General, under date of June 12 ultimo, submitted to him an opinion (copy herewith) that the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company was a grant in præsenti; that that company had an assignable interest in the lands granted to it; that the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company is such a successor to or assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company as is contemplated by the act of March 3, 1871; that even if the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas road was constructed subsequently to the date of said act, so much of its road as is now owned by the New Orleans Pacific Company is such a road as is contemplated for acceptance by the President within the meaning of said act, and that patents may issue to the latter company for lands opposite to and conterminous with such constructed portion of road.

I also submit herewith a copy of the report of the Senate Committee on Railroads (under date of June 7, 1882), declaring that, in its judgment, no considerations of public policy require a forfeiture of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company; and also two letters (herewith) under date of December 15 last, from Hon. L. E. Payson, of the House Judiciary Committee, in one of which he notifies this Department that upon that day, at a meeting of the committee, he had formally withdrawn the pending resolution offered by him at the previous session of Congress for a forfeiture of said grant. In the other, after stating his request in October last for a suspension of Department action until he could be heard before the House Judiciary Committee upon the matter, he elaborately discusses the questions involved, and announced that, after conference with them, the Senators and House delegation from Louisiana interpose no opposition to immediate action by this Department, and that his own objections are disposed of and withdrawn, states his conclusions that the New Orleans Pacific Company is entitled to the grant both under the law and the equities of the case, and that the rights of settlers are fully protected.

I have also the honor to submit herewith two reports on the New Orleans Pacific Railway by Mr. Thomas Hassard, whom you appointed commissioner to examine completed portions of said railway.

The first report bears date 26th of October, 1881, and has not been submitted to you at an earlier date on account of the controversies heretofore in question.

The portions of said railway examined and at that time reported on extend from the west bank of the Mississippi River, opposite Thalia street, New Orleans, La., in a northwesterly direction, near said river, sixty miles, to near the town of Donaldsonville, in T. 11 S., R. 15 T.; also from Bayou Lamourie, in T. 2 N., R. 1 E., to a point in T. 4 N., R. 2 W., a distance of twenty miles; also from the junction of said railway with the Texas and Pacific Railway, in Shreveport, La., southwardly to T. 10 N., R. 12 W., a distance of fifty miles.

The second report bears date 15th of November, 1882, and relates to such portions of said railway as were not examined and reported on in October, 1881, amounting to one hundred and ninety-eight miles, lying between New Orleans and Shreveport.

The commissioner reports said portions of road, three hundred and twenty-eight miles in all, as constructed in substantial compliance with law and the instructions of this Department.

In view of the facts and the law of the case, I regard the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company as the lawful assignee of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, and entitled to the lands granted by the twenty-second section of the act of March 3, 1871, to said latter-named company, and to patents therefor in so far as it has earned or hereafter may earn the same under that act, with the exception below named, and recommend that you accept said three hundred and twenty-eight miles of said road, less and exclusive of sixty-eight miles of the line of said New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg road, extending from New Orleans to White Castle, between New Orleans and Shreveport (to which sixty-eight miles the New Orleans Pacific road has withdrawn its claim and right to receive lands under the twenty-second section of said act), and that patents for such lands as may have been earned by the construction be issued to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company (exclusive, nevertheless, of lands along said sixty-eight miles) on their compliance with the law and regulations in such case made and provided.

These patents will, of course, be subject to rights acquired by any person or corporation prior to the act of March 3, 1871.

Requesting that the inclosures herewith be returned to this Department when no longer needed for the purposes hereof,

I am, very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT.

(Indorsements:) Department of the Interior, March 13, 1883. H. M. Teller, Secretary, submits to the President report of commissioner on three hundred and twenty-eight miles of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad, with recommendations.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 16, 1883.

The within recommendations are approved.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR.

Later parties appeared—I need not name whom—before the Interior Department and requested a further delay. A distinguished Senator appeared by a letter, which he gave to the public long before he gave it to the Interior Department, in which he talked of the outrages being perpetrated by corporations upon the people in the stealing of their lands, and he used the same terms that were used here to-day by a Senator who has addressed the Senate when he speaks of this transaction as a fraud. Thereupon the Interior Department held up the patents to this land and waited to see what the Forty-eighth Congress, not yet assembled at that time, might do.

When the Forty-eighth Congress assembled, I have yet to learn that the writer of the letter, a member of the Committee on Public Lands, ever took a step toward forfeiting the grant. I have yet to learn that he ever appeared before this body and intimated that there was a great outrage being perpetrated upon the people, that a great quantity of land was to be certified to a company not owning it. I admit he may have appeared in the newspapers and on the stump, but he did not appear where his voice was potent and where his vote would tell; he was as silent as the grave. But in the House there was a bill introduced that went to the Committee on Public Lands to forfeit this grant. It was a bill for forfeiture, simple and plain. The Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress was composed of twelve men; eleven were members of the House from States and one was a Delegate from one of the Territories.

This committee considered the bill, and although it had been the custom theretofore in that committee to allow the Delegate to vote, that privilege was denied him on this bill, and for the first time the report came to the House six in favor of forfeiting the grant and five against, and the question came before the House in June, 1884, and after a full discussion by the members of the Committee on Public Lands and by others the vote was taken upon that bill, and not, as the Senator says, by a small majority, but by a majority of 42 the House recorded its verdict that this land was not to be forfeited to the Government, but that it belonged to this railroad company. On a subsequent day it was attempted to reconsider this vote, and the House by a decided majority decided not to reconsider; and thus the action of the House became complete.

Pending this bill, and before the vote that I have mentioned, a member of the House from Louisiana presented a memorial to the House asking, inasmuch as this was a question that the Committee on Public Lands were divided upon, that it be submitted to the Judiciary Committee to answer substantially the same questions that were answered by the Attorney-General, and the House so declared and so submitted those questions to the Judiciary Committee. The Judiciary Committee of the House, composed of fifteen lawyers, took up the questions and heard arguments upon the subject, listened to speeches by the friends of the bill and the enemies of the bill, and by a report that I have before me, which is too lengthy to read, made by Mr. TUCKER, its chairman, by a vote of 13 out of 15, declared that the Attorney-General's opinion was good law, and declared that this company was entitled to this land and that it ought not to be forfeited. The two members who dissented from that view did not dissent upon the theory that the company was not entitled to the land, but upon the theory that it was still in the power of the General Government to forfeit the land if it saw fit, the majority of the committee taking the position that the condition having been performed it was gone forever, and that the grantor's right of reentry had disappeared and been lost—a principle that I do not believe any man who is fit to practice before a justice of the peace in any country will deny as a question of law. I could fortify it by opinions and decisions of courts innumerable if I did not think it was a work of supererogation to do that before the American Senate.

This committee then made their report before the vote was taken in the House. The House acted intelligently and voted, and that was the end of the question in the House. There was no further case pending either then or later, and the Department of the Interior would have been justified from that hour and even before in issuing the patent. There was nothing that required it longer to delay the issuing of the patents.

There was, however, pending in the Senate a bill to forfeit this grant. This bill had gone to the Committee on Public Lands and was there pending. It had been there from May, 1884; it was there when the House voted, it was there when the Judiciary Committee reported. It remained in committee until the 24th day of December, 1884, and then this committee reported to the Senate a bill recognizing the right of this company to precisely the same quantity of land that this company has received from the Interior Department in its patent; the same number of acres and the same identical land the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate declared that this company should have.

It is true that they attached to it a condition that the company should settle with the settlers in a certain way. If this company was entitled to this land by virtue of the grant made to the original company and because it had performed the condition attached to the grant, I need not say before this body that it is beyond the power of this body, acting with the other and with the Executive, to attach any conditions to the grant not attached when the grant was made.

The Department of the Interior still waited, waited to see whether even that would be done; and when it was apparent that the Senate was about to adjourn, nothing pending before the other House, when it was apparent that there was to be no legislation, this grant was allowed and the certifications were made which become a final title exactly the same as a patent. And this was in accordance with the law and practice of the Department for the last sixteen years.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now will the Senator allow me another question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Senator if the line of this road was ever definitely fixed either by the old Backbone road or by the New Orleans Pacific road?

Mr. TELLER. I will answer the Senator; but if he were half as familiar with this case as he pretends to be he would not have asked the question. The records of the Interior Department show that this line was fixed originally by the old company, that there was some variation in the line, which the Commissioner of the General Land Office said was not greater than that of other companies, and in 1881, in October, the Department of the Interior fixed the line according to the location of the road, and that can be found in Executive Document 31, sent to the Senate in December, 1884. The Commissioner notified the company that the line of the road would be accepted as the location unless they chose otherwise, and they accepted it and did not appeal to the Secretary of the Interior. Therefore it became final. So that then the line of the road was definitely fixed, and as it was fixed they built it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Land Commissioner——

Mr. TELLER. I do not yield to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, no.

Mr. TELLER. He has had all the opportunities that courtesy requires me to give him. He may ask me any question.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I wish to ask a question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. For a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the question whether the line of this road was definitely fixed at any time? I did not understand the Senator to answer definitely. If he did, I should like to call his attention, so that he may explain, to the fact that in the opinion of the Attorney-General in 1882 he says:

> That company has not constructed any part of its road, either on the route between New Orleans and Baton Rouge or on the route between the latter place and Shreveport; nor, indeed, has there been a definite location of its road anywhere between the points mentioned.

Mr. TELLER. Is that the road you are speaking of?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. Before that time the road had been partially built, and certainly there is nothing that so definitely locates a road as the building of it. Does the Senator suppose that it is necessary that the Interior Department should proceed upon such a childish theory as that when a railroad company has built its line it must then also locate it otherwise? The building of the line is the complete location of any road, and it has been so recognized in all time in the Department.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now, I will ask the Senator another question so that he may understand the reason——

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask him whether under the terms of the granting act pre-emptors and homesteaders had not the legal right to locate upon the land until the line of road was definitely fixed with a view of knowing whether these men had any right to locate as settlers or not?

Mr. TELLER. An attempt was made to definitely locate this line in 1873 by the old company, and the Interior Department declined to accept that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. You do not mean 1873?

Mr. TELLER. I can inform the honorable Senator on many points in this case. I do not need any information from him on any subject connected with this grant. I have studied the subject quite as carefully as he has, and I know a good deal more about its history than he does.

In 1873 the old company attempted to locate the line. That location was not accepted by the Land Office, and they declined to go back and recognize any location beyond the actual building of the road, which the Commissioner of the Land Office says in his report to the Secretary while it was a variation from the original line is as near as has been the custom of building lines, and ordinarily it would have been accepted as the located line of the road as adopted in 1873; but in the interest, I suppose, of settlers on the line of the road, there being some doubt about the true location, the Commissioner gave the benefit of the doubt to the settler, and he says where you have built your road we will recognize the line. Can the Senator complain in behalf of the settlers of that section of the country that when the road was built and constructed and running they had not notice then that it was to be located? It is a technicality that is unworthy of a place in the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now will the Senator answer a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield?

Mr. TELLER. I do.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Inasmuch as this road was not definitely located and the granting act preserves the right of pre-emption and homestead settlement until the line is definitely fixed, I ask the Senator whether those settlers and pre-emptors who located before 1881 have not a title as against this grant?

Mr. TELLER. The settlers who located previous to the location of the road not only have a title, but the Land Department recognizes that title, and the Department did that without any aid from the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Have they recognized the rights of settlers that accrued before that?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly. When the line is definitely located and that location is recognized in the office, then, and then only from that time on are the settlers charged with notice of the line of the road.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then will the Senator explain in that connection why it is that at that time there were papers filed in the office, and the president of the company, Mr. Wheelock, came here and said settlers could be protected by paying the company $2 an acre? If it be true that the line was never definitely located, and if it be true that pre-emptors and homesteaders had a right to locate on the land previous to the definite location of the line of the road, where and how is it that they were expected to pay $2 an acre for this land?

Mr. TELLER. I fail to make the Senator from Nebraska comprehend what is meant by the location of a line. He apparently does not know what it means. I said to him that this company attempted to locate its line in 1873. The company's assignee insisted that that was the location. There was a question between the Department and the company, and the Department finally fixed the location as it was in 1881, in October, as shown by their constructed line of road, and not by their map filed before; and any settler who came in after that time came in with full knowledge. Every settler that came before that time is protected by the law and by the ruling of the Department.

Mr. President, the attempt has been made, as I said, to make it appear that this is a peculiar case; that there is something in this case unheard of before; and there is great anxiety about the settlers. Mr. President, why has not the honorable Senator appeared in behalf of the settlers on other lines of road that have been given lands ten, twelve, and in some instances fifteen years after the expiration of their grants? I hold in my hand now a list of roads to which lands have been certified, built after the time had expired within which they were to be completed. I find that while this company has received less than 700,000 acres, a company in Wisconsin received 1,800,000 acres of land, completing their road many years longer after the expiration of the time fixed in the grant than this company did.

I have here a list of twelve or fourteen railroad companies that have had patents for lands issued to them for roads built long after the time within which they should have completed their roads had expired, and in one case that I have in my mind it was thirteen years, and that was not under the administration of the late Secretary:

List of railroads for which lands have been patented after the time fixed by law for the completion of the road.

Atlantic and Pacific.
California and Oregon.
Hastings and Dakota.
Marquette, Houghton and Ontonagon.
Northern Pacific.
Saint Paul and Pacific (branch line) now Western Railroad of Minnesota.
Saint Paul and Pacific, Saint Vincent Extension.
Selma, Rome and Dalton.
Southern Minnesota Railway Extension.
Southern Pacific, main line.
Wisconsin Central.
New Orleans Pacific.

There has been before the Senate for more than a month a public document showing these facts and showing also that the particular railroad company which I have specially referred to had received a large number of acres of land certified to them when they had completed their road long after the time fixed by Congress.

The honorable Senator talks about the settlers. All along the line of the Northern Pacific the settlers have gone in upon the railroad lands, and the railroad company has completed its line since; it has performed the condition attached to the grant. Does the Senator suppose it is in the power of the Interior Department, does he suppose it is in the power of the Executive or all the Departments of Government acting together to protect those settlers who have gone upon that land after the rights of the company accrued? Has he ever attempted to do it in this body?

Has anybody, voicing his sentiments on this floor, ever attempted to do it? Not a single man. It is for the public that we here day after day talk about the settlers' rights.

Why, Mr. President, if I may be allowed to refer to myself, I have done more for the settlers on the public lands in my rulings than the Senator has in his lifetime of public service, and I was hampered; I could do nothing but what the law gave me authority to do. He has been here and could have provided a method by which the railroad companies might have been compensated and the settlers might have been protected, and he has not done it. But in this case the people who live on the line of this road were more fortunate; the members of Congress from Louisiana were more vigilant than he. They undertook to protect the settlers, and they entered into an arrangement with the railroad company and they made a contract with the railroad company that the settlers on the line of the road should receive their land at $2 per acre, that they might pay a third down and a third at another period and so on, and that they should have twelve months after the patent issued to prove up their claims.

When this question was before the House a member from that State, rising, said: "Nine-tenths of all the settlers who are interested in this are in my district, and I am satisfied with the contract made with the railroad company, and I do not desire the forfeiture, nor do the settlers on the line of the road." If the honorable Senator was as anxious to protect the settlers as he claims, he would have been in favor of the issuing of this patent, that the question might be determined and settled.

He says it is unreasonable that the Interior Department, after waiting for years, should issue these patents. He insists that they have adopted a rule with reference to this road that was never adopted in reference to any other. The same thing has been done in his own bailiwick, in his own State, and he has been silent. What is the secret of the hostility to this company? Is it that Jay Gould is interested? There is nothing in the Interior Department to show that he is interested. Is it that Mr. Barnum, a prominent Democratic politician, is interested in it? Mr. Barnum's or Mr. Gould's rights are the same in the Interior Department whether they be Democrats or Republicans, or whether they be railroad speculators or anything else. The law fixes their rights, and it would be a very remarkable thing if the executive department of the Government should mete out its justice according to the character of the men to whom it is meted. What difference does it make whether Gould is interested in this or whether Huntington is interested? Is it worthy of the Senate, is it worthy of the Senator to stand here and appeal to the base passions of the people and excite their prejudices, because some men unpopular with the masses may have a right that has been adjudicated upon by the Department?

Now, Mr. President, I want to summarize this a little, and I want to show that there never has been a patent issued after the time has expired that has undergone the same attention and care and the same opportunity been given Congress to forfeit the grant if it saw fit. I find that the lands were withdrawn in 1873; I call attention to that. The validity of this assignment was determined by the Land Department of the Government in 1881 by Commissioner Williamson and by Secretary Kirkwood; by the President in appointing the commission; by the Attorney-General in his report, submitted at the request of Secretary Kirkwood; by the House Judiciary Committee of the Forty-seventh Congress; by the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-eighth Congress by a vote of 13 to 2, and the two not claiming that it ought to be forfeited; by the House of Representatives by its action on the 26th of June, 1884, by 42 majority; by its subsequent action when it declined to reconsider the vote which defeated the bill; by the Senate Committee on Railroads, and by the Senate itself in June, 1882, and by the refusal of the Senate committee to report favorably a bill to forfeit this grant. Since the 27th day of June, 1884, there has been no bill pending in the other House for the forfeiture of this grant; since the 24th day of December, 1884, there has been no bill pending in this body.

I want to say here and now that the Executive Department of the Government may, as a matter of courtesy to a co-ordinate branch of the Government, suspend the operation of a law temporarily, but the doctrine that a Department shall suspend action because there is legislation pending is abhorrent to every idea of justice and right. Temporarily it may, under some circumstances, but for any length of time it ought not. Here is the Interior Department met with the precedents I have mentioned. Running through a period of years covering at least four administrations four heads of the Interior Department have recognized the same principle recognized by the recent administration in the issue of this patent. I do not refer to what the honorable Senator said about the Cabinet; I do not ask anybody to defend me on this subject; I do not fall back under the shadow of the Cabinet or of the President; I say that by the law, by the rules of right, by the rules of justice, this railroad company was entitled to the grant, and was entitled to it two years before it received it.

For more than two years it had been denied justice in the Interior Department for fear it might be said that the executive department of the Government was not courteous and respectful to the legislative. I want to say here that I have just as much anxiety as any one for the dignity of this body, for the preservation of the rights that belong to the legislative department of the Government; but I hold that we should have the same determination to preserve the rights of the executive department. The head of a Department has no seat upon this floor. He is compelled to submit to whatever may be said in this body without any opportunity to reply. On unfair criticisms upon his conduct he must maintain silence. Falsehoods uttered in this body or the other in reference to his course it is unbecoming for him to question. If he should go into the public prints to deny the charges that are made it would be said he forgot his relations to the legislative branch of the Government. He must suffer in silence infamous, atrocious slanders, uttered in the shape of resolutions or uttered by Senators or Members without a reply.

Common decency requires—and I can speak freely as the executive department is now in the hands of our opponents—that every resolution which passes here that touches upon the interests of the Executive Departments, upon their acts, should go to a committee. I do not believe that this Senate is aware of the insults that have been offered from time to time to the executive branch by the way of resolutions. I know that you have become accustomed here to allowing resolutions of inquiry to pass without examination. Let me call your attention to the action of this body in 1882; and as it appertained to the Department over which I had the honor to preside, I will freely criticise it now upon this floor as I was not at liberty to criticise it then as a member of a co-ordinate branch of the Government.

An old man who had served his country in two wars, who was covered all over with honor and with glory, had received from this body and the other, acting jointly, a pension of $72 a month. The general law had said that a man of like infirmities with him should receive, no matter what his service had been, $50 more. One hundred and twenty-two dollars was allowed to a man who had served us in Mexico with gallantry and covered himself with glory, a man who never dressed or undressed without an attendant, a man who never lay down at night or rose up in the morning without the assistance of his wife or a paid attendant; $122 a month was being paid to him. The question arose, was he entitled to it? It would not have arisen if I had been Secretary of the Interior. It would not have been questioned if I had had the opportunity then to have said what I had an opportunity to say subsequently.

The Attorney-General's opinion was invoked, and he said this old man, this distinguished general, this unfortunate public servant, is entitled to $122 a month, and it shall be so paid to him. By that time there had been a change in the Interior Department, and it was my duty to enforce the opinion of the Attorney-General. I accepted it as the law of the case; I accepted it with alacrity; I accepted it with pleasure. I said "$122 a month is a bagatelle; it is a disgrace to the nation that it is not more," and I ordered it paid. It was paid, but in the mean time the distinguished Senator who has addressed the Senate today had introduced a resolution requiring that the Secretary should not pay more than one of these pensions, and that resolution had gone to the Committee on Pensions.

Oh, Mr. President, there was an opportunity for somebody to pose as the watch-dog of the Treasury; here was money being voted out and being paid out beyond the law—$122 a month. He introduced a resolution and sent it to the Committee on Pensions that no double pension should be paid; that is, that I should withhold one of these payments. I did not withhold the payment. With my eyes open, with proper respect for this body, I denied the right of the Senator to instruct me, and if the Senate had said by its vote that I should not pay it, I am free to say here, as I said in other places, I should have disregarded that and I should have paid it, because it was his according to law. It has been said that parliament can not take property from one man and give it to another. Omnipotent as it is, it can not do that. The Senate can not take from one man that which the law has given him, and his right is vested; neither can the two branches of Congress acting together, with the assistance of the Executive, do that. The pension had accrued and I paid it.

I have no doubt there are Senators on this floor who will be surprised when I finish my recital. At a subsequent day the Senate passed a resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Interior to report to this body why he had seen fit to pay a pension when there was a resolution before this body requiring him not to pay; and the Senate is committed to the doctrine, if they can be committed by the passage of a resolution, that whenever an executive officer is proceeding to execute a statute and anybody sees fit to introduce a bill or resolution into this body to suspend it the executive must stand still until it shall be ascertained what is the pleasure of the legislative department of the Government. Was there ever such a thing heard of in the history of the American Senate? I deny it. I say that a search of all the annals of its history will not show such an absurd declaration. I do not believe that this Senate understood the resolution. I do not believe it ought to be quoted as a precedent of this body; but I say it comes from this new system of allowing a single Senator to introduce a resolution without reference to a committee and then send it out to the world.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. Allow me to finish, and then I do not care what the Senator may say. It is utterly and entirely indefensible. It can not be defended anywhere, and the Senate must stand convicted of inattention to its great duty when it allows to go upon the record a declaration that one branch of Congress can notify an executive officer to suspend the law. There is a law on the statute-book that requires the Secretary of the Interior to pay out fifty-odd million dollars a year to the pensioners, and there is a law that requires the Secretary of the Treasury to pay many millions of interest on the public bonds. Is it to be presumed for a moment that the power exists in this body or in the other House to direct that a suspension of one or the other of those laws shall be had in the executive department until such time as this legislative body, great as it is, shall determine whether the law authorizing the payment of the interest on the public debt or authorizing the payment of pensions is an honest and proper law or not?

I was about to say further that these resolutions are time and again introduced here not for information. They have been introduced and the Interior Department and other Departments of the Government have been called to respond to resolutions that were not for public information. They were introduced into this body for the express purpose of making an attack in a cowardly way, of sneaking behind a resolution. Mr. President, if I proceed in that way perhaps I shall be out of order. I will say, however, that when these resolutions are introduced they are seized upon by the enemies of every member of the administration and of the administration itself, and the newspapers are in the habit of making a good deal of them. Interested parties make more of them.

I am going to refer to a matter; I think it is a question of privilege that I may. On the 4th day of February, 1885, a resolution was introduced into this body calling for information with reference to certain transactions in the Territory of New Mexico specifically. An examination of that resolution will show that if it had been given its broad terms it would have required the Interior Department to have reported every scrap of information that it had upon the question of fraudulent land entries all over the United States; a thing that could not have been done in six months unless we paralyzed the entire Department. I looked over that resolution and determined that it could not have been the intention of the mover to go beyond New Mexico, and therefore I restricted it to New Mexico. Subsequently the Senate modified the resolution and declared that it went further than was intended, and required only a specific report to be made. That report was made to this body. A distinguished Senator now present, but not now a member of this body, rose in his place in the expiring hours of the session, when the report came to this body and when a motion was made to print, and stated to the Senate and to the world that the report had been reluctantly brought to the Senate.

He stated more, Mr. President. He stated, or attempted to state, the contents of the papers that had come in. He stated that the papers would implicate a certain land officer and other high officials in the Government other than the land officer named therein. What was the inference which he desired to have drawn? What was the inference drawn outside of this body? When the report went to the committee that same Senator objected to the printing of anything but the bare report of the special agent. I have not seen it since it was printed. I have no desire to see it, but I will leave my seat in the Senate if there is a word in it which implicates any officer of the Government save and except the register of the land office and an Indian agent. Was it the intention, was it the purpose to say that some Indian agent would be implicated? Not at all. The attack was either upon the Commissioner or upon the Secretary. It is easy to determine from a knowledge of the circumstances for whom it was intended.

I ask to have read from the desk, as a matter personal to myself, a letter from the Commissioner, given to me since I have ceased to be a member of the executive branch of the Government, and given to me unsolicited.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 7, 1885.

SIR: Some days ago, and while you were Secretary of the Interior, it was stated on the floor of the United States Senate that there had been some intentional and unnecessary delay in this office or the Department of the Interior in furnishing the copies of papers called for by that body in the matter of alleged fraudulent land claims in New Mexico. As this statement unjustly reflects upon this office and your own action as Secretary, I submit a brief statement of the facts relative thereto, and hope that you will take such steps as may be necessary in the premises.

On the 4th ultimo a resolution passed the Senate calling on the Secretary of the Interior for copies of the reports of Inspectors Hobbs and Greene on the subject of fraudulent land titles in New Mexico, with all the accompanying papers, "and also copies of all papers on file in the Interior Department relating to this subject."

The resolution was received at the Department February 5, at 4 o'clock p. m., and was by you, as Secretary, referred to this office on the 6th with indorsement calling attention to the scope of the same, and directing that copies of all papers called for be furnished. The paper was received at this office at 3.20 o'clock p. m. on the 7th. Meantime, after the passage of the resolution, and before its formal reference, you conferred with me and the assistant commissioner and directed the detail of four copyists from the Pension Office to assist in the work. The documents and records were at once put in hand, and all the copyists of our force available for the work were assigned to it with those detailed as stated. A portion of the time twenty copyists were employed on the work, and during its progress an average of about fifteen. The work was pushed as rapidly as possible.

On the 20th ultimo a resolution passed the Senate rescinding so much of the previous resolution as called for "copies of all papers on file in the Interior Department relating to this subject." The 21st was a holiday; the 22d was Sunday; the 23d was a holiday. The modified resolution was received at the Department on the 24th, and by you, as Secretary, referred to this office the same day. The copies necessary to meet the modified resolution were then completed; but as a very large mass of other copies had also been made, in accordance with the original resolution, it was deemed advisable to forward them; and on the 27th ultimo, as soon as they could be scheduled, they were sent to you for transmission to the Senate.

I have deemed it my duty, in justice to this office, to thus state the facts in the case, and am convinced that their mere recital is sufficient to demonstrate that there was no delay in the matter which could have been avoided.

Very respectfully,

N. C. McFARLAND,
Commissioner.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
United States Senate.

Mr. TELLER. For the first time in the history of my administration of that Department I had detailed from another bureau laborers for the Land Bureau. In my anxiety that the papers should come promptly to the Senate I made the detail of which the Commissioner speaks. Had the Senator who introduced the resolution called specifically for nothing more than what he subsequently claimed he wanted it might have been handed to him in a day. There never was an hour while I was Secretary of the Interior when any Senator could not walk into my office, or into the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or of any other bureau officer of that Department, and find upon inquiry personally or by letter everything that he might want to know with reference to the transactions of that Department.

It is easier, I suppose, sometimes to introduce a resolution than to make an inquiry. The inquiry, unless made in an offensive way, does not answer the purpose for which it is designed. I do not say that of all inquiries. There was a resolution offered in this body one day with reference to pensions. I exonerate the Senator who offered it from any attempt to cast a reflection upon the Interior Department. I know he did not intend it, nor did he design to embarrass it, and yet if the resolution had been passed by the Senate, and had been complied with by the Secretary of the Interior, it would have practically closed the Pension Office for four or five months.

I hold in my hand a document which was called for by a resolution of the House [exhibiting] concerning pension attorneys practicing before the Interior Department. How many people do you suppose ever read that document? How many have ever opened its covers? Every particle of information of value to the House or to the Senate relating to that subject could have been ascertained by an hour's work in one of the Departments, or if the inquirer did not desire to spend even that time he could have asked by letter for a statement, and he would have received it with little labor and little expense to the Government. The labor alone for this work under the resolution of the House cost the Government more than $2,000; the printing cost more than that.

I have suggested the reference as to the character and necessity of resolutions to a committee. I do not intend to make that motion here. I do not intend to interfere with any investigation which may be made into the Interior Department. I am prepared to open the doors, to open the books, so far as I am concerned. I do not fear any investigation. I do not think it is becoming a Cabinet officer on retiring to come into this body or anywhere else and say "somebody has made a charge against my Department, and therefore you should appoint a committee." I will leave my work in the Interior Department to answer for itself, and I assure you that I shall be on this floor at all times ready to answer to any proper interrogatory which may be propounded to me, whether it be instigated by a laudable desire to arrive at the facts or whether it be for the purpose of casting reflections upon that great Department of the Government, either as to myself or any person who served under me.

I wish to say now that after the experience of three years in one of the Executive Departments of the Government I shall be prompt myself to resent, whether the men are of my political faith or not, imputations by resolution on the executive department of the Government. If they do not do what they ought to do, let them be properly investigated by the body which has power to do it. Let me ask what authority has this body to investigate the action of an executive officer of the Government? Is it committed to this body to investigate his judicial acts? When the Secretary of the Interior, for example, has passed upon a question which requires the exercise of judicial power, can this body inquire whether he has rightfully or wrongfully exercised that power? Can this body resolve itself into a tribunal to determine rights between claimants and the Government, or between claimants and claimants? I deny it. It is a usurpation of the rights of the executive department of the Government. It ought not to be done, and it never will be done if there can be deliberation and attention and knowledge on the part of the Senate.

There were some other suggestions which occurred to me, but in consideration of the long time I have been speaking I shall defer the remarks I intended to make upon another point connected with this resolution, or connected with the question of resolutions, until some other day.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. FRYE. Will not the Senator from Nebraska yield and allow this matter to be postponed until to-morrow?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me first make a statement in regard to the matter of double pension, which should be made in this connection to-day, and then if the Senator desires I shall have no objection to a postponement.

I regret very much that the Senator from Colorado should feel that either this resolution or resolutions which may have been adopted by the Senate heretofore asking for information as to facts or reasons or motives for action should be regarded as in the nature of any personal discourtesy to his administration of the Interior Department. I will take as an illustration the matter to which the Senator referred, about which he evidently entertains some feeling, which I regret. He must have enjoyed that feeling. That resolution was offered two years ago at least, and I regret that the resolution should have made any discomfort then in his mind and that it should have continued to this day. Now, it becomes necessary at this time to make that explanation.

A resolution was offered in this body when it was apparent, no matter how high the rank, no matter how distinguished the service, that in violation of what was supposed to be a law of Congress a person was about to receive a double pension. That was in violation of the law as we supposed, and when that matter came to the attention of this body a resolution was offered and referred to the Committee on Pensions, and the Committee on Pensions authorized and directed that the resolution should be reported to the Senate and a request made for its action; and it was so reported and adopted. I will say to the Senator that that comes within the terms of his condition. It was a resolution offered here, referred to the committee, reported by the committee to this body, and acted upon by the body. It seems there was a race run then between the Interior Department and the Senate of the United States as to which should succeed, they to pay a double pension in violation of law, or that the Senate should succeed in having the executive department obey the law.

No man can yield more to the great courage of that distinguished general than myself and the Committee on Pensions of the Senate. The Pension Office had rated the pension due to General Burnett, I think, at $30 per month. General Burnett had asked the Department to raise it to the highest standard, that is, $72 per month, and that was the pension paid for total disability, but the Pension Office refused to rate General Burnett as totally disabled and to grant him a pension of $72 a month. He was receiving $30 a month.

General Burnett came to Congress and asked for an increase of pension, and that increase was granted; and when it was granted it said "he shall receive $50 per month in lieu of any other pension he is now receiving." That was plain. That was the law. The Congress of the United States declared that they had placed General Burnett on the special roll at $50 a month, and that that was in lieu of the pension he was then receiving, and he should receive but one pension.

Application had been made in the Pension Department to give General Burnett a pension for total disability, which had failed. What then? By some sort of machinery the matter was referred to the Attorney-General. What for? It was referred to the Attorney-General, and what did the Attorney-General do? He discarded all the facts proved by his own Pension Department, and he, the Attorney-General, who had no authority in law, no power, declared that General Burnett was totally disabled, and should receive $72 per month, and that at a time when the same General Burnett was a clerk receiving pay in the Surgeon-General's Office, the building adjoining the office of the Attorney-General.

Look at it for a moment! General Burnett was a clerk in the Surgeon-General's Office, on the pay-roll; the Pension Department had declared that he was not totally disabled, but the subterfuge of an opinion of the Attorney-General was sought, and the Attorney-General, without any authority, in violation of law, declared that General Burnett was totally disabled, and ordered him to be put on the pension-roll at $72 a month. What then? Now you see the shrewdness of the Attorney-General. Would anybody have supposed, according to the facts as I have stated them, that General Burnett could possibly lead any decent executive department of a decently administered government into giving him two pensions? Would you believe it?

Mark the cunning of the Attorney-General. We put General Burnett on the special pension-list at $50 a month in lieu of the pension he was then receiving. The pension he had been receiving was $30 a month. The Attorney-General says: "I have ordered it to be raised to $72 a month; therefore the law which created a special pension does not apply; the law which Congress passed to reach his case when he had only a pension of $30 a month I have trampled upon; and I, the Attorney-General, without any sort of authority except a little message from the Secretary of the Interior asking it, place him on the pension-roll as totally disabled at $72 a month; and because I have done that I can circumvent the law; so can the Department of the Interior, and we will give this man a double pension on that miserable pretense."

Yet the Senate is to be arraigned forsooth. What then? The Senate were trying to stop it, because it was in violation of law to give this man a double pension, and this race was run with the office of the Attorney-General and the office of the Interior Department to trample on the law and give the man a double pension with back pay accruing to the amount of several thousand dollars. The race still continued. Of course the object sought had been accomplished; a facile Attorney-General had done all that was necessary; but Congress did not stop. Two or three times, first on an appropriation bill in both Houses, then in a special law, the Congress of the United States rebuked the Attorney-General and the Interior Department in that transaction by two or three times repeating over the same provision, that this thing should never happen again.

That is the history of General Burnett's pension, and I shall now give way. It might be in order for me to make some further suggestions, but the Senator from Maine said he would prefer to have this matter postponed until to-morrow. To that I assent.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say just one word. The Senator has not answered the complaint I made. I only mentioned the fact that the resolution had reference to the pension of General Burnett by way of illustration to show the magnitude of the subject which would call upon the Senate to make such a ruling. I do not care to go into the merits of the case except to say, as I did, that in my judgment the Attorney-General's opinion was correct, and as the law stood General Burnett was entitled to two pensions, one under the general act and one by specific act.

If the honorable Senator from Nebraska can take any glory to himself that he succeeded in taking from that old veteran his $50 a month and that he sent him down to his grave in want, he is welcome to it. I want no such credit myself. I do not want the reputation of protecting the public Treasury at the expense of that class of people. This old man, who went down to his grave and who was regarded as of sufficient importance even when dead to lie in state in the great city of New York in the city hall, is buried in an unpaid-for grave, and to-day his estate has not money wherewith to pay the expenses of his funeral. The honorable Senator may take all the glory he chooses from that; I want none of it for myself, Mr. President.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is not a question of glory just now, but of facts. I only desired to have all the facts appear just as they were, and the facts are just as I have stated.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

TUESDAY, March 10, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

STEAMER J. DON CAMERON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, March 9, 1885.

To the President of the Senate:

SIR: Referring to the act (Private No. 105, copy herewith) "for the relief of the sufferers by loss of the Government steamer J. Don Cameron," approved February 25, 1885, I have the honor to request, to facilitate the settlements therein provided for, that all papers pertaining to the matter on the files of the Senate may be forwarded to this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the papers on the files of the Senate be forwarded to the War Department in compliance with the request.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a petition of the Legislative Assembly of Arizona Territory, transmitted by the governor of that Territory, praying for the appointment of a fourth United States judge and an increase of compensation to judges in that Territory. What action will the Senate take upon the petition?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary when appointed.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], in relation to the right to a seat of the gentleman appointed by the governor of the State of New Hampshire. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Henry W. Blair, appointed a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, be now admitted to take the oath of office.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, yesterday I asked that the resolution should go over until to-day in order that it might be examined by the new Senators just sworn into this body, and in order that those of us who were members at the time the Bell case was under discussion and was determined should have an opportunity to refresh our recollection in regard to the points then made and discussed. It is not my purpose to enter into a lengthy résumé of that argument then so exhaustively made. I simply wish to say now that I reaffirm what was my conclusion then as a lawyer in regard to this subject.

I voted on the Bell case that Mr. Bell was not entitled to a seat in this body; that the governor of a State had no right to fill an entire term by original appointment; that the meaning of the Constitution, which declares "if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the Legislature of any State" the executive authority of a State may make a temporary appointment, is that when a vacancy shall occur, not by operation of law, but by some event which applies to the individual asking for the office or applying for admission into this body, by the resignation of a person, by death operating upon him, and that the word "otherwise" in that connection means by similar casualty—when a vacancy shall happen, when it shall occur, not by operation of statute or of any constitution, but when it occurs by resignation, death, or otherwise.

The terms of the Constitution as originally made—and I shall be very brief in the discussion of the subject, for I only propose to give my own reasons for casting my vote—the terms of the Constitution are:

If vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancy.

There are three clauses in the Federal Constitution in which the word "happen" is used. First, in Article II, section 2, the Constitution says:

The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen during the recess of the Senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.

Article I, section 2, provides:

When vacancies happen in the representation from any State, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies.

Article I, section 3, which is the clause now under discussion, provides:

And if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

In all three of these clauses the word "happen" is used, but I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that in the first two clauses in regard to vacancies in the House of Representatives and vacancies during a recess of the Senate as to executive officers, the word "happen" is without limitation, "where vacancies shall happen," and there is the termination of the power of the President in regard to executive appointments; but in regard to Senators the Federal Convention put a limitation upon the word "happen." They did not stop with declaring where vacancies may happen during a recess of a Legislature that then the governor may appoint, but where a vacancy shall happen by resignation or otherwise.

If the Senators now present are correct who claim the power of a governor to exist to appoint in these cases, we are forced to the conclusion that the words "by resignation or otherwise" are void and meaningless as used by the framers of the Constitution, or else that the terms are a limitation upon the word "happen." They are not found in the other two clauses of the Constitution. What makes this argument more significant and conclusive to my mind is that the original draught of the Constitution, which I have before me, and the debates show that the clause as originally reported to the convention of 1787 was absolute and unlimited, when a vacancy should occur, and Mr. Madison moved to put in these terms of limitation, that where the vacancy should occur by resignation or otherwise, or equivalent terms, then the governor of the State might appoint.

I know it has been said that contemporaneous construction at the time militates against this view. In the debate which occurred in the Bell case an editorial was read from the National Intelligencer of March 8, 1825, and it was said that this had been adopted by Judge Story and by Mr. Gordon, who was compiling a book in regard to the proceedings of Congress at that time. The most authoritative statement in regard to the meaning of Congress and the debates of Congress at that time is found in Niles's Register, the authority of which I take it will not be questioned on this floor. In Niles's Register I find the following:

Says the Register of March 12, 1825—

The following members, also re-elected for six years from this day, took the oath of office, namely: Mr. Lloyd, of Maryland; Mr. Macon, of North Carolina; Mr. Gaillard, of South Carolina; Mr. J. S. Johnston, of Louisiana; and Mr. Barton, of Missouri.

Some conversation took place on the case of Mr. Lanman, reappointed by the governor in the recess of the Legislature, the question being, whether a failure by the Legislature to make a choice of a Senator constitutes the contingency in which a governor may appoint a Senator, the language of the Constitution being, "if vacancies happen, by resignation or otherwise," &c.

It is said, and conspicuously by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], that the quotation in the National Intelligencer and in the book by Gordon showed that the Lanman case decided in 1825 did not touch this question, did not determine it, and that the Lanman case, a case from Connecticut, went off on the power of the governor to make an appointment before the vacancy existed. Niles's Register asserts emphatically that the very point now at issue before the Senate was decided in 1825. I know that other cases were decided antecedent to the Lanman case, but they were decided, I affirm, without discussion, without debate.

In 1825 this precise case was brought before the Senate of the United States, and it was decided then that the governor could not appoint as to a full term. In 1825 for the first time this question was elaborately and exhaustively debated by the ablest lawyers then in the United States, and it was decided that the governor did not have the right to make such an appointment; and I say to-day, as was said in the Bell discussion, that from 1825 to the decision of the Bell case in 1879 not one solitary utterance was ever heard upon this floor or elsewhere which questioned the accuracy of the position I take here now.

I know it is said that the Sevier case from Arkansas, decided in 1837, antagonizes this view; but the report of Mr. Felix Grundy on the Sevier case asserted that that decision was not in antagonism to the Lanman decision, but that it was made upon the express ground that Sevier had drawn his seat by lot, and that therefore the term "happen" applied to that case; but Mr. Grundy expressly says, and I have his report before me as chairman of the Judiciary Committee, that the Lanman case was the precedent; that it decided the correct doctrine, and it was held so invariably until the decision of the Senate in 1879.

Mr. Wadleigh, from New Hampshire, in discussing this very question, admitted that the Lanman case was decisive of the whole matter. Says Mr. Wadleigh:

The Senator from Ohio—

Referring to Mr. Thurman—

The Senator from Ohio would have us believe that there is some doubt as to whether this Legislature or the next is entitled to elect. That is a matter which greatly concerns the people of New Hampshire. It is desirable that that question should be settled at once, so that they may not put themselves in a position from which they can not be extricated without great embarrassment. Accordingly a bill was presented to this body by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which reported unanimously that this Legislature can not elect the Senator; that the next Legislature must elect. That shows to us clearly that unless this bill passes there must be a vacancy in this Senate from the State of New Hampshire for three months in the next Congress.

In other words, that the governor could not fill the vacancy; and there is upon the other side of this Chamber a succession of weighty authority in the same direction. Mr. Thurman asked:

Is there any probability of Congress being in session during those three months?

Mr. WADLEIGH. I do not know about that.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire why the governor of New Hampshire can not appoint for the vacancy until the Legislature meets in June?

Mr. BLAINE. He can not do that if the previous term has fully expired.

Which is the very case here.

Mr. WHYTE. Suppose this Legislature has power to elect and does not elect, is not that a vacancy?

Mr. BLAINE. Then the power of the governor does not come in.

Mr. WHYTE. It does, apparently.

Mr. BLAINE. Not at all.

Mr. DAWES. Every precedent of the Senate is against that.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Maryland is too good a lawyer to make that assertion.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Having examined the precedents, I am inclined to think the governor can not appoint.

Mr. BLAINE. Of course the governor can not appoint. Nothing is better settled than that. The honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] will give his assent to that, if the term has fully expired.

Never until the Bell decision by the Senate was any voice ever raised from 1825 to 1879 which gave to the governor of a State the right to fill a full term.

I remember very well in the Bell discussion when Senator Conkling, of New York, put a question to Senator Hill, of Georgia, in regard to the power of the governor to fill the term. Senator Conkling said: "If that power exists, the governor, by collusion with a majority of the Legislature, could from time to time put off an election and fill the vacancy out of his own creatures and to suit himself." Senator Hill replied to him that that was the identical argument which he proposed to make, and that that was the meaning of the constitutional provision, which did not give this power to the executive of a State.

But if I had any doubt about the meaning of the Lanman decision, I find it in Mr. Benton's Thirty Years' View, and he was the most accurate man who ever wrote in this country in regard to the proceedings of this body or the other. Mr. Benton says:

Mr. Lanman had served a regular term as Senator from Connecticut. His term of service expired on the 3d of March of this year, and the General Assembly of the State having failed to make an election of Senator in his place, he received a temporary appointment from the governor. On presenting himself to take the oath of office, on the 4th day of March, being the first day of the special Senatorial session convoked by the retiring President (Mr. Monroe) according to usage for the inauguration of his successor, his appointment was objected to as not having been made in a case in which a governor of a State could fill a vacancy by making a temporary appointment. Mr. Tazewell was the principal speaker against the validity of the appointment, arguing against it both on the words of the Constitution and the reason for the provision. The words of the Constitution are: "If vacancies happen (in the Senate) by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments, until the next meeting of the Legislature." "Happen" was held by Mr. Tazewell to be the governing word in this provision, and it always implied a contingency, and an unexpected one. It could not apply to a foreseen event, bound to occur at a fixed period. Here the vacancy was foreseen; there was no contingency in it. It was regular and certain. It was the right of the Legislature to fill it, and if they failed, no matter from what cause, there was no right in the governor to supply their omission. The Senators voting in favor of the motion were, &c.

Showing from the highest authority that in the Lanman case the identical point at issue here to-day was raised and decided and remained an unbroken precedent from 1825 to 1879.

But, Mr. President, more than that, and I am speaking as rapidly as possible, for this question has been fully exhausted, and I think the decision in the Bell case will be affirmed here again to-day; and I merely make this statement, as I said before, in order to affirm my own established opinion upon this question and the reasons which I have for it. It has been always held here, it has never been for one instant contradicted, that if the Legislature of a State had been in session which could have filled the vacancy, and had the power to fill the vacancy, and refused to do it under the Constitution, then the governor could not possibly have the power to appoint. Now, the Legislature of New Hampshire has been in session; the Legislature of New Hampshire has had the power to fill this vacancy. The Legislature of New Hampshire applied to the supreme court of that State, under the constitution of New Hampshire, to ascertain whether the power existed in the Legislative Assembly. The supreme court declared to them that the power did exist. They deliberately refused to exercise it; they adjourned; and now it is claimed, in view of these facts, that the chief executive of that State has the right, as I hold in direct contravention of the terms and spirit of the Constitution, to fill a full term, and that that power exists not ex vi termini upon those terms, but according to the meaning of the Constitution itself.

This is all I desire to say, sir. I shall vote against this gentleman's admission, believing the precedent in the Lanman case to be the correct one; and I shall do so the more cheerfully, because I am not ashamed to be found as a lawyer in company with the memory of Carpenter, of Wisconsin, with the opinion of Judge Davis, of Illinois, who voted with me, and with the present Attorney-General of the United States, who made a learned and exhaustive argument upon the same side. I am not ashamed to assert the same opinion in that company and to give feebly the reasons which were then uttered.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not think it will be profitable to enter upon the very wide field of discussion which the question involved in this case opens. I think the Senate will prefer to rest its decision to day upon the authority of one of the most authoritative precedents which have occurred in its history.

If a legislative body exercising quasi-judicial functions like that which is exercised when the Senate determines the right of a claimant to a seat here can ever be bound by a precedent, the Senate has bound itself by the precedent established in the case of Mr. Bell. It was established on full discussion by great lawyers and great Senators. It was established by a decisive majority in which the division was totally nonpartisan. The great debaters and lawyers to whom my honorable friend from Missouri alluded who differed with the majority of the Senate on that occasion put forth some of their ablest and best intellectual efforts, rendering it certain that the decision to which the Senate then arrived was a decision moved in view of every reason which could be suggested bearing upon the question.

The people of the State of New Hampshire have governed themselves and must govern themselves and had a right to govern themselves by the decision which the Senate then made, and nobody can hope that if by a slight majority that decision should be reversed to-day it would stand reversed. Therefore the people of the State of New Hampshire and of all other States where like questions may arise would find themselves in the condition of being compelled to act one way one year and another another, as the changing majority or opinion of the Senate may decide this case and that as it should come up year after year.

When the question which now arises came up six years ago there were found voting in favor of the right, and of course of the duty and obligation, of the governor of a State to appoint a Senator in a case like this gentlemen on both sides of the Chamber. There was the distinguished gentleman who now sits at the left of my friend from Missouri, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], in that vote, relying, as I have no doubt he did, on the decision of one of the very ablest judges then pronouncing the opinion of the supreme court of his own State on the intrepretation of precisely or substantially similar language. There was found Mr. Bayard, the present Secretary of State; Mr. Gordon, of Georgia; Mr. Groome, of Maryland; Mr. JONES, of Florida, now occupying a seat in the Senate; Mr. McDonald, then representing also the State of Indiana; Mr. Randolph, of New Jersey; Mr. Walker, of Arkansas, and Mr. W. Pinkney Whyte, of Maryland, who inherited both the name and blood and largely the capacity of one of the greatest constitutional lawyers who ever occupied a seat in this body.

Now, I think it is enough to rest this case upon the consideration that if the Senate can adjudge anything it has adjudged this; but perhaps it may not be improper to take a very few minutes, not in a discussion in detail, but in a mere statement of the history of this constitutional question.

The Constitution of the United States contains this provision, which I submit is the controlling and governing provision, that the several States of the Union shall have an equal and constant power in the Senate of the United States by the representation with which two Senators are clothed. That is what the Constitution means to effect. There is not a full Senate, there is not a State represented and having its equal right and authority in the Senate when any single seat is vacant. To that end the Constitution provides as a mechanism for carrying out and accomplishing the purpose that these seats shall always be full, and that every State in this body shall be the equal of every other State. The provision is that the Legislatures shall choose their Senators—

And if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

This language verbatim is repeated in the Constitution in another place, where it is provided that if vacancies happen in any executive office during a recess of the Senate the President shall have the power to make an appointment until the next session. Under that provision time out of mind, originally on the authority of William Wirt and I believe John Marshall, the President of the United States has been held without dispute to have the right to appoint to an office the legal or constitutional term of whose incumbency ends when Congress is not in session.

Here, therefore, are two sentences in the Constitution, one intended to preserve the continuance of executive power by the discharge of the duties of the subordinate executive officer, and the other intended to preserve the continuance of legislative power by keeping the Senate full, in regard to which the Senator from Missouri is compelled to claim that there is a totally different meaning. If the executive office is vacant, the small, the subordinate, which does not affect the functions of the Government or the equality of the States, or the completeness of one of the two great legislative bodies of the country, it means that if there happen, or if it so be that there is no officer in existence authorized to exercise those functions, then the President may appoint. And yet the Senator claims that the same language means a totally different thing in the case of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to ask him——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Does the Senator mean to assert that the language of the Constitution in the two cases is the same?

Mr. HOAR. The same, as you will see if you will read the two clauses.

Mr. VEST. I shall be obliged to my friend from Massachusetts if he will show me in regard to the filling of vacancies in office during a recess of Congress by the President the words "by resignation or otherwise," or if he will show me anywhere else in the Constitution, in the three clauses where the word "happen" is used, the words "by resignation or otherwise." If the Senator will answer that, I may change my opinion on this question. If the framers of the Constitution meant anything by the words "by resignation or otherwise," what did they mean? Why did they put those words in with regard to Senators and nowhere else as to vacancies?

Mr. HOAR. Then the Senator, I understand, puts his argument—I do not at this moment turn to the provision of the Constitution—upon the proposition that the words "if vacancies happen" mean one thing——

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me I will read him the clause.

Mr. HOAR. I have it here now.

The President shall have power to fill up all vacancies that may happen.

Do these "vacancies" happen in any other way but "by resignation or otherwise" in any case? Will the Senator be kind enough to inform the Senate, if he can, whether the words "vacancies that may happen," occurring in both places, he claims that there is any method in which a vacancy can happen except by resignation or otherwise?

Mr. VEST. I think so.

Mr. HOAR. That is the Senator's proposition.

Mr. VEST. That is my argument. The words "or otherwise" do not mean "in any other manner."

Mr. HOAR. Then what does it mean? It means in the same manner, I suppose!

Mr. VEST. Not the same. My meaning has been explained.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to understand what meaning the Senator gives to the words "or otherwise."

Mr. VEST. I mean this: When the framers of the Constitution said the President might appoint when a vacancy should happen, that as a matter of course applied to any possible contingency, whether it happened by operation of law, or whether it happened by casualty or accident. In other words, whether the term expired by force of the Constitution or the statutes or whether the vacancy occurred by reason of the parties dying or resigning. Now, the meaning the Senator attaches to the word "otherwise" is "when it shall happen otherwise, or in any other manner." As a matter of course, that is equivalent to saying "when any vacancy shall happen," and the Senator's construction of the Constitution is that the framers when they used the words when any vacancy should happen by resignation or otherwise simply meant when any vacancy should happen.

I submit in the first place, whatever the argument may be worth, that the men who made that instrument did not put a word in it which did not have a meaning; and what makes this more significant is that this very question was discussed and that the original report of the committee was "when any vacancy should happen" in the convention of 1787, and that Mr. Madison himself put this limitation upon it and put in the words "by resignation or otherwise," or words equivalent to them. I say that the language "if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise," means vacancies by casualty or accident, such as death or resignation in antagonism to the distinct idea of the termination of a term by operation of law. In other words, the old Latin maxim of noscitur à sociis applies to this case, and the word "otherwise" in connection with "resignation" means something applying to that particular question, as where a Senator dies or resigns; but where the term expires by virtue of constitutional or statutory enactment, which, as a matter of course, is known to all men, which does not happen, but comes like the laws of nature, if you can apply such an analogy to the laws of men, then the Constitution says the governor shall not appoint.

Mr. HOAR. Well, Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his interruption. The Senator concedes that a vacancy has happened, within the constitutional meaning of that term, in the representation of the State of New Hampshire. Now, as I understand, he puts his argument solely on the ground that the words which were intended to mean, in my judgment, if a vacancy shall happen in any possible way, that is by resignation (which is one ordinary way of creating a vacancy) or in any other method whatever, then the right of the governor to fill the Senatorial office by appointment exists, do not apply to this case. Now, it seems to me, and I submit to the good sense of that Senator himself, that it is utterly incredible, first that the founders of the Constitution should ever have intended to let the Senate be full if the vacancy happened during a term and that it should be vacant until a Legislature should meet if a vacancy happened at the beginning of a term. It is utterly incredible that they should have entertained that purpose; but entertaining that purpose, it is still more incredible that any one of the learned lawyers and able statesmen who framed the Constitution could have undertaken to effectuate it by such language as he has described. Just think of Mr. Madison desiring to provide that this power of the governor of a State to keep full the representation of his State in the Senate should have a limitation upon it that he should not exercise it at the beginning of a constitutional term, and having in mind the limitation and the restraint that he should have undertaken to express it, and to give legal and constitutional effect to it, by simply adding the words, "by resignation or otherwise." He would have said, "by resignation, and not otherwise," if he had intended to give constitutional effect to that idea.

The Constitution using, I repeat, substantially the same language to provide for the two cases if a vacancy shall happen, the Senator is driven to say that "happen" means one thing in case of the Senatorial office and another thing in the case of the executive office. But conceding that the words have the same meaning, he undertakes to resort to language intended to amplify, to make clear, to make universal in the important case of the Senator the existence of the power, and claims that that is used as a limitation or restriction!

Mr. President, the framers of the Constitution, and the men who filled these seats from the beginning to the year 1825, beyond any question took the view of the matter which was taken by the Senate in the Bell case; and it is conceded, as the Senator from Missouri himself has conceded, that in ten instances Senators were appointed and took and held their seats in consequence of the exercise of the authority of the executives of their States at the beginning of a constitutional term, when the Legislature for any reason had failed to provide by an election. These cases are all cited in the report which was made in the case of Mr. Bell six years ago.

The first is the case of William Cocke, of the State of Tennessee. The State being admitted into the Union in 1796, Cocke having drawn the term which expired on the 3d of March, 1797, he was appointed by the governor to be his own successor on the 22d of April, 1797. The second case was that of Uriah Tracy, a Senator from the State of Connecticut, whose term expired on the 3d of March, 1801, and under an appointment by the governor made on the 4th of March—precisely the case of Mr. Blair—he claimed his seat and was admitted after a very earnest and heated discussion by a party vote of 13 to 10. This precedent was followed the next day by the admission of Mr. Hindman, of Maryland; by the admission of Mr. Condit, of New Jersey, in 1803; Mr. Anderson, of Tennessee, and Mr. Smith, of Maryland, in 1809; Mr. Cutts, of New Hampshire, in 1813; Mr. Williams, of Tennessee, in 1817, all executive appointments to fill places made vacant by the expiration of full terms of service during recesses of the Legislature, and all were admitted without discussion and without objection.

Then in the year 1825 came the case to which the Senator has referred of James Lanman. Mr. Lanman was appointed by the governor during the recess of the Legislature of the State of Connecticut for the beginning of the full term which was to begin on the following 4th of March. The vacancy had not happened when the governor made the appointment, and by an unbroken series of precedents with but one exception it had been held that the governor had no authority to make the appointment under this constitutional clause in anticipation of a vacancy. In the first place it did not come within the letter of the Constitution; and in the next place not only did it not come within the letter of the Constitution, but it was impossible for the governor to know that the Legislature would not assemble and fill the place before the constitutional term began. In one of the early cases the governor had made the appointment in anticipation. I think that was not noticed by the Senate, at least no point was made upon it, and the Senator was admitted without objection; but in no other case had that happened.

In the Lanman case, therefore, there was a clear, unquestionable objection. The debates are not reported. Who knows what the ground was upon which the majority of the Senate proceeded? The National Intelligencer on the next day in a very clear article stated that the Senate had proceeded on the ground which I have stated, that the governor could not exercise his authority until the vacancy actually occurred. Mr. Gordon, of Pennsylvania, in his Digest of the Laws of the United States, who is referred to by Judge Story as a very able and accurate law writer contemporary with that decision, and whose book was published a very few years after, stated that the case went upon the ground that the governor had no right to appoint until the vacancy actually happened. Judge Story in his work on the Constitution of the United States, on the authority of Mr. Gordon's Digest, Judge Story being a contemporary of the Senators who made the decision, sitting here in court at the time it was made, undoubtedly hearing and knowing something personally of so interesting a historic event, says that it was put by the Senate upon the ground that the governor had no right to appoint in anticipation of a vacancy. And the first suggestion, so far as I know—I do not remember the Niles's Register statement which the Senator read—that anybody put the Lanman case upon any other ground than the clear, indisputable ground which I have stated is in Mr. Grundy's report made twelve years after. Mr. Grundy, in distinguishing the Sevier case, undertakes to make his distinction from the Lanman case, by saying that the Lanman case went upon the ground that the governor could not appoint when the vacancy happened at the beginning of a term.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator permit me to suggest that what seems to my mind conclusive of what the Senate decided is the report made by Mr. Benton, who was then a member of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. How long after was Mr. Benton's report?

Mr. VEST. In his Thirty Years' View.

Mr. HOAR. Thirty years after, nearly.

Mr. VEST. He wrote the book then, but was giving his recollection in the Thirty Years' View of what the Senate then debated and decided.

Mr. HOAR. How is it possible that Mr. Benton or anybody else can know on what ground the majority of the Senate put their votes in a particular election case unless each Senator rose in his place and stated his reason?

Mr. VEST. Mr. Benton, in his Thirty Years' View, gives that debate and gives the very speech of Mr. Tazewell on this identical point and says that the debate was upon that.

Mr. HOAR. How weak a proposition—I do not now apply the adjective to my honorable friend's statement, which is a very strong and clear one—but how weak a proposition that is, whoever made it, that a single man should undertake to pronounce the ground upon which forty or fifty Senators proceeded in determining a question of constitutional law, when only one or two of them engaged in the debate. Suppose it to be true that Mr. Tazewell agreed with my honorable friend from Missouri and with the gentleman whose high authority he has cited and so argued, and every other member of the Senate knew perfectly well that, whether that was sound or unsound, Lanman was not entitled to his seat for the clear and indisputable reason that his appointment had been made by the governor before the vacancy occurred. Does the Senator from Missouri doubt that every one of that majority would have voted against Lanman for the reason that the governor had made the appointment before he had the right to appoint, just as if Mr. Blair had been appointed six months ago by the governor of New Hampshire? That being the case, we are all agreed that the majority of the Senate would have been constrained to deny the claim of Mr. Lanman. For that reason it seems to me that it is utterly preposterous to say that because one particular Senator made an argument stating another ground also, a majority of the Senate must of course have proceeded on that, and that is a judgment of the Senate of sufficient strength and weight to bear down an uninterrupted series of precedents coming down to the year 1825, and to bear down also the latest and gravest precedent bearing upon the question that happened six years ago.

Mr. President, this is the general history of this case. It will be found stated at greater length, with all the authorities, all the points as far as I could think of them, in the report made from the Committee on Privileges and Elections by the minority in the Bell case and in the discussion six years ago. If any Senator desires to refresh himself on the question he can look at that report and those debates. But it is, it seems to me, enough, in addition to what I have said, to remark that I can not conceive it credible that the framers of the Constitution, having for their first and leading object the keeping of the Senate full, the rights of the people and the rights of the States preserved by their full and complete representation, and having given the governor of the State the right to provide for an exigency which would arise at any other period of the term, should have intended to deprive the people of that privilege and the governor of that authority merely because the vacancy happened at the beginning of the term.

You have on one side the ten or twelve precedents made by the fathers of the Republic; you have also the decision of the executive department acquiesced in from the foundation of the Government, supported by the authority of John Marshall and William Wirt, in regard to the meaning of precisely similar language in another part of the Constitution; you have the great judgment of the supreme court of Indiana, your own State, Mr. President, made by one of its most accomplished jurists, and you have in addition to that the necessity of preserving the rights of the people of these States; and the one thing opposed is a decision of the Senate, in regard to which no man can know that any single Senator but Mr. Tazewell or possibly Mr. Benton who wrote about it twenty-five years after, put his decision on this ground, and a decision which the Senate would have been compelled to make on another ground if this ground had never existed; and it is that doubtful, questionable, uncertain precedent upon which the learned Senator and those who think with him rely to bear the weight of this case.

Mr. VEST. I want to say a single word, Mr. President, as to what was decided in the Lanman case. The Senator from Massachusetts put the greatest possible weight on the declaration of a newspaper, upon the affirmation of a gentleman named Gordon. Against that is found Niles's Register, the report of Felix Grundy, and the declarations of Thomas H. Benton, who was a member of the Senate at the time Lanman was excluded. As to the Indiana case it was decided upon a different provision of law, entirely different from the clause of the Constitution now under consideration. As to the earlier precedents, they were swept away by the Lanman case; and to show that the Senate of the United States construed the Lanman case to have settled the question, I may mention that there have been eight cases since 1825, when every few years vacancies occurred in representation in the Senate from different States until the Legislature could meet and elect. Conspicuously I recollect one, the vacancy in the seat filled by the election of James S. Green, of Missouri. For two years the people of Missouri were represented by but one Senator, because the Senate refused to admit a Senator until he was elected by the Legislature.

The Senator from Massachusetts says that I rely on a solitary precedent. I affirm that the Senator can not find one solitary instance against it from 1825 to 1879—not one single instance where any Senatorial action was ever taken against the decision in the Lanman case that the governor of a State can not fill a full term.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into this discussion; but I can not vote for the admission of the appointed Senator from New Hampshire. I voted against the precedent set in the Bell case in 1879. I examined the matter then, and came to the conclusion that there was no power in the governor of a State to appoint to a full term. I shall not now repeat the argument which I then made against the right of a governor so to do. The question seems never to have been examined before 1825. The Senator from Massachusetts referred to a number of cases occurring prior to 1825. It is true that up to 1825 those precedents were set by the Senate without examination. There had been appointments made by governors, acquiesced in by the Senate without investigation. There was a very obvious reason why it was so. Prior to that time the Senate was a small body, and it was important to have a full Senate. As is known to the history of the country, the men who came to the Senate of the United States with a commission from the governor of their State came with all presumptions in their favor; and it was very desirable also to have as many Senators present as possible. Consequently there was no objection made prior to 1825 to filling any vacancy, whether a vacancy in a term or at the commencement of a term, by the appointment of a governor. The only question raised was in the case of Mr. Tracy about 1801, but that was not much debated. In 1825, however, the question came in review before the Senate in the case of Lanman. The Senator from Massachusetts states that that case turned upon the question of whether the governor had the right to make an appointment for the full term before the vacancy happened; but if the Senator had read the discussion of that case he would have found that the Senators expressed themselves emphatically on the question now before us.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to one thing which I should have said when I was up before?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I can not hear the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator if he will allow me to call his attention to one point. Both he and the Senator from Missouri speak of the claim made on this side as a claim that the governor is authorized to make an appointment for a full term. Of course the claim is only that he may appoint until the session of the Legislature, not for the full term.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator certainly claims that the governor has a right by his appointment to commence a term. He may call it a temporary filling of the term, but that is the very same question as to whether he has the right to fill for the whole term. This question really came up for the first time in the case of Lanman in 1825, and it was then thoroughly discussed by some of the ablest lawyers that ever sat in this Chamber. They expressed their opinion fully, ably, and distinctly upon the very question that is now before the Senate. Mr. Tazewell, who was the principal debater and speaker at that time, according to Benton's Thirty Years' View, expressly made an argument on that subject, and now, inasmuch as authorities are cited on the other side, I wish to cite the authority of Mr. Tazewell. Mr. Benton says:

Mr. Tazewell was the principal speaker against the validity of the appointment, arguing against it both on the words of the Constitution and the reason for the provision. The words of the Constitution are: "If vacancies happen

(in the Senate) by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature." "Happen" was held by Mr. Tazewell to be the governing word in this provision, and it always implied a contingency and an unexpected one.

Mr. Benton, commenting on this decision, says:

And with this decision the subsequent practice of the Senate has conformed, leaving States in part or in whole unrepresented when the Legislature failed to fill a regular vacancy.

That is the comment of Mr. Benton, who himself was for thirty years a member of this body, as to the practice of the Senate, following the decision in the Lanman case. There were States unrepresented either in whole or in part, and that had been the uniform practice from the decision in the Lanman case in 1825 up to the time when Mr. Benton wrote his Thirty Years' View.

The Senator from Massachusetts seems to suppose that the whole question in the Lanman case turned on the fact of whether the governor had the right to appoint to commence a term prior to the happening of the vacancy; but distinguished Senators at that time expressed themselves not only upon that point, but upon the further point as to whether the governor had a right to commence a term when the vacancy happened before the appointment, and that is a justification of the vote I shall give.

I will read some of the remarks made in a subsequent debate by some of the ablest lawyers that ever sat in this Chamber. Mr. Butler, the uncle, I believe, of the present Senator from South Carolina, said in 1854:

It seems to be conceded that the authority to choose a Senator to commence a new term of six years, after the efflux of a regular term, is exclusively vested in the State Legislature.

That was the remark of Senator Butler, of South Carolina, who was known to be one of the ablest men who ever sat in the Chamber, and was the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. He said emphatically:

To commence a new term of six years, after the efflux of a regular term, is exclusively vested in the State Legislature.

Again he said:

In 1825 Lanman's case came up for consideration involving both the questions. In that case, after a very full debate, it was solemnly decided that it was not competent for the governor of a State to put a member on this floor at the commencement of a term. In other words, it was decided that his power of appointment could not be substituted for the election of the State Legislaure. Even if such had not been the decision in the case of Lanman, I take it for granted that such would be and must necessarily be the decision now.

So Mr. Badger, of North Carolina, a gentleman whom I did not know, but who I have understood was one of the ablest lawyers this country ever produced, in discussing the same question said:

Now, my friend from Kentucky has suggested one or two questions which I think will be sufficiently answered by this statement. The vacancies which the executive of a State is authorized to fill are never vacancies that happen by the efflux of time; they are not foreseen vacancies; they are vacancies that "happen by resignation or otherwise."

Mr. President, from an exceeding desire to give to this clause of the Constitution such a construction as would keep the Senate always full, I labored hard, a year or two ago, when we had questions of this kind before us, to find out some method of supporting, in my own mind, the construction that a vacancy happening by the efflux of time, and not filled beforehand by the Legislature, might be brought within this limited power conferred upon the executive; but, sir, I have been obliged to abandon it.

"By resignation or otherwise" is the language. We must expound the word "otherwise" to apply to vacancies happening by similar events; that is, unforeseen events—death, resignation, appointment to an office which disqualifies—and it can never be applied to the expiration of the term of a Senator which leaves a seat vacant on this floor. My opinion, therefore, is that the governor of a State has no power to fill a vacancy in this body which is brought about by the expiration or efflux of the time for which a Senator was elected—in other words, at the determination of his term in the Senate. It must be a vacancy in the term happening during the recess of the Legislature; it must be a vacancy in the term happening by resignation or other casualty. That I understand to have been the express and solemn decision of the Senate in Mr. Lanman's case in 1825, overruling one or two earlier decisions, which had passed perhaps without full consideration.

I am reading from the debate of 1854 on Phelps's case——

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I desire to ask the Senator from Delaware if the Legislature of New Hampshire had elected a Senator while in session and before he came here and took his seat he had died, say the next day after his election, in that event could the governor have filled the vacancy?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir; I do not think he could if the Legislature was in session. The Legislature of New Hampshire that met last summer was the proper Legislature to have elected for this term. It could have done so, and such I understand has been the decision of the supreme court of that State; such I understand was the opinion given by Senators on the other side of this Chamber, that an election could have been had by the Legislature that met last summer. But the term of Senator Blair having expired, the question now is, shall the governor commence that term? The Constitution says that the Legislature shall have the authority to fill seats in this body, and that the governor's power is limited to vacancies happening by casualty. That "happening" evidently referred to some casualty by which some person elected by the Legislature was not able to serve the State; where a man who had taken his seat and during the incumbency of his term a vacancy occurred by death, resignation, or otherwise. In that case the governor was empowered to appoint temporarily.

But I did not intend to discuss this question, but simply to cite some of the authorities which sustain the view that governed my vote in 1879 and will govern my action in this case. I have already cited the opinion of Mr. Butler and Mr. Badger, expressed in 1854. I now wish to call the attention of the Senate to the opinion of another learned and distinguished Senator, one who occupied a prominent position upon the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. I refer to the late Hon. James A. Bayard, father of the present Secretary of State. He discussed in 1854 the whole question, and I will read from what he said; but before coming to that I will read further from what Mr. Badger said:

Under the Constitution the power of appointing Senators is vested in the Legislature, and nowhere else; but if a vacancy happen in this body, by resignation, death, disqualification, or other unforeseen event, the Legislature not being in session, if the vacancy is to be filled, the power must, of necessity, be put somewhere else. That is the necessity. It is the necessity of devolving the power upon the executive, which necessity arises out of two facts: First, that the vacancy could not have been foreseen; and, secondly, that the Legislature is not in a constitutional condition to act; and therefore, those two things concurring, the Constitution gives to the executive the power of making a temporary appointment.

That was the emphatic language of Mr. Badger. Now I will read what Mr. James A. Bayard said:

You find that, in reference to the full term of a Senator, the provision is that he shall hold his office for six years and be chosen by the Legislature. The executive has no authority there. And you find, further, that if the Legislature is in session at the time a vacancy occurs by resignation or otherwise, though it may not even be known to them, yet no authority in such case is confided to the executive to appoint. You find, in other words, that within the intent of the Constitution no authority over the subject is meant to be intrusted to the executive whenever the primary power (the Legislature) is in existence as an organized body.

I am aware that at one time it was decided that even in reference to the full term the executive of a State might make an appointment until the Legislature met; but that construction was subsequently overruled by the Senate in the case of Mr. Lanman in the year 1825; and ever since the practice has been uniformly in accordance with the decision in that case.

He said further:

In reference to the full term, it can not be doubted that no authority whatever is confided to the executive. The negative of power in any other event than when the vacancy occurs in recess shows that it was the intent of the Constitution that the executive was merely to provide for casualties happening when the legislative power, which is the primary power, was not in existence, and of course could not act.

Again he said:

Where the seat alone is vacant, but the term has not been once filled by the Legislature, no authority is confided to the executive. The authority conferred upon the executive is to make temporary appointments in case of casualties.

These distinguished Senators, as able lawyers as ever sat in this body, perhaps, fully commented on this entire question. I should like to know whether such utterances are to be overruled by a precedent of a few years ago when party feeling was running high, when the other side of this Chamber was in a minority, when I know, as I have reason to know, that some votes were given for Mr. Bell not in accordance with what was deemed to be the law, but as a matter of expediency and generosity on the part of the dominant party at that time in the Senate—I ask whether that precedent so set is to overrule the settled judgment and conviction of this body from 1825 up to 1879?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I desire to correct the Senator in his statement with respect to the Bell case, and to say to him that at the time that question was under debate it was in no sense a party question, and the record will show that some of the strongest men on the other side of the Chamber voted against the admission of Mr. Bell, and some of the weakest, including myself, on this side voted in favor of his admission.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am very thankful to the Senator for his voluntary statement that it was not a party question. It was not drawn out, I am sure, by any remarks I had made. I did not say it was a party question. I referred to the fact that at that time this side of the Chamber was in the majority, and I know the fact—it is not worth while for me to say how I know it—that there were votes on this side of the Chamber for Mr. Bell prompted by a feeling of generosity and liberality to Mr. Bell, and not by any conviction that the law in the case entitled Mr. Bell to a seat in the Senate.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to say that personally I have no objection to Mr. Blair, the appointee of the governor of New Hampshire, as a member of this body. I have served with him for six years. My relations with him have always been pleasant and friendly. I would as soon see him on that side of the Chamber as any other Senator. But there are higher feelings than mere friendship involved; and we should rise above every other consideration than the proper and true construction of the Constitution. Whenever any prejudice would make us violate the spirit and intent of the Constitution it is our duty to discharge all such prejudice and adhere to the true intent and meaning of the Constitution. While my personal relations have been kindly with Mr. Blair, while I would be as pleased to see him occupy a seat on that side of the Chamber as any gentleman in New Hampshire, I am compelled by my conviction of what is right and proper in this case to record my vote against his admission.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, I am glad that this is not in any sense an original question in this body, and the light we have before us I think is sufficient to guide us to a conclusion. After a full review of all that was said in the Bell case, as one of those Senators to whom the Senator from Delaware alluded a while ago as voting for expediency, I must say that I have nothing to take back of what I said by my vote or by my utterance at that time. Whoever else voted for expediency's sake, I can say to the Senate that I was not one of them. I voted on that question, as I do on all others, from conviction. There were some very able lawyers on the other side of the body who voted against Mr. Bell's admission, Mr. Conkling, I think, and Mr. Carpenter. Mr. Bayard on this side, my humble self, and many other Senators here voted for his admission; but it was a question that excited, as far as my recollection goes, no party feeling whatever.

On looking over the Constitution I found no reflection that there were safeguards provided in it to secure at all times a full representation of the States, even when the Legislature failed to do its duty, just as in the case of the House of Representatives. If the Senator from Delaware will examine the language of the Constitution with respect to filling vacancies in the House, he will find that that language is not any broader, indeed it is not as broad as the language employed in the Constitution with respect to filling vacancies in the Senate; and still I imagine no Senator on this floor would attempt to say that a vacancy arising in any Congressional district in the United States by failure of the people to elect in the customary and ordinary way could not be filled at a special election ordered by the governor of the State under the provision of the Constitution analogous to that in relation to filling vacancies in the Senate. The validity of such an election could not for one moment be questioned. Suppose the people of a district fail to elect a Representative to represent them at the other end of the Capitol for any cause, and the governor, invoking the provision of the Constitution looking to a full representation of the people there, should order a special election for that purpose, could it be argued that there was no vacancy within the meaning of the Constitution because the vacancy existed at the commencement of the term? Would such a reason prevail for one moment?

And so, Mr. President, in respect to vacancies in the Senate. The Constitution declares that the Senate of the United States shall at all times be composed of two Senators from each State, and it has taken the precaution to guard that great principle and to secure to each State a full representation at all times and under all circumstances, even though the Legislature should fail to do its duty.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him a moment? The Constitution gives the power to the States. I want to know if New Hampshire had not in existence a legislative body which at the proper time could have elected a Senator for the term beginning on the 4th of March last?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Most assuredly she had the power and it is not for us to question for a moment her reasons for failing to exercise it. But this Government is not to go to pieces because the Legislature of a State fails to do its duty. It has provided a double safeguard in that event by giving to the governor of a State the power to appoint a Senator to fill the vacancy occurring. This language does not refer to an individual, but it speaks of the body:

> The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

In this same section the language under debate is found, and it reads as follows:

> If vacancies happen—
> Happen where?—
> If vacancies happen—
> In the Senate—
> by resignation or otherwise—
> Can anything be broader?—
> the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator from Florida pardon an interruption at that point?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish to have the Senator's opinion upon this proposition: If the Legislature meeting next after the vacancy has occurred fails to appoint, would the executive then have the power to fill the vacancy by appointment? In other words, could an entire term be filled by executive appointment, the Legislature failing to act?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not think the present appointment would continue any longer than the meeting of the next Legislature, although I am not here to answer anything but practical questions. I think this appointment would continue only until the meeting of the New Hampshire Legislature in June; but I say that the spirit and intent of the Constitution was to have a full representation in this body from each State, and that if for any reason the Legislature fails to discharge its duty, the governor of the State representing the people of that State, is invested with authority to fill the vacancy, which appointment will continue until the meeting of the Legislature, when the term can be regularly filled. That is my construction of it. That was the view which guided me in the Bell case, and I abide by it now.

With respect to established precedents of this body, I have this to say: I do not think, as I said in the Bell case, that we are sitting here as a court of justice. I for one recognize the distinction between a political and a legal tribunal. The Constitution says that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members, and that is an independent and an original right. We are not hampered by any precedents that may have been established in the Lanman case or in any other case. We are exercising an original political power. Courts of justice for the sake of convenience and security to property follow judicial precedents in the interest of society, and they are permitted to go down for ages uninterrupted, so that innocent parties may not suffer and that rules of property may be established which will secure society in settled rights.

We are not in that position. Each House, that is each Congress, has the right to decide. We have as much right to exercise original judgment in this case as the Congress had who preceded us in the other cases, with all their great ability; and we are not bound by precedents in this body as the Supreme Court is bound by precedents in judicial cases. I have again and again uttered my dissent from that doctrine. Of course precedents may be invoked as far as their reason goes. The reason of this case is not satisfactory to my mind, and I shall vote in this case as I voted in the other for the admission of the governor's appointee.

Mr. INGALLS. I was not able to understand when this same question was under discussion six years ago, nor have I thus far been able to learn during this debate, why the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, that was chosen in November, 1882, had not the right to choose a successor to Mr. Blair. If I understand the constitution and laws of that State, the Legislature is chosen in November each alternate year, but does not assemble until the month of June. Therefore, if the Legislature that was chosen in November, 1882, does not expire or lose its functions until June, 1885, I can not understand why under the terms of the law of 1866 it had not the right to choose the successor of Mr. Blair.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. Does not the law of 1866 say that the choice shall be made by the Legislature chosen last before the expiration of the term?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir; but of course that language must be interpreted in accordance with the spirit of the legislation. The Legislature which was chosen last November is in embryo, it is a political fœtus that has been conceived or begotten, but not born. Suppose, for instance, that the State of New Hampshire to-day were to be invaded by a foreign enemy; suppose that the pestilence that walketh in darkness were to overtake its inhabitants, or the destruction that wasteth at noon-day, and it became necessary to assemble the Legislature to take steps for the purpose of protecting those people against the foreign foe, or of protecting them against domestic difficulty, or of making some arrangement for the purpose of carrying on some work provided by their constitution, what Legislature would the governor assemble by proclamation to-day? Will the Senator inform me?

Mr. PIKE. The Legislature chosen in November, 1882.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from New Hampshire informs me that the governor would assemble in that case by proclamation the Legislature chosen in November, 1882. Can there then be anything plainer as a political proposition or as a legal proposition than that the Legislature chosen in 1882 was the one and the only one competent to act before the expiration of the term of Mr. Blair? I think not.

The Senator from Massachusetts calls my attention to the language employed in the statute of 1866, that it shall be the Legislature chosen next before the expiration of the term which shall elect the Senator; but what does that mean? That law must be interpreted to carry out and effectuate the objects and purposes for which it was enacted, and not to destroy those purposes. The object of it was to fill up the ranks of this body and not to decimate them. Therefore I say that the inference to my mind is irresistible that the Legislature chosen in 1882 is to-day the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire. It is the only legislative body competent to act. In case of difficulty requiring legislative action it would be assembled by the governor of that State for the purposes contemplated by its constitution; and that being the case, I say that a proper interpretation of the statute of 1866 would irresistibly imply that that Legislature, being the one chosen and competent to act and the only one chosen and competent to act next before the expiration of the term of Mr. Blair, had a right to choose his successor when it was in session.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator, according to his construction, which is very interesting, when, under the statute of 1866, could that Legislature have made the election?

Mr. INGALLS. The statute may be silent upon that point. The governor would have the right to assemble it, and whenever that Legislature is properly in session, whenever it is assembled for the discharge of any of its political functions, it has a right to act under that constitutional provision which says that each State shall have in this body two Senators, chosen by the Legislature thereof.

Mr. HOAR. The statute of 1866—the Senator will correct me if I am wrong—goes further; at any rate the existing law, the Revised Statutes, which I suppose is the same, goes further, and says the Legislature last chosen before the Senator's term expired shall make the choice.

Mr. INGALLS. On the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof.

Mr. HOAR. That is the time.

Mr. INGALLS. That was the time when they had the right to elect.

Mr. HOAR. Two years ago?

Mr. INGALLS. The Legislature of the State of Iowa chooses more than a year before the expiration of the term, a year and a half nearly. So does Louisiana; so does Ohio; so does Kentucky. It is not necessary that there should be a punctual assemblage of this political body within a few moments or days before the expiration of the term. The law must be interpreted to effectuate the object and purpose of it, and it appears to me that there can be no doubt whatever that the Legislature which was chosen in November, 1882, being to-day the depository of the legislative power of the State of New Hampshire, competent to act if assembled by the proclamation of the governor, had the right to exercise this power. It failed to do it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That Legislature is in recess.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know what the terms of the New Hampshire constitution are, whether the term of that Legislature is fixed and defined by the constitution or whether it is statutory. Perhaps the Senator from New Hampshire can inform me on that point. The term of that Legislature, the Senator from New Hampshire advises me, is fixed by the constitution, and those terms of course I am in ignorance of, and therefore can not speak further on that proposition. As the Senator from Vermont suggests, they certainly are not in session now, but that does not interfere with the proposition I have made, that some time, when they were in session in June, 1883, they had exactly the same right to choose the successor of Henry W. Blair as the Legislature that assembled in Iowa in January, 1884, had to choose the successor of my friend who sits on my left [Mr. ALLISON], who did not take the office until the 4th of March, 1885. That power the Legislature of New Hampshire did not exercise. The question therefore recurs whether this is a vacancy contemplated by the Constitution. I understand that the supreme court of the State of New Hampshire did advise upon a case made, or upon a suggestion of the governor, or of some other authority, that the Legislature which assembled in June, 1883, had the right to elect. Am I correct?

The supreme court of New Hampshire did so decide, a case being submitted to them. The supreme court so decided, but the Legislature for some reason saw fit not to exercise that power. It then becomes a question whether or not, the Legislature having failed to exercise that power that was confided to them, a vacancy occurs under the terms of the Constitution which the executive of that State is authorized to fill by appointment.

I asked the Senator from Florida a question which he saw fit smilingly to put by, and said he was here only for the purpose of considering practical questions. I inquired of him whether he thought, the Legislature having assembled and adjourned without making an election or appointment and the executive then having intervened by appointment and the Legislature again assembling and failing to appoint, the executive power continued, so that practically an entire term might be filled by executive appointment.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I do not think the Senator did me full justice. I think I answered the question very pointedly by saying that I did not believe the temporary appointment would continue longer than the meeting of the following Legislature.

Mr. INGALLS. And that is exactly what I think. But I asked the Senator more than that; I asked him whether, in case the Legislature assembling next after the vacancy should fail to elect, the executive power then existed to fill the admitted vacancy by appointment?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I believe it would.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator believes it would. Now I have an answer to the question that I asked, and it appears to me it is a very practical one. We are not settling this question to-day for New Hampshire alone. There is a vacancy in Oregon. The Legislature has adjourned having failed to elect a successor to Mr. Slater, who formerly occupied a seat on this floor. The sessions of that Legislature are biennial. The Legislature of the State of Illinois up to this time has failed to elect, and there has been a vacancy in one of the seats in this body from Illinois since the 4th of March, 1885. Whether they will be able to fill that vacancy before they adjourn is yet in the future. We are acting not only upon the case of New Hampshire, but immediately before us are the cases of Oregon and Illinois, which present almost precisely the same aspect.

The Senator from Florida suggested that this was in many ways a question that had no practical bearing. We are aware that the Legislature of Illinois has on two occasions been a tie. When the former term of the Senator from Illinois, then Mr. Logan, expired in 1877, if I recollect aright the Legislature was a tie. It is to-day a tie. Under the system of cumulative elections which they have in that State there is no certainty that it will not be a tie when a Senator is to be chosen again in 1887. So we are confronted with a very considerable exigency in determining whether or not the word "vacancy" to which reference has been made in the Constitution carries with it the power, in case the Legislature fails to elect, that the executive may appoint so as to cover an entire Senatorial term.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Constitution provides that it shall continue only until the meeting of the Legislature. It never was intended that it should apply to the full term. Nobody I think ever held that.

Mr. INGALLS. But the Senator will see that practically, if his interpretation is correct, it may cover an entire term; that is to say, in the case of New Hampshire the Legislature has failed to elect; the governor has appointed Mr. Blair; he appears here; takes the oath of office; it may be that for some reason the Legislature in June may fail to elect, and it does not assemble again until June, 1887. The question is again presented whether that is a vacancy in the term contemplated by the Constitution that authorizes the executive of the State to fill it by appointment. The Constitution says:

> And if vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

It is open to very grave doubt, it seems to me, whether a single appointment does not exhaust the executive power. I am aware, of course, that this body is made up of the representatives of States; it is contemplated that each State shall have two Senators here; but the Constitution is equally explicit in saying how they shall be sent here. They are to be sent here "by the Legislatures thereof," and there is nowhere a delegation of executive power except to fill vacancies temporarily that may occur until the Legislature thereof shall next meet.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. If three or four States were overrun by a public enemy at the time when it was necessary to choose Senators from those States, I would suggest to the Senator if the language employed by the Constitution did not contemplate the authority to the governor to fill the places from these States by temporary appointment? It seems to me his construction is very narrow. There are a great many exigencies outside of this. The Legislature might not be able to meet at the time, the public force of a foreign enemy might have possession of the State capitol, and half a dozen States in such a contingency would go without any representation on account of a mere technicality. Does the Senator believe that is the meaning?

Mr. INGALLS. It certainly is a grave question and open to very serious complications, and I should be disposed myself to hold under the provisions of the Constitution, the evident purpose and intent being that this Senate shall be in some way filled, that each State shall be entitled to two members of the body, that there is and must be somewhere resident the power to keep these numbers full. But I was unwilling to let this occasion pass without expressing my regret that every two or four years the State of New Hampshire by its action or by its failure to act exposes us to a continual repetition of these debates. There ought to be either a change in the action of the State of New Hampshire through its Legislature or some change in the language of the statute of 1866 by which the word "chosen" should be in some way qualified so as to include a case like that which is now before us. This suggestion was made when the case of Mr. Bell was before the Senate, and we were then told that it would be inconvenient to the people of New Hampshire to adjust their political relations with the National Government so as to enable them to choose their Senators before the expiration of the term.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator from Kansas yield to me for a question?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Does the Senator argue that there is any power residing now in the governor of New Hampshire to convene the Legislature of 1882, which I understand him to be the constitutional, actual Legislature of that State, because the Legislature elected in November last can not act until the 1st day of June. Do I understand the Senator to say that there is power now residing in the governor to convene that Legislature for the purpose of electing a Senator?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not know anything about that, because I am entirely unfamiliar with the terms of the New Hampshire constitution. What I said was that the Legislature which assembled in June, 1883, had absolutely, in my judgment, the power to choose the successor of Mr. Blair, then Senator from that State.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I fully agree with the Senator from Kansas in that, because they had a right to anticipate a vacancy to occur.

Mr. INGALLS. They knew it would occur under the law.

Mr. MCPHERSON. And could provide for it. Otherwise it is to be presumed they desired no representative here. Now, the Legislature chosen in November last, as I understand, under the constitution of the State of New Hampshire, can not have legislative existence until the 1st day of June next. A vacancy occurs between the 4th day of March and the 1st day of June or such time as that Legislature shall act in electing a Senator, and during that period the people of New Hampshire have but one representative on this floor. I understood the Senator from Kansas to say that the constitutional Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, for all purposes for which a Legislature could act, was the one elected in 1882. Why has not the governor of New Hampshire the power to convene that Legislature for this purpose as well as for any purpose of legislation?

Mr. INGALLS. That I can not answer, as I said, because I have no knowledge whatever of the language employed in the constitution of New Hampshire, nor what limitations are placed upon the exercise of this power by the constitution of that State. So I can not answer. I should say that in the absence of any limitation upon the power of the governor or of the Legislature to act, they might be convened at any time by proclamation for such purposes as the governor thought desirable to invite their action.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I assume that there is no State without a legislative body which can be convened at all times in case of emergency or peril for the purpose of caring for the interests of the State. Now, if the Legislature elected in 1884 in November can not be a constitutional, actual Legislature till June next, then it does seem to me as though the Legislature elected in 1882 was and must continue to be the actual Legislature until that time arrives.

Mr. INGALLS. On that I can have no debate with the Senator, because I am not familiar with the terms of the constitution of New Hampshire; but it is evident that the term of the Senator from New Hampshire has expired, that there is a vacancy, and that the Legislature is not in session. I believe it to be a vacancy contemplated by the Constitution, where the executive has the power to appoint, and that, therefore, Mr. Blair should be admitted to take the oath.

Mr. PIKE. Mr. President, inasmuch as some criticism has been made upon the Legislature of New Hampshire, and it has been stated by some gentlemen that they had not acted in the choice of a Senator when they should have acted, I desire to say a few words.

We have a Legislature once in two years—a biennial Legislature. One was chosen in November, 1882, and another was chosen last November, or November, 1884. Now, the question is, which Legislature has the right to elect? After our constitution was changed that became a mooted question in our State. We had the national law, to which I will ask the attention of Senators while I read:

> The Legislature of each State, which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress, shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress.

By this national law of 1866 the Legislature chosen next preceding the expiration of the term was the Legislature to elect. Our Legislature supposed that the Legislature chosen last November in Mr. Blair's case was the one next preceding the end of his term which was to expire on the 4th of March. A large majority of them acted upon that idea. But precisely the same question arose six years ago at the expiration of Mr. Wadleigh's term, and at the time when Mr. Bell was appointed, about whom so much talk has been made.

That our Legislature might put itself in harmony with the National Government, that it might act in obedience to the national law, application was made to the Congress of the United States, and the recent Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. Cameron, introduced a bill by which the national law that I have read might be so modified as to meet the condition of things in our State. The question came up here and was considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections of this very Senate as to whether the Legislature elected in the autumn before the expiration of Mr. Wadleigh's term, or the Legislature elected two years before, was the one that should choose the Senator to succeed him; and that bill and that question were considered by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and Mr. MCMILLAN, a Senator now upon this floor, made the unanimous report of that committee that the Legislature elected immediately preceding the expiration of the term, that is, the Legislature in Mr. Bell's case, elected the autumn before, and the Legislature in the present (Mr. Blair's) case, elected last autumn, was the Legislature that had the power, and the only Legislature that had the power to elect.

That report was submitted to this body, and by a unanimous vote, as the record shows, not a single Senator here dissenting upon adopting the report of that committee, the Legislature of New Hampshire elected last autumn was the one and the only one that could elect a Senator for this term. Now, it seems to me that New Hampshire ought not to be very much criticized when she has made this effort to find what the national will was and to find what the will of the Senate was because she has obeyed it and because she has not disobeyed it; more especially after the question as to whether the governor had the right to fill the vacancy at the end of Mr. Wadleigh's term in 1879 was raised and it was decided that he had the power.

Mr. President, I hold a seat on this floor. I was elected two years ago last August by the Legislature assembling in June, but my term commenced in the March before. Our Legislature acted upon the idea that the national law as they understood required, and as the construction given it unanimously by the Senate required, that the Legislature to elect, and the only one which could elect, was the one chosen immediately preceding the end of the term.

In a discussion six years ago in Mr. Bell's case the then Senator from Delaware, Mr. Bayard, so recently here and so distinguished when here, submitted his views to the Senate, and upon the question what Legislature has the right to elect in New Hampshire, whether it be the one elected in November preceding the end of the term or the one elected two years and a half before, said:

> By that law—

Having quoted immediately before the national law which I have read—

> By that law was indicated the Legislature and the only Legislature which should fill vacancies in the Senate of the United States, whether occurring by expiration of the term or from any other cause.

That was the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Delaware then, as it had been the unanimous opinion of the Senate only four years before.

Allusion has been made to the supreme court of our State. As I said, there has been considerable division of sentiment in our State, although our Legislature has been very largely in favor of giving the construction to the national law that its plain terms seem to indicate it ought to have, and which the Senate has given to it, and which the seating of Mr. Bell affirmed. The opinion of the court was asked three years ago. My recent colleague and the gentleman who asks a seat here introduced this question into the Senate by a resolution asking the Senate to reconsider and revise its opinion if it was erroneous. There may be found in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which I have here, the opinion of the court upon this question which he cited. The opinion of our court was read by him, and, as I said, it is printed in the RECORD with other opinions. But notwithstanding that, the Senate decided that the national law was too plain to be misunderstood; that it was necessary it should be construed as it had been construed, and refused to render any relief.

Mr. President, I have but little more to say. I am not only asserting the fact, but I have the conviction in my own mind that the clause in our national Constitution which says that "when vacancies happen from resignation, or otherwise," instead of being words of limitation, ought to be construed to have a very different meaning. This is the only branch of the Government where States have an equality, where one State has just as much power as another. The framers of the Constitution were so much in earnest that that should be the fact, that they prohibited any amendment to the Constitution depriving the States of their equality of suffrage in this body. My idea is that when the framers of the Constitution said "when a vacancy happens by resignation, or otherwise," they meant when it happens by resignation, or otherwise, from any cause whatever; that they are words of enlargement and explanation, so that there might not be any doubt upon the question that this body should have equal representation, that there should be equal suffrage on this floor, and that if a vacancy occurred from any cause the executive should have the right to fill it.

Now where do we stand on this question? The Government decided first by the national law, and the Senate has decided upon the McMillan report and upon the admission of Mr. Bell, that the Legislature having the right was the one elected immediately preceding the end of the term. Then they have settled in Mr. Bell's case another question, as to filling the vacancy happening at the end of the term and before the meeting of the Legislature, that the governor had the right to appoint, under which appointment Mr. Bell was seated; and that is precisely the question before us to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say one word, Mr. President, about what is called the act of Congress of 1866. The Constitution provides that Congress may regulate the manner by which and the time at which the Legislature of a State shall elect a Senator. That is all the authority which the Constitution of the United States reposes in Congress over that subject. It says in another place, but in the same connection, that the Legislature of a State shall ordinarily—I am not now on the question of filling vacancies—elect a Senator for a term of six years. It names nothing but the Legislature of a State to do that.

I was here when the act of 1866 passed, but I had just come into the Senate and I gave it no attention; I probably voted for it if there was a division, it being reported by a committee. But I have been of the opinion ever since I came to examine the subject, and I am of opinion now, as I have stated before I think in this body, that the act of Congress in so far as it undertakes to declare what Legislature, whether chosen before or after the expiration of a term or how long before or how long after, shall elect a Senator, goes beyond its constitutional power. I am also of opinion, and I state it deliberately and I believe I have stated it before, that when the Congress of the United States undertakes to create a body to elect a Senator which the constitution of the State has not created and which is not its Legislature, it has gone beyond its power.

By the constitution, I think, of every State in the Union, certainly every one that I know of, the legislative power is vested in two separate and independent bodies, each one of which acts by itself and for itself, and that is the Legislature of the State of which the Constitution of the United States speaks when it says that the Legislature shall elect a Senator. Therefore, I am of opinion that Congress has no more power to turn the two bodies, the senate and house of representatives of a State, formed under its own constitution as two separate bodies of different numbers and of different constituencies, into one consolidated body voting per capita, than it has to declare that a town meeting in the State of Vermont may elect a Senator and call that a Legislature, because it is not by the constitution of the State its Legislature. But that is apart from this question, and I should not have referred to it only that the act of Congress has been spoken of.

Now let us come to the question. First, I will begin with the original Constitution, to which my friend from Missouri has made reference, as he supposes supporting his view of the meaning of the words "resignation or otherwise." In the original draught of the Constitution submitted to the convention, as it appears on page 205 of volume 5 of Elliott's Debates, in the Madison Papers, the third section was:

On the death, removal, or resignation of any Senator, his place to be filled out of the district from which he came.

That was the first draught. The scheme having been entirely changed and abandoned, later on, at page 377, Mr. Rutledge, on the 6th of August, 1787, reported from the committee of detail as follows:

ART. V, SEC. 1. The Senate of the United States shall be chosen by the Legislatures of the several States. Each Legislature shall choose two members. Vacancies may be supplied by the executive until the next meeting of the Legislature. Each member shall have one vote.

There, as it stood in that final report in detail, final at that time but changed afterward, you will see that there was no limitation or qualification or restriction except "vacancies." They might occur during the sitting of a Legislature. Whenever they occurred the executive was to fill those vacancies until the Legislature should elect, not until its next meeting even; but in order to keep the representation of the States full, in order to create a national government which should have all its faculties and all its members in place to perform their duties, this draught reported by the committee of detail provided for a universal filling of a vacancy by the executive, and provided for his filling it if a vacancy happened or occurred or existed, whatever it was, even if the Legislature were sitting.

Now we come to the amendment of Mr. Madison. That draught was under consideration on the 9th of August. Article V, section 1, the one I have read was taken up, and I shall read the whole proceeding in connection, without any observation, so that it will appear just as it stands in these debates:

Mr. Wilson objected to vacancies in the Senate being supplied by the executives of the States. It was unnecessary, as the Legislatures will meet so frequently. It removes the appointment too far from the people, the executives in most of the States being elected by the Legislatures. As he had always thought the appointment of the executive by the legislative department wrong, so it was still more so that the executive should elect into the legislative department.

Mr. Randolph thought it necessary, in order to prevent inconvenient chasms in the Senate. In some States the Legislatures meet but once a year. As the Senate will have more power and consist of a smaller number than the other House, vacancies there will be of more consequence. The executives might be safely trusted, he thought, with the appointment for so short a time.

Mr. ELLSWORTH. It is only said that the executive may supply vacancies. When the legislative meeting happens to be near the power will not be exerted. As there will be but two members from a State, vacancies may be of great moment.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Senators may resign or not accept. This provision is therefore absolutely necessary.

On the question of striking out "vacancies shall be supplied by the executives"—

Pennsylvania, ay, 1; New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, no, 8; Maryland, divided.

Mr. Williamson moved to insert, after "vacancies shall be supplied by the executives," the words, "unless other provision shall be made by the Legislature" (of the State).

Mr. ELLSWORTH. He was willing to trust the Legislature or the executive of a State, but not to give the former a discretion to refer appointments for the Senate to whom they pleased.

On the question on Mr. Williamson's motion, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, ay, 4; New Hampshire, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, no, 6.

Mr. Madison, in order to prevent doubts whether resignations could be made by Senators, or whether they could refuse to accept, moved to strike out the words after "vacancies" and insert the words "happening by refusals to accept, resignations, or otherwise, may be supplied by the Legislature of the State in the representation of which such vacancies shall happen, or by the executive thereof until the next meeting of the Legislature."

Mr. GOUVERNEUR MORRIS. This is absolutely necessary; otherwise, as members chosen into the Senate are disqualified from being appointed to any office by section 9 of this article, it will be in the power of a Legislature, by appointing a man a Senator against his consent, to deprive the United States of his services.

The motion of Mr. Madison was agreed to nem. con.

Thus you will see, Mr. President, that the motive for inserting the words "resignation or otherwise" (which was afterward trimmed down by leaving out on the report of the committee on style the words "refusal to accept;" so as to leave it only "resignation or otherwise") was distinctly stated by Mr. Madison to be, not that you were to classify a kind of vacancies by resignation, but they were put in expressly for the purpose of recognizing the power of a Senator to refuse to hold on to the office to which he had been appointed.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. The Senator will permit me to suggest that would certainly relate to a vacancy commencing at the beginning of a term.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So it would. There never was any question in the debates in the constitutional convention but what it was of the highest importance, the very purpose of the Constitution which provided two Senators from each State, that each State should have all the time, whenever this body met, its full representation, not only for the general benefit of all the people but sometimes, as was then thought, for its own security, for the preservation of its own rights.

I think, therefore, that this language of Mr. Madison and the action of the convention clearly show that the argument of my friend from Missouri is a mistaken one in supposing that the introduction of the word "resignation" was for the purpose of giving a class, one of a kind of events that might happen, on the occasion of which the executive might act and not otherwise; because Mr. Madison states the purpose to be exactly the other thing, by putting in one of the words of that kind and then putting in the word "otherwise," to make it clear that a Senator had a right to resign his place, and then, in order to carry on the whole operations of the Government according to the Constitution, providing that the executive, if the Legislature were not sitting, should fill it until the Legislature met.

There was nothing otherwise in the whole discussion, I repeat, from beginning to end; and as the draught originally stood it went to the extent, as every Senator will see, of authorizing the executive to fill a vacancy which happened when the Legislature itself was sitting until it did fill it; and the only motive stated for the change, which they all agreed to unanimously, was to put in some one word that would affirm and recognize the right of a Senator to resign his place, and then to provide that the State should not go without being represented.

Now let us come to the Constitution just for a moment, and I shall have done. The Legislature shall elect for the term of six years. That is the power given to the Legislature.

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years.

If you stop there and give it a literal construction, not looking to the purposes of the Constitution—to have a full Senate—there would be no power in any State Legislature in this Union to elect if they allowed the time to go by so that when they elected they could not elect under the Constitution for a term of six years. They must elect for a shorter term; they must in New Hampshire; they must in the hundred cases almost which have happened, when the Legislature has failed to make provision in advance, so that the election was for six years. Nobody maintains any such proposition, because it defeats the object the Constitution had in view, which was that each State should have two Senators. Now, we come to this language about the executive, and see where we are upon the construction of my friend from Missouri:

And if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill—such vacancies.

The very ones that are named in the preceding line. Therefore, if the authority of an executive is only to fill a vacancy which occurs by resignation or death or expulsion—the only three ways that I can think of, because a refusal to accept does not create a vacancy, it leaves the old vacancy just where it was—if that is the meaning, then the only authority which is left to the Legislature is to fill the very vacancy that the governor had a right to fill temporarily and no other. So if the governor of New Hampshire at this moment has not the power to fill this vacancy, by the very same sign and on the very same words the Legislature of New Hampshire when it meets next June can not fill it even, for the Constitution says in language as plain as words can make it, that the vacancy which the Legislature is to fill is "such" vacancy, that is, a vacancy which occurs by resignation or otherwise, that the executive of the State may fill if it happens during the recess of the Legislature. We can not stand on that construction; nobody pretends that we can.

By what authority of logic or law is it then that we hold that the very same words three lines before limit the power of the executive to a particular class of cases, and that the very same words three lines afterward expand the power of the Legislature to every kind of vacancy that may exist. "That won't do," to use a phrase of a late eminent Senator of this body. We can not stand on it.

We hear much of the word "otherwise." If Mr. Madison by proposing or the convention by adopting the words "resignation or otherwise," had meant to classify a series of cases like resignation, why would not Mr. Madison, eminent in his knowledge of the English language and clear in its expression, have said "likewise?" That is the adverb which would suit the class of cases to which my friend from Missouri refers. "Other things happening in like manner" is the definition of "likewise," while "otherwise" means things happening in any other manner than by resignation. That is the dictionary and the common sense and the universal knowledge of everybody who knows the English language.

What was the object of the Constitution? It was that the representation of each State should be full, and the Constitution provided two means of keeping it full. First, by the Legislature for the full term electing in advance before any vacancy occurred. That would provide for all that. Then both the executive and the Legislature, after a vacancy did happen at a time when the Legislature was not in session, could fill it then and there, by providing that instantly the governor in the first instance and the Legislature at its next meeting should fill up that vacancy so as to carry out the great objects of the Constitution.

Wherefore, then, upon any principle of patriotism, or law, or justice, should we endeavor by construction to narrow down the franchise of a State, if I may call it that, and endeavor to find some class of cases where for some period of time a State shall go unrepresented? I am unable to see it; and this report of the debates in the convention shows clearly to my mind, and I think even to that of my friend from Missouri and my friend from Delaware, that the word "resignation" was not put in with the object that my friends think it was, but for an entirely different object, as was stated by Mr. Madison himself.

This question was fairly debated when the gentlemen on the other side were in a majority in this Chamber. Without a party division, gentlemen on both sides voting according to the light they had and not dividing upon party lines, settled this identical question. The Senate in sitting upon such a question sits as judges. The Constitution says so. We are not defining policies; we are not setting up expediencies; we are not carrying on party warfare; we are sitting as the solemn judges sworn to try and determine the election and qualification of a gentleman who presents himself to be a member of this body. We have come to a decision, just as the Supreme Court of the United States sitting two hundred feet from us comes to a decision in a great variety of cases where the judges differ—five one way four another or whatever it may be, a difference of opinion. The decision of the court is announced. What would become of that court if the next time a similar question came up the whole thing was opened again and the contest was gone over repeatedly from year to year and time to time in order to see which should get in the ascendency upon all questions? Nothing would be settled, and the court would be destroyed, and justice too, for that matter.

How is it different here? When we have come to a decision, even in a case of doubt, having come to it fairly, not in a time of party heat, or by a party vote—when we, after full deliberation, have come to a decision which carries out confessedly the objects of the Constitution to keep the representation of a State full, should we not stick to it; or are we, every time a similar question comes up about elections, to reverse our decisions, retry them, hold them of no force, and thus keep this body continually in a turmoil over questions of representation in it that come from the States? However doubtful it might have been—it did not seem to me so, to be sure, but however doubtful it might appear to the minds of gentlemen who voted in the minority—it appears to me that, once decided and decided in favor of representation, it would be better to follow that as an established precedent which carries out the objects the Constitution has in view.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I think the Constitution of the United States on this subject is mandatory upon the States and requires them to exercise a constitutional function in the choice of a Senator. I do not believe that it was the purpose of the Constitution in organizing this Government that the Legislatures of the several States should have no higher duty to perform than merely to fill up vacancies; and yet we find that the Legislature of New Hampshire under existing circumstances regularly, every four years or every six years, engages itself only in filling up vacances. What will take place in New Hampshire in the month of June when that General Assembly meets? They will there exercise only that part of their power under the Constitution which is described in these words:

> And if vacancies happen by resignation, or otherwise, during the recess of the Legislature of any State, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature, which shall then fill such vacancies.

That will be precisely the action which the Legislature of New Hampshire will take in June if we decide that the governor of New Hampshire has the right now to make an appointment for the beginning of this Senatorial term. By our concession to what I may term a sort of peculiarity or idiosyncracy in the conduct of New Hampshire in respect of this great office we are indulging in a course of procedure which deprives that State really of its essential power under the Constitution of the United States, which is described in that instrument as follows:

> The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof, for six years.

Obviously it was the grand purpose of the introduction of that feature into the Constitution that the Legislatures of the States should choose Senators for the period of six years, but under the course of procedure in which we are indulging here in regard to New Hampshire we are cutting that State off or permitting herself to be cut off from this great leading constitutional function of choosing Senators by her Legislature for the full term of six years, and confining that State entirely to the exercise of the other power of filling up vacancies which may have occurred in the Senate. That reverses the whole order of procedure, as is clearly manifest from the face of the Constitution, and we are permitting that Legislature to subordinate its functions, its representation of this one of the States of the American Union to a very low class of powers as compared with that great power of choosing a Senator for a full term.

What is the next effect which is to be produced? What did we witness here six years ago on this same subject? When a Senator is chosen from the State of New Hampshire in the month of June he comes here with a commission which, if it is not actually antedated, is in effect antedated, and he is held to be and to have been a Senator from New Hampshire from the 4th day of March, 1885, for the period of six years. His pay account will be rated in that way; and the Government of the United States is thus taxed with the burden of a Senator from the 4th day of March, 1885, until such time as the Legislature of New Hampshire may meet in June, for we can not deny that that Senator when he comes here is the Senator elected for the full term.

Mr. PIKE. The Senator from Alabama will pardon me for saying that where a Senator is appointed, the Senator elected receives pay only from the time of his election. Where there is no Senator appointed, it is otherwise.

Mr. MORGAN. That I understand, at all events, to have been the rule, and I do not see how we could well deny it, for we do admit that although the Senator has been chosen after the lapse of several months from the 4th day of March, 1885, yet he is the Senator chosen by the Legislature for the full term; and it has become so arranged in our country as that the full term commences on the 4th day of March. The full term that is claimed by the former Senator from New Hampshire did commence on the 4th day of March. It is running on. We can not enlarge that term by having the Legislature elect a Senator in June, neither can we abridge it by having the Legislature elect a Senator in June. The one then elected will be the man chosen by the Legislature to hold that office for six years, and he will not get his six years unless his commission or his right, in some respect at least, dates back to the 4th day of March.

Suppose, as I very freely concede it to be true, that it is the duty of the Senate of the United States to keep this body always full as far as it constitutionally has the power to do it; grant that that is one of the highest duties of patriotism resting upon the Senate, still we can only fill up the Senate through the agencies appointed by the Constitution and in the manner appointed by the Constitution. I will add further that we can only fill up the Senate in the manner fixed by law. We have prescribed in the act of July 25, 1866, the full procedure for the election of a Senator of the United States, and in that act, section 16 of the Revised Statutes, it is provided as follows:

> Whenever on the meeting of the Legislature of any State a vacancy exists in the representation of such State in the Senate, the Legislature shall proceed, on the second Tuesday after meeting and organization, to elect a person to fill such vacancy, in the manner prescribed in the preceding section for the election of a Senator for a full term.

That is the duty, which we make mandatory, of the Legislature of New Hampshire and of every State in the Union where there exists one of the cases provided for by the last branch of the second clause of section 3 of the Constitution, which relates entirely to filling up vacancies that have occurred after the commencement of the full term or during its progress.

Suppose that it is a very high duty to keep this body full, we ought not to violate our statutes nor ought we to violate the spirit of the Constitution even in order to accomplish that great result. We ought to follow it, and it is the duty of the Legislature or the government of New Hampshire to reform and to change its laws or its constitution if need be so as to conform its action to the mandatory requirements of the Constitution of the United States.

How long is this question to be one of debate and vexation in the Senate of the United States? When are we ever to get rid of it? When is there to be a cessation of this controversy? Senators do not change their opinion upon constitutional laws, particularly when they are sitting as judges, merely through the influence of precedent. Every Senator who enters this body for the next fifty years to come, if this question remains in the precise attitude that it is now, must form his impressions upon the whole subject from his understanding of the Constitution of the United States and his oath to support it; and here we are to have this question brought back upon us from time to time.

It has been very frequently suggested that this might be remedied. The honorable Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] who now occupies the Chair put the very pertinent inquiry whether it is not in the power of the governor of the State of New Hampshire now to call the Legislature together for the purpose of solving this question, so far as that State is concerned, by an election. I apprehend it will be found on an examination of the constitutions of the different States of the American Union that there is not one which is at any period of time without the possession of an organized Legislature competent to elect a Senator of the United States. I surely have not heard of a State which at any moment of time has been so deficient in political organization as that it had no power to elect a Senator of the United States.

If any nice question arises as to whether the word "chosen," in the fourteenth section of the Revised Statutes, applies to a Legislature organized or to one merely selected by the people, we perhaps could remove that by legislation of Congress, by some explanatory act, but it seems to me that there is no reason for hanging upon the meaning of that word in the fourteenth section of the Revised Statutes, which reads:

> The Legislature of each State which is chosen next preceding the expiration of the time for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress shall, on the second Tuesday after the meeting and organization thereof, proceed to elect a Senator in Congress.

There may be a Legislature chosen in the State of New Hampshire to-day, chosen in every sense, but there was one chosen there two years ago or more which is to-day in every sense a Legislature until the new body selected has been organized into a Legislature. This statute, as I understand it, has not reference to the legislators who are chosen, but to the Legislature which has been chosen and organized according to law. So there must be in the State of New Hampshire a Legislature now organized which has the capacity to elect a United States Senator, or else there must be legislators chosen there who may be so organized as that they can elect a Senator of the United States. In either event where is the duty resting? Not upon Congress, to be continually trimming back and forth upon questions of this kind and having these disagreeable issues thrust in upon the Senate as the judges of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its membership, but upon the State of New Hampshire, which ought to provide by law, if it has not already done so, in order that this question may be solved.

We are informed that the supreme court of the State of New Hampshire, on being requested by the Legislature to render an opinion on this subject, affirmed that it was the duty of the Legislature chosen before the 4th day of March of the year in which the decision was rendered to provide for the election of a United States Senator. Why not allow the Legislature and the authorities of New Hampshire to follow that decision? Why not sustain them in that rational, logical, and constitutional view of this question?

Mr. DAWES. The Senator will allow me to say that the constitution of New Hampshire does not provide for the meeting of its Legislature until next June. How can that Legislature provide by law, as the Senator suggests? The Congress of the United States has attempted to say that that Legislature is the one to elect, and that the Legislature shall elect at its first meeting, and the constitution of New Hampshire says its first meeting shall be next June.

Mr. MORGAN. My understanding of the decision (I once looked at it, but I have not read it recently) was that the Legislature which was in existence as an organized body in the State of New Hampshire had the authority to elect, although there might have been one chosen last November which had not been organized and would not be organized until June.

Mr. DAWES. I may have misunderstood it.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the Senator has misunderstood it.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the decision to be as between the new Legislature and the old one, which should choose the Senator. I understood the decision to be that it must be the new Legislature.

Mr. MORGAN. I understood quite the reverse.

Mr. DAWES. I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. MORGAN. It is the old one which the supreme court of New Hampshire has decided was the proper one to make the election.

Mr. DAWES. I say I may be mistaken about that.

Mr. MORGAN. In that view of the case, the supreme court having made that decision and it being a subject over which the supreme court of the State has due authority, the expounding of its constitution and its laws, why should not the State of New Hampshire follow that decision and relieve us of this embarrassment?

If we reaffirm the decision made here six years ago, of course it will only be an inducement to keep up this controversy for an indefinite period of time. I do not know what the political motives may be in New Hampshire for keeping this question afloat in this way, why a Legislature may feel itself bound to decline to elect a Senator when it has full power to do it; but it does seem to me that inasmuch as the question is at least a debatable one, as opinion is divided not on party lines but in respect merely of our construction of the Constitution, a sound policy requires us to reverse our former decision, and to go back to the doctrine that the Legislature which now exists in the State of New Hampshire, and which will not be superseded in its functions until the 1st of June, should proceed to make this election. Then we shall have no further difficulty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the resolution offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB]. If he were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BUTLER (when Mr. HAMPTON'S name was called). I beg to state that my colleague [Mr. HAMPTON] is absent from the Senate on account of illness, being confined to his bed.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 36, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—36.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Allison,	Hale,	Miller of Cal.,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sewell,
Chace,	Hoar,	Mitchell,	Sherman,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Jones of Florida,	Palmer,	Stanford,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,	Teller,
Edmunds,	McMillan,	Platt,	Van Wyck,
Evarts,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,	Wilson.

NAYS—20.

Beck,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Ransom,
Camden,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Saulsbury,
Cockrell,	Jackson,	Morgan,	Vance,
Coke,	Jones of Ark.,	Payne,	Vest.

ABSENT—13.

Bowen,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Voorhees.
Brown,	Dolph,	Harris,
Butler,	Fair,	Hawley,
Call,	George,	Plumb,

So the resolution was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Mr. Blair will come forward and take the oath of office.

Mr. BLAIR advanced to the Vice-President's desk escorted by Mr. PIKE, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will be placed on file.

JOHN C. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Alice C. Underwood, executrix of the last will and testament of Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for the time and expenses of the said John C. Underwood in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Virginia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MILLER, of New York, it was Ordered, That the papers filed with Senate bill No. 83, Forty-eighth Congress, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made.

On motion of Mr. PIKE, it was Ordered, That Z. C. Robbins, of Washington, D. C., have leave to withdraw the papers now on the files of the Senate relating to his claim against the United States, provided he leave on file true copies of the same.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, March 11, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITION.

Mr. FRYE presented a resolution of the Bath (Me.) Board of Trade, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed Spanish reciprocity treaty; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

BACKBONE AND OTHER RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] on Friday last is the business before the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] left last evening for New York, I think to be absent a couple of days, and he desired that the resolution should not be further considered until his return. In accordance therewith I suggest to the Senate that action on the resolution be deferred until Friday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That will be the order of the Senate unless objected to. It is so ordered.

RAILROAD LANDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to offer a resolution, which I ask may lie upon the table for the present in order that I may call it up hereafter so as to make a few suggestions upon it and allow other Senators to do so, and then possibly to ask for its reference.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General of the United States be, and they hereby are, directed, respectively, to take such action as each may deem necessary to prevent any sale by the Atlantic and Gulf West India Transit Company, or by any company or person claiming under them, of the lands described in the act approved May 17, 1856, and entitled "An act granting public lands in alternate sections to the States of Florida and Alabama, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said States," so far as the same lie within the line of said railroads between Waldo and Tampa Bay, Florida, until Congress shall have authorized the same.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table, and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table, and be printed.

ELECTRIC LIGHT FOR SENATE CHAMBER.

Mr. FRYE. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to inquire into the expediency of lighting the Senate Chamber by the electric process, the probable cost of the change, with the comparative cost of maintaining the same, and report to the Senate at the present session.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. I think the inquiry should be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. That committee has always had that subject before it, and has had it this year.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to changing it to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MORRILL. It should go there, of course.

Mr. FRYE. The matter had been considered by the Committee on Rules and a communication had been referred to that committee, but it makes no matter of difference, only it is important, if anything is done, that it should be done at the present session.

Mr. MORRILL. The only difficulty about the matter is to obtain the service at a reasonable price and without the payment of a perpetual royalty. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds have had some negotiations on that subject, and propose to have the Government protected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine modify the resolution?

Mr. FRYE. At the request of the Senator from Vermont I will modify the resolution by substituting the "Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds," when appointed, for the "Committee on Rules," only saying to the Senator from Vermont that it is important, if anything is to be done, that it should be done at the present session.

Mr. MORRILL. I think I may say that a majority of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds are satisfied that the electric light for this Chamber would be better than gas.

Mr. FRYE. Then I will ask that the resolution be put on its passage now as modified.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLISON (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. I have learned very indirectly that there will be a communication from the executive department.

Mr. ALLISON. I am glad my friend is able to speak for the Executive, and I of course withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to adjourn is withdrawn.

Mr. INGALLS (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.). Unless the Senator from Vermont, who appears to have confidential relations with the Executive, has some more definite information, I would suggest that the Senate may either take a recess or adjourn.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no confidential relations with the present administration. The only information that I have was derived from a Republican paper, which said that there would be a large number of communications this morning from the executive department. I thought that we should at least extend the courtesy of allowing the private secretary time to reach us from the executive department before we adjourned.

Mr. INGALLS. I supposed the Executive knew the hour of meeting.

Mr. MORRILL. I have had information also, since the Senator spoke, that the private secretary is on his way here.

At 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m. Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the President's secretaries, appeared and delivered to the Senate several messages in writing.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, March 12, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., of Washington city.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. GEORGE. I present the credentials of E. C. Walthall, appointed by the governor of the State of Mississippi to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar. I ask to have the credentials read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the credentials of E. C. Walthall, appointed by the governor of the State of Mississippi a Senator from that State to fill, until the next meeting of the Legislature of that State, the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of L. Q. C. Lamar.

Mr. GEORGE. If there be no objection, my colleague being present, I ask that he be sworn in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks that the Senator appointed be sworn into office. If there be no objection he will come forward and take the oath.

Mr. WALTHALL advanced to the Vice-President's desk, escorted by Mr. GEORGE, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will be placed on file.

AFFAIRS IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer a resolution and ask that it lie upon the table until the appointment of the Committee on Foreign Relations. After the appointment of that committee I desire its reference.

The resolution was read, and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State of the United States be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate, with all convenient speed, all information in the State Department bearing upon the matter of a rumored attempt by General Rufino Barrios, President of Guatemala, to seize upon territory or destroy the integrity of the republics of Nicaragua, Honduras, San Salvador, and Costa Rica; also to state what precautions are being taken by the State Department looking to the protection and maintenance under existing or pending treaties with the republics of Central America of the rights of the United States thereunder; also to give what information said Department may have of any interference by or participation in the present difficulties in said Central American republics by any European power.

RAILROAD LANDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to call up the resolution which I submitted yesterday and which at my request was laid on the table. I ask that it may now be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General of the United States be, and they hereby are, directed, respectively, to take such action as each may deem necessary to prevent any sale by the Atlantic and Gulf West India Transit Company, or by any company or person claiming under them, of the lands described in the act approved May 17, 1856, and entitled "An act granting public lands in alternate sections to the State of Florida and Alabama, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said States," so far as the same lie within the line of said railroads between Waldo and Tampa Bay, Florida, until Congress shall have authorized the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is before the Senate, and the question is on agreeing to it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to make but a few suggestions in regard to the subject-matter of the resolution. Other Senators who are more conversant with the facts will explain them more fully to the Senate. To precede the few suggestions I shall make I ask to have read a letter directed to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands of the House of Representatives, a copy of which was forwarded to me. As it is short I will ask that it be read as part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

FORT DADE, FLORIDA, February 5, 1885.

SIR: A bill was introduced in the House, during the first session of the present Congress, providing, as you are aware, for the forfeiture of the land grant of May 17, 1856 (11 Stats., page 15), made to the Florida Railroad Company, now styled the Florida Railway and Navigation Company. Owing to the unjust and unscrupulous manner adopted by the company in its dealings with the settlers who have been so unfortunate as to locate upon said grant, the passage of that bill was looked forward to by them with eager interest. But the session passed away, and though many bills of less importance, and which were subsequently introduced, were passed during that and the present session, the one forfeiting said grant has never been called up. This delay on the part of Congress has worked a hardship to myself and hundreds of other settlers upon the grant, a damage to the State and to the United States.

About the 1st of December, ultimo, the company, in the person of one S. I. Wailes, land commissioner for the same, proceeded to dispose of, at public sale, the lands occupied by myself and, as I have stated, hundreds of others residing in this vicinity.

The sale was extensively advertised for weeks in advance, and consequently a large number of speculators with ample means were present to profit by any opportunity that might be offered to their advantage. They had not long to wait.

The first act of the company was to appraise the land at its improved value, and the settler had either to pay for his own improvements, which he had established with great toil and pecuniary cost, or permit his little home, perhaps his all on earth, to pass into the hands of a stranger—a mercenary speculator.

Many of the settlers were too poor to pay the exorbitant price set upon their lands, and many others refrained from purchasing, being so advised by Hon. H. M. Teller, Secretary of the Interior, an extract from whose letter I herewith inclose:

"The company being predisposed to sell to the party, or parties, who could buy in large quantities and pay cash, our worst fears were realized. The actual settler, who, with his small means, could, at the most, only pay a portion down, giving his note for the balance, was no match for the monopolist, with whom he was confronted. As a consequence of this condition of affairs, large tracts of land passed into the hands of parties who have no interest in the soil beyond mere speculation. These lands will be held at a price far beyond their present value, and, consequently, will not be purchased by actual settlers and cultivated for many years to come. This, sir, is what I allege to be not only a great hardship to the settler but a damage to the State, and a damage, and, I may add, disgrace to the United States."

We have urged the Representatives from this State to use their influence in hastening the passage of the bill providing for the forfeiture of this grant; but, with the exception of Mr. CALL's efforts in the Senate, our requests have been ignored. We have petitioned both House and Senate with the same result. Some of our petitions were never presented and some were presented and referred to committees, where they seem to sleep the "sleep that knows no waking." In fact, we have begun to conclude that we might as soon expect to raise the dead by thundering on the iron doors of a tomb as to get Congress to hear us.

Though it is now nearly twenty-nine years since this grant was made, the company has not completed its road, and will not at its present rate of progress for many years to come. There are other companies that would be only too willing to build roads through this part of the State, and without delay; but they are blocked out by this immense grant, and prevented from so doing. Congress should have declared this grant forfeited eighteen years ago; but, instead of doing so, has slept upon its rights.

With due respect to you, sir, and all whom it may concern, I feel constrained to say that it is this dilatory manner of legislating, this trifling with the people's rights and grievances, that is so rapidly increasing their disrespect for and, consequently, insubordination to, the laws. These are matters too serious for Congress to wink at. The Government must expect to reap what it sows. The laboring classes of this country are beginning to realize that it is useless for them to look to or petition Congress for remedial legislation; they are losing their respect for the Government, are turning their backs upon it, and organizing for self-protection. The spirit that rebelled against the "stamp act" and severed us forever from Great Britain still lives, and will continue to live and grow, to the detriment of the Government, unless these evils be remedied, for it is the spirit that rebels against injustice and oppression. If the Government would retain the respect and cheerful support of the people it must remove the evils against which they complain, instead of conniving thereat.

In expressing my sentiments thus plainly to you I have intended no personal disrespect whatever. I would spurn to be embraced in the attitude of a beggar, in this matter, or as one representing the views of such, and have, therefore, endeavored to avoid the use of any dictum that might be so construed. I am asking, candidly, and earnestly, for justice for myself and thousands of others to whom justice is due.

I have addressed my remarks to you because of your stewardship, and because of a hope that you will place them before Congress, for whom they are especially intended. I can not yet believe that there is no power strong enough to cast off this worse than foreign yoke from the necks of the people, and if this matter is placed before Congress in its proper light, it will be strange, indeed, should it refuse to put an end to these outrages upon their rights.

I am, sir, with very great respect, your obedient servant,

H. J. SIMONTON.

Hon. THOMAS R. COBB,
Chairman of Committee on Public Lands,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I appreciate very fully the hazard which a Senator assumes when he undertakes to call the attention of this body, or one of the Executive Departments, or the people, to any of the remarkable chapters in the history of land-grant railroads.

If attention has been given to the letter just read it will be seen that this road is not remarkable. It has the same points of similarity with every other land-grant road. We were told a few days ago that the current of authority is unbroken in the Interior Department to legalize the demands made by these corporations upon the public domain and upon the Government. That is undoubtedly true. That has been the history of the Land Department, of the Interior Department of this Government, for the last fifteen years, and it has been kept unbroken even to the extent of reversing the decision of its predecessor. Occasionally there has been a lucid interval in that Department, and when it has been discovered the next successor was sure to annihilate, to reverse, to wipe out any fair, honest, decent ruling that had been made in that Department; and this railroad is a particular illustration of that fact.

In 1856 was made this grant of land to construct a railroad from Amelia Island, at Fernandina, to Tampa Bay, with a branch to Cedar Keys. Before 1860 the line had been constructed from Fernandina to Cedar Keys, but from Waldo, a point on that road, to Tampa Bay, about one hundred and fifty miles, and where the question now arises as to the public domain and the claims of this corporation, nothing was done for a long time, until 1876. From 1856 to 1876, twenty years, nothing was done. The lands were granted to the State of Florida to be used for this purpose with the condition that the road should be constructed within ten years, and if not that the lands should revert to the Government.

In 1876 application was made to the Department to have the company's claim recognized, but fortunately they met a man in that Department who has proved, as I say, the exception to the rule for the last fifteen or twenty years. Mr. Chandler, of Michigan, was then Secretary of the Interior, and application was made to him to revive this grant; a map was sent locating the road; and Secretary Chandler then plainly, with all the facts before him, with a full knowledge of what had been done, returned this map to the president of that railroad and said:

In this case, however, no title to any particular lands has vested in the State; the grant still remains afloat, and has never attached to any specific tracts of land; and now, after the lapse of twenty years since the passage of the act making the grant, and ten years after the time fixed by Congress for completing the road, the concurrence of this Department is requested in such action as shall for the first time give precision and effect to the grant.

While I do not question the principle established by the Supreme Court in the case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman—

Fortunately he had the fear of that decision before his eyes when he rendered his own decision on this grant—cited by you, that the title which vested in the State of Florida by the grant and definite location of the road could not be divested by the mere failure to complete the road so located within the time fixed by the act, I find nothing in that case to sustain the doctrine that the State retains the right for an indefinite period, and long after the date fixed for the completion of the road, to designate its route and thus give effect to the grant.

The important act of definitely locating the road can only be performed by or under the authority of the State, and it should be done within a reasonable time after the date of the grant, and in all cases before the expiration of the time fixed for completing the road. Failure to discharge this duty should be taken as conclusive evidence of abandonment of the grant.

The completion and operation of the road from Fernandina to Cedar Keys as a single line, coupled with the failure for fifteen years thereafter to designate the line or perform any other act indicating an intention to build the road to Tampa Bay, would naturally be accepted as such an abandonment of the latter portion of the line as would render a former forfeiture unnecessary.

Under all the circumstances, I do not conceive it to be my duty to aid in reviving a grant which has so long remained dormant.

I must therefore decline to receive or approve the map above mentioned, and direct that it be returned to Mr. Yulee, with the information that this Department can not permit the company, after so great a delay, to file a map designating the route of its road.

The letter from Mr. Yulee and map are herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

Z. CHANDLER, Secretary.

The COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

That is one of the bright spots in the history of the Interior Department, and yet I contend that that should give little of glory to that Department. The very next Secretary of the Interior, when application was made to him, reversed this decision, and in that mode they preserve the continuity that they talk about of precedent in favor of this plundering of the public domain by railroad corporations. Who could have believed it? When a man like Chandler, occupying the position he did in this nation, interposed with the power of his Department to check this illegal, this outrageous demand, his successor, Schurz, was not long installed in that office before he was ready to recognize the validity of the grant, and to repeal, to reverse the decision of his predecessor. We were told here the other day that this charmed circle, this sacred circle around which everything revolved, had been continuous and unbroken; they had observed precedents and continued them, and this is the way in which they do it. A decision of Mr. Chandler that would protect the public domain was reversed by Secretary Schurz, and that record of Mr. Schurz preserved the symmetry of the Department; and that sort of dealing with the public lands, I suppose with few exceptions, has continued from the time of Mr. Schurz down to the present day.

Now, what more need be said about this matter? For twenty years the company slumbered and slept; they dared not pretend that preemptors and settlers had not the right to occupy these lands; and then these men had the audacity and the unblushing effrontery to come in and ask—what? That the lands which had been lost by the legal occupation of settlers and pre-emptors should be restored to them within the indemnity limits. Mark, in 1856 land was granted for the Florida Railroad Company to develop that country, the land then probably not worth 10 cents an acre. It was the theory of giving away the land that these men were to invest private capital, that they were to develop the country, that they were to improve the remainder of the land which the Government retained. In the mean time other railroads by private capital or by State aid had built lines in that country.

In the mean time the vigor of the American citizen in the shape of the settler, homesteader, and pre-emptor had gone on and settled on land and made that land valuable, and to-day that land has increased in value from 10 cents per acre to $5, $10, and $15, without any special investment of capital by the company which held this grant. Now they turn in and ask the Government still further to recognize their title to this unearned land and, still further, to give them indemnity lands for what they lost by their own abandonment. For twenty years they slept on this grant, they did no work, they did nothing except to come to the General Government and demand, as it is their wont to do, but fortunately when they first came they found no man who recognized their demand when it was beyond justice and fair dealing and honesty.

This, Mr. President, is all I desire to say in this connection at this time. The Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], who is conversant with all the facts, will give more of the details than I find it necessary or than it is within my power to give.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not desire to occupy the time of the Senate to any great length, but inasmuch as the people of Florida have sent to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] a petition stating their grievances in respect to this railroad grant and asked his interposition in their behalf, I desire to place myself upon record and show to them and to the country that so far as I have had any power I have endeavored to carry the wishes of the people of Florida into effect.

I hold in my hand a petition signed apparently by four hundred citizens of Hernando County, numbering the most respectable in point of character in their occupation and in their influence over public opinion, praying for the forfeiture of this grant, and that the land may be opened to actual entry and settlement. I will ask that the petition, and the names upon it, and also several other petitions to the same effect, may be printed as a part of my remarks.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to that. I object to the names going into the RECORD.

Mr. CALL. Then the Senator from Alabama will only require me to read them. I do not wish to detain the Senate for a moment longer than is necessary.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator may do that if he chooses, but I object.

Mr. CALL. I wish to show the condition of public opinion and the character of the people who are asking for the forfeiture of this land grant.

Mr. MORGAN. It is entirely unusual to put the names of a large list of petitioners into the RECORD.

Mr. CALL. I suppose I can publish anything as a part of my remarks, and the objection will only make it necessary for me to read the names.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator can take the responsibility of doing that of course if he chooses to do it, but I take the responsibility of objecting to its going in by consent of the Senate.

Mr. CALL. I do not hear what the Senator says.

Mr. MORGAN. I say the Senator can take the responsibility of doing that if he wishes, but that I object, and take the responsibility of making my objection upon the ground that it is an improper use of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). The Senator from Florida asks that he may be allowed to have printed, as a part of his remarks, the petition to which he has referred, with the names attached. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Senator from Alabama interposed an objection just a moment since.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Did the Senator from Alabama object?

Mr. MORGAN. I did.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition had not been stated by the Chair. The Senator from Florida can read the petition himself, if he desires, there being objection, or the question will be submitted to the Senate whether the clerks shall read it, just as the Senator from Florida chooses.

Mr. CALL. I hope the Senator from Alabama will not put the Senate or me to the inconvenience of reading a paper which has no interest to them but which will have a very great interest to the people of Florida.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. MORGAN. We have just as much reason for printing every petition which comes to the Senate as we have for printing this petition. I have seen petitions here with 10,000 names on them, and it surely never has before been asked that any petition should be introduced into the RECORD, printed at public expense, and circulated throughout the country, containing merely a brief statement of grievances and a vast list of the signatures of private individuals. I regard it as an abuse of the privileges of the Senate to do it; I do not wish to do it, and I do not wish it to be done without objection. I have merely stated my objections, and of course the Senator can take his course.

Mr. CALL. I do not know whether I have a right to have it printed or not without unanimous consent. I will ask the Chair if I have a right to have it printed by a vote of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida has a right to read whatever he chooses as a part of his remarks, subject to objection as the reading progresses.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator from Florida will permit me, I suggest that he be allowed to read the petition, stating the number of petitioners without reading their names, and he can then state the character of the petitioners, which I think would answer the same purpose.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this is an old and controverted matter in the State of Florida. It covers a large part of the most valuable portion of that State. There is a great deal of feeling there upon the question, and the people wish to know why it is we have not asked for the forfeiture of this grant. I desire to show precisely what the people want, but I do not wish to read seven or eight hundred names here, and delay the Senate by reading the names of persons they will never hear of again. I think the objection of the Senator from Alabama is altogether unreasonable; however, I will pass on for the present. There is one of these petitions opposed to the forfeiture of the grant, and I desire also that the names of those persons and their standing and reputation should be shown, and their influence in the community; and I shall read those at a later period of my remarks. The objection of the Senator is altogether out of place. I am only desiring to vindicate myself and my colleagues, and to show that we have endeavored to carry out the wishes of a majority of the people, including men of property and influence.

This grant was made in the year 1856 to the State of Florida. It was made shortly after the grant of the swamp and overflowed lands. The swamp and overflowed land grant, of which there have been nearly 20,000,000 acres, I believe, selected and approved to the State, was conveyed by the State to trustees for the purpose of sale, and the application of the proceeds of sale to the payment of the interest upon certain bonds which were authorized to be issued for the construction of railroads in that State. Under that act 700,000 acres of land are certified to have been granted by the State to this railroad company, then chartered to build the road to Tampa Bay.

The grant which is now referred to was made in 1856. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, the publication of which I ask unless the Senator from Alabama interposes a similar objection, shows that there were 1,100,000 acres of land granted in addition to that granted by the State to this road for its construction. The act was limited, as the other acts, to a construction of the road within ten years. The ten years expired in 1866. While the branch road had been constructed before 1860, the main line from Waldo to Tampa Bay remained unbuilt, and no part of it was constructed until somewhere about the year 1878 or 1880. It was nearly fourteen or fifteen years after the expiration of the grant before anything whatever was done in reference to the construction of the road.

I ask leave here to print the reports of the Secretary of the Interior on this subject and the correspondence of Hon. David L. Yulee with that Department, and other documents relating to the subject, as a part of my remarks.

At that time a company claiming to be the assignee of the Florida Railroad Company entered upon the construction of the road, but the same persons were connected with it as were connected with the old company. What their interest was is unknown; but I hold in my hand a notice which has been sent with this petition, by which certain creditors of the road in 1856 have interposed by process of law through the courts of the country to prevent the sale referred to in the resolution of the Senator from Nebraska, claiming that their debts are yet unpaid, and that they are a lien upon the land granted and earned under the act before 1860. (See Appendix.)

So it seems that this railroad company, whoever they may be is unknown, but represented by the same parties, the same officers, have yet unpaid obligations which they ignore, and that these lands are being sold and the proceeds applied in a manner which is unknown to any one whatever, except that since 1880 the construction of the road has been commenced and is being continued to Tampa Bay, having been completed about sixty miles; but in the mean time these petitioners allege that two other lines of road have been built through that territory without any grant of land—the South Florida Railroad and the Florida Southern Railroad—and that the land has become immensely valuable, that the population has increased from 40,000 to nearly 500,000 in the State, and that the lands, which were worth less than the Government minimum price and would sell for nothing within the ten years limited for the completion of the road by the act of Congress, are now worth from $2 to $25 and even $50 an acre, and that actual settlers have gone upon them and improved them with valuable improvements.

There is an opinion prevalent in the country that this body, the Senate, is too far removed from the people to hear their complaints or sympathize with them; that it represents property and corporate power without sympathy with the people or the people's rights. I am anxious that that impression should be disabused. However, I am afraid that it has gained extensive ground with all parties in this country, and while both political parties in the last canvass pledged themselves that the land grants which were not completed within the terms prescribed by the acts of Congress should be forfeited and opened to actual settlement, there has been but little progress made in that direction here.

In regard to this grant, Mr. Chandler, the Secretary of the Interior under the administration of Mr. Hayes, declared that the grant had expired and there could be no reservation of land. So far as the executive department had any authority to decide that question, he did decide it. His successor, Mr. Schurz, reversed that decision, and reserved this large body of public land, being 1,100,000 acres, from actual settlement and entry.

There were upon the land at that time hundreds of families, who had entered upon it as the public land of the United States and made homes and settlements upon it. Those settlers were recognized in their rights and the railroad company were required to relinquish in their favor, but the people continued, under the pressure of immigration, to enter upon the land, and large numbers of settlers have entered upon the land since that time under the belief that as no road was built previous to 1866 the title to the land was really in the Government and that they had a right to enter upon the lands and have them opened to actual entry and settlement. The people of the United States have always regarded the public lands as their rightful home and open to them and their families, and I agree with them.

But the agent of this road, a Mr. Wailes, of Washington city, has undertaken to expose for sale at public auction these lands with the settlers upon them, and to sell them and their orange groves and their improvements, and the lands have been bought, as is stated in these petitions, largely by speculators, and they have been deprived of the possession of them so far as such an unauthorized act of sale can deprive them. This is done without the authority of law, without authority of the Interior Department, without any authority whatever except the act of the railroad company itself and the apparent assumption of this citizen of the District of Columbia that the Government of the United States is only an instrument for his individual and personal benefit, and through some manipulation of its clerical force he can dispose of its vast public domain for his personal uses and benefit, leaving the homesteader and actual settler with his family without a home or a roof to shelter them.

Whether those people have or have not a title it is proper that before it becomes complete these acts should be prevented, and they should not be deprived of their homes until the law is settled against them and in favor of the corporation. If Congress have any discretion upon this subject, if an act of confirmation is required, if they have the right to forfeit these lands, it is a duty which they owe to the people who have gone upon them in good faith, that to the extent of protecting them in the possession of their homes the authority of Congress should be exercised. Whether in the interest of the railroad company or in the interest of the people it is entirely proper that no man should be permitted to assume to dispose of the property of the United States at public auction or private sale without the consent of its authorities and of Congress.

The Secretary of the Interior has advised these parties that they had no title and no right to sell, and yet they have gone on to sell, and there is a state of alarm and uncertainty throughout the whole of that country. And nothing illustrates better how little is the authority of Congress, how small is the power of the people and of Congress, when an entirely unknown person can assume, twenty years after the expiration of a grant, the right to sell hundreds of thousands of acres of public lands, the forfeiture of which is being considered by Congress.

It is stated by Mr. Yulee, who at the time the grant was made was a Senator of the United States and president and one of the principal stockholders, as he states in the testimony which he has given and which I have before me, in a suit pending in the United States courts, and which I ask to be printed as a part of my remarks, that this road was built entirely from the proceeds of the land granted by the United States and by the State of Florida, and without any large contribution of money by its stockholders, and it was disposed of without any judicial sale and without any action of any court, and it was bought by the same parties who were the subscribers to or the holders of its stock before the sale. Its debts have been paid by the State of Florida, a million dollars have been paid within the last three years by the State, and yet the property is entirely in the possession of its original stockholders, and those who claim by purchase or assignment from them, and this large grant of eleven hundred thousand acres of land, with the road to-day incomplete, is going somewhere within their control, perhaps into the magnificent estates of these original stockholders and into fine edifices of royal luxury, while the poor man, with his family, toiling upon the ground, a resident of the State, paying taxes, whether from the North or from the South, is turned out of possession of his little homestead under a plea that a naked legal franchise can transfer the property and avoid the obligations of the company and leave the State to pay a million of dollars for its debts; while the debtor can hold the property freed from its debts and be a prince in luxury and social prestige and power, with the United States Government to aid and sustain him; and the Government of the United States is made a party to this transaction. No power can be obtained here, no action on the part of this body, for the protection of these people, while our inaction permits this wrong to be done to the settler, the citizen, the toiler, the man with a family, and to the State.

Mr. President, I desire that an investigation shall be had of these matters. I wish no injustice done to the corporation or to any person whatever; but I desire that this matter shall be inquired into, that Congress shall know where the money came from that built this road, that it shall know where the proceeds of this land have gone. I have before me a report of the treasurer of the State of Florida, which shows that about $40,000 in money, the proceeds of these grants, have been paid to an agent here in the city of Washington—a Mr. S. I. Wailes, the present commissioner of this railroad company—for what is called "adjusting land titles;" and this we all know to be a fraud.

The United States employs and pays its Secretary of the Interior and its hundred officers in the Land Office to adjust the land titles under the swamp-land grants; the State pays its officers; and yet we have here $40,000 in money and tens of thousands of acres of the public land donated or paid to individuals under the phrase of "adjusting land titles," which we know to be a consideration which does not exist. I say, therefore, that it is the duty of Congress to investigate the question before allowing the lands to be sold and the titles complicated, before allowing innocent parties to invest their money or the settlers to be ejected or be forced into a compromise and purchase of land they have a right to enter. I say it is the duty of Congress to listen to the complaints of the citizen, and to take some action upon this subject to prevent the sale of these lands until there shall be some final policy decided upon the subject.

Nearly thirty years have elapsed, as these petitioners state, since this grant was made, and yet we are told under the authority of the decision in Schulenberg vs. Harriman (a construction which it will not bear) that a law mandatory in its character ceased to become a law and to be mandatory because it relates to a grant of property or of land, and that it is in the discretion of some subsequent Congress and not of the Congress that passed it whether its enacting features shall be compulsory or voluntary. In other words, that a grant conveying a present title can not be avoided afterward unless some subsequent Congress shall see fit to so say, and then only sub modo. But the decision of Schulenberg vs. Harriman does not go to that extent. It declares the absolute nullity of the grant, it makes it absolutely void upon the exercise of the power vested in a subsequent Congress of re-entering upon the estate granted. It makes the whole title void ab initio. Now I say that there should be no sales allowed of this property until Congress has finally acted upon the subject.

I do not concur in the reasoning of the Schulenberg and Harriman case, or in the theory that the court has a veto on the power of Congress in the exercise of its sovereign legislative power, and that its laws respecting grants of the public domain are no more than a deed of private persons.

The proposition that a law of Congress, mandatory and absolute, requiring that a grant of land shall be absolutely void if a condition shall not be performed within ten years is obeyed and complied with if the condition be performed within a thousand years, is an evident error without a particle of reason to sustain it. It denies the mandatory character and nature of law. It asserts that a law is "not mandatory until repealed," but that it must be enforced by some future power or authority before it becomes law. It asserts that the law is operative to pass title to the property, but inoperative to establish the conditions on which alone the grantor agreed that the title should pass.

Assuming to reason from an analogy betweeen a law granting aid for certain declared public objects on certain prescribed conditions of which the time in which the object shall be obtained is the essence and an estate granted between private persons for private objects on conditions-subsequent of which time is not the essence, it finds an analogy and predicates a conclusion where none exists between two things essentially and absolutely different in all their qualities; one a private estate, granted for private purposes by private persons with authority to do nothing but attach a condition which can inure to the benefit of no one but themselves, and the other an exercise of sovereign legislative power, exercised as power, mandatory and absolute in its nature, and exercised as a trust which concerns all the people and for objects of a public nature.

It is evident that between the two things no resemblance exists, and that the whole argument of Schulenberg vs. Harriman is predicated on an analogy which has no existence in fact or reason. This the opinion of the court itself recognizes in saying that the granting act is both a grant and a law. If a law, then when it says that if the condition be not performed in ten years the grant shall be void potentially, it can not say that it shall be void if a subsequent exercise of power shall so declare by a re-entry. This conclusion is certainly clear and incontestable and can not be assailed on any ground of reason, and must be true if the law be a matter which concerns and rests in reason and argument.

In the State of Florida, since this act ceased by its own limitation to exist, there has been a vast increase in the value of property. There was not one foot of railroad built between Waldo and Tampa when this act ceased, when the ten years expired. For fifteen years there was nothing done. In the mean time, from every State, North and South, the tide of immigration poured into that State, and into that part of the State, which was exceedingly desirable because of its climate and adaptation to the cultivation of tropical fruit. Villages have sprung up everywhere; the population has become comparatively large; it has increased twenty-fold. Property which was worth not more than a dollar an acre has risen to five, ten, twenty, and even fifty dollars an acre. Other railroads have been built through the country. Now these people ask Congress to consider the question whether the act of Congress granting this land and requiring the construction of the road within ten years means within a quarter of a century afterward, when an entirely different and distinct condition of things exists.

Now, Mr. President, I have no wish whatever that anything shall be done in this matter which the people of the country do not desire. So far as I am concerned, I have no right, except as one of the people, to demand that the State shall assert her rights against this corporation to recover the million dollars it has paid for it, or whether it permits it to increase the private estates of gentlemen who reside out of the State to enable them to live in royal luxury. It is their business and not mine to see that this corporation shall not have these lands and appropriate them to the individual and personal benefit of those who own its stock; but I do wish that every actual settler upon these lands shall be protected by the Congress of the United States and his title secured to him. I do wish, and I shall insist, so far as my humble voice will enable me to do it, that every actual settler who has been sold out by the agent of this corporation shall be restored at the cost of the United States to the possession of his property; and I hope that the Senator from Nebraska will be able to obtain the attention of this body to secure the passage of his resolution at the proper time. I am in favor of protecting the honest laboring men and their families, and securing to them their homesteads at the smallest possible cost. My sympathies are with them, and not with the railroad corporation or the land speculator.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CAMERON. I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. CALL. I am through with the exception that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] desired me to detain the Senate for some time by reading names to the petitions to show that this is the sentiment of the majority of the people of that part of the State. These petitioners say:

SETTLERS' PROTECTIVE SOCIETY,
Lake Buddu, Hernando, November 28.

Whereas the Florida Railway and Navigation Company are now advertising for sale on December 3, 1884 (the sale having been postponed from the 26th of November), all railroad land or at least lands claimed by them in Hernando County as low as the last tiers in township 25; which lands are now or at least the greater portion have been settled upon by bona fide settlers, who have been induced to go on these lands by a circular issued by the railroad company allowing the settler the right of purchase when the same was put on market at Government prices. The railroad now refuse to recognize said circular, also the settler has been informed and believes that the company have no right to these lands, and that the Secretary has refused to issue them a patent for the same; should the Florida Railway and Navigation Company be allowed to sell these lands it will work great injury to the settler and will throw many out of a home, disturbing the peace and quiet of our county and producing innumerable hardships on many of our good citizens.

In view of these facts we keenly feel the need of legislative action taken in the premises by our Congress, and we expect and exhort them to take immediate action in matter, giving the settler all possible relief. Also inclosed circular of notice to purchasers: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we urge our Congressmen to take such immediate action in the matter as will give the settler the right of purchasing at Government prices or homesteading the Government land now claimed by the railroad company in Hernando County.

Resolved, That we send a copy of the proceedings of this meeting to Senator CALL and Congressman DAVIDSON.

J. B. PIXTON, Chairman.
H. C. RENSHALL, Secretary.

Inclosed will find petition, which speaks the sentiment of our entire county.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your petitioners would respectfully represent that by act of Congress approved 17th May, 1856, a grant of land was made to aid in building a railroad from Amelia Island to the waters of Tampa Bay, on the Gulf of Mexico, with the provision that if the road is not completed in ten years the land shall revert to the United States. Near thirty years have elapsed since said grant was made, and the road is not completed.

Under this act a vast quantity of valuable land has been withheld from market, a very great hinderance to the settlement and prosperity of the country.

Your petitioners therefore pray your honorable body that an act be passed, taking effect from and after the 17th May, 1866, declaring said grant forfeited, and the land open to sale and settlement, as other public lands of the United States.

And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

Mr. CALL proceeded to read the names of the signers to the petition. Having read about one hundred names,

Mr. HARRIS. If the Senator from Florida will yield to me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRIS. I appeal to the Senator from Alabama to allow these names to be printed in the RECORD without objection, instead of taking the time of the Senator from Florida unnecessarily in standing up here to read them. I quite agree with the Senator from Alabama in his view of it, but we shall economize time by the course I propose.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not wish to inflict any unnecessary labor upon the Senator from Florida, or to make any infliction upon the Senate to sit here and hear a list of names read. I made the point in this case because I thought the request was not a proper one to make, in view of the public expenditure as well as the consumption of public time. I have not a doubt of the respectability of every man who signed that petition and his right to be heard, and I am entirely willing to print the petition as a public document, but not to circulate it by the United States through the RECORD. It conveys no information to the people of the United States at all. I will, for the sake of the convenience of the Senator from Florida, withdraw my objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I renew it, and I do so because I do not think it is an essential part of any petition that the names of the persons who sign it shall be entered on the record. I make the objection, not because of this particular case, but because if it be the rule that a petition signed by a number of thousands of persons may be inserted in the RECORD we shall find that a good many people will desire to have that done as a means of bringing about a certain degree of notoriety. I beg the Senator from Florida to understand that if this was an ordinary request concerning his convenience I would not interpose any objection; but I think on the whole this is a good time to do that which really concerns the convenience of all of us with reference to matters of this kind hereafter. Of course if there is to be this advertisement of individual persons who sign petitions, then I, in common with all other members of this body, will be under constraint to see that our constituents who petition us about cattle-trails and about land-grant forfeitures and about Oklahoma, and every other subject on which they do petition us, are indulged in the same privilege, and I shall certainly avail myself, if this is to be done, of the opportunity which will be offered to advertise the people of Kansas who put their names to requests of different kinds which they ask me to present to this body.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to say to the Senator from Kansas that while I quite agree with him in the objection to printing in the RECORD these petitions and the long list of thousands of names the Senator from Florida has a right to read them, and they go into the RECORD when read; and the practical question is whether we will compel the Senator to stand here and read that list of names and ourselves to sit here and listen to the reading. It seems to me we had quite as well allow him to print.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not ask any privilege; I stand by my objection; but I will say in reply to the Senator from Tennessee that if the Senator from Florida believes it important that all these names should go in the RECORD, then I think he ought not to object to anything which requires him to read them. And as to the Senate, it never has assumed to have any control over the length of speech any Senator should make; and if the Senator from Florida chooses to make his speech on this occasion a little longer than it otherwise would be by reading these names, the Senate will submit to this infliction as it has submitted to all inflictions of the same kind, from whatever source they have come, ever since I have been a member of this body at least.

I want to say another thing to the Senator from Tennessee. If it is to be supposed or understood that names attached to petitions only go into the RECORD because of the willingness of the individual Senator to whom they have been sent to read them, and therefore use up his time and that of the Senate in reading them, I suppose that generally the people who sign these petitions will not expect Senators to do that; but if they are to go in nem. con., to be entered in a bunch by consent of the Senate, with no requirement to read them, then of course the Senator who gets them will be expected to indulge his constituents in that same rule. I think, therefore, the objection is well taken.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator from Florida yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I appeal to the Senator from Florida to allow this petition with all its signatures to be printed as a document of the Senate, so that it shall not go into the RECORD and swell the volume of the RECORD as every one of these things does. This is only one drop in the bucket I admit; but we have been latterly endeavoring to keep the RECORD diminished in bulk by not printing in it long petitions, by not printing in it names to petitions, and a variety of other things that have come to us. I think the course I propose will answer his purpose as well. I confess that I sympathize with the Senator from Florida in respect of the settlers of whom he is speaking, of whose condition I have heard something myself, but I appeal to him that his object will be attained by having this paper printed as a document.

Mr. CALL. Entirely so, Mr. President, and I should have very much preferred that course, and really thought I was going to pursue it until the interruption was made. I have no desire that this should go in the RECORD, but I have a desire that the people of Florida and those who are interested in these lands shall know who it is that has applied to Congress for their forfeiture and for their being opened to actual entry and settlement. I am entirely content with the suggestion made by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent then—which would not otherwise be in order at this time—to move that this petition be printed for the use of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate hears the request of the Senator from Vermont that the petition referred to by the Senator from Florida shall be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. CALL. With the accompanying documents?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the printing is ordered.

Mr. CALL. Now I shall not detain the Senate any further than to say that the allusion in the letter signed by Mr. Simonton, who is, I believe, the head of a large Catholic colony settled upon these lands in Hernando County from the Northern States, an enterprising and very valuable colony of people, who went there last year, while doing credit to me perhaps as much if not more than I deserve for my efforts in this body, has done injustice to my colleague in the Senate [Mr. JONES] and my colleague in the House [Mr. DAVIDSON], both of whom have been zealous and solicitous for the protection of these settlers and for opening these lands so far as they could to actual settlement and cultivation.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. CALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to ask the Senator whether he or his colleague ever introduced a bill to have this land grant forfeited?

Mr. CALL. We have introduced various petitions, and my colleague in the House, Mr. DAVIDSON, has been, I believe, before the committee there, as I understand, and I have been before the committee here. I am not blaming the committee of the Senate. I know they have been oppressed with a number of applications for forfeitures and bills pending there, but these petitions have been presented and they have been remarked upon by me, and for three years in the Senate I have been urging from time to time some action upon them.

Mr. MORGAN. The reason of my inquiry was this: There were two bills relative to Florida as far as I now recall, the only two that related to land grants in Florida, one, Senate joint resolution No. 130, introduced by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], prohibiting the sale of lands between Waldo and Tampa Bay, Florida, under the grant to the State of Florida to aid in the construction of a line of railroad from Amelia Island to Tampa, Fla., introduced February 18, 1885, very late in the session. The other was a bill introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] June 30, 1884 (S. 2353), to forfeit the unearned lands granted to aid in the construction of the Florida Railroad by "An act granting public lands in alternate sections to the States of Florida and Alabama, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said States" and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

My impression is that that is the same body of land referred to in the resolution now before the Senate. That bill came from Kansas. The Senator from Kansas the chairman of the committee introduced that bill. I have a pretty distinct impression that either one or both the Senators from Florida, pending this bill offered by the Senator from Kansas, made some request of the committee that action upon it should be delayed or deferred until the subject could be looked into by those Senators.

Mr. CALL. I did.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator made that request. After that request was made by the Senator from Florida to delay action on this subject it occurs to me that it is hardly worth while to take up the time of the Senate in a merely executive session, one that in no sense is legislative, to consider a resolution directed to the Secretary of the Interior and Attorney-General that they shall not issue patents or proceed to exercise whatever are their lawful and constitutional functions in respect to these public lands. The laws of the United States as they stand upon the statute-book must be executed by the executive branch of the Government. The President himself, as well as every head of Department, is sworn that he will see that the laws are faithfully executed. They must have an unbiased judgment about a matter of this kind. We confide to them the decision of questions connected with the public lands; and if the laws are of such a character as that they need modification or amendment it is the duty of Congress to do that, and not the duty of the Senate of the United States alone. How can the Senate of the United States pass a resolution of the purport of this one, suspending the operation of a law or directing that the executive officers of this Government shall not execute it until Congress shall have taken a certain line of action upon it?

It seems to me that we are engaged here in the discussion of a topic over which we really have no jurisdiction, for I can not conceive that under a mere Senate resolution the officers of this Government can be instructed with respect to the execution of a law or the manner of the execution of a law. The Senate of the United States has no right to usurp to itself the function of suspending laws or amending laws or requiring that laws shall not be put into execution. I therefore think that this debate certainly can have no purpose in it unless it be merely to enable Senators to express their opinions about the conduct of certain officers perhaps heretofore or their apprehensions about the conduct of officers as it may exist in the future.

I will move, unless there is some further desire for debate about this matter, that the resolution lie on the table. If any Senator desires to discuss it further——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suggested to the Senate yesterday, when I introduced this resolution and asked that it lie on the table until called up for discussion, that I should ask to have it referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I will not object to its reference to the Committee on Public Lands, but it is very obvious that that committee can take no proper action upon it at this session of the Senate. The session of Congress really has not opened in due form according to the laws and the Constitution. This is merely an executive session of the Senate.

Mr. CALL. The Senator from Alabama has referred to a bill introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] on the 30th of June, 1884, a few days before the expiration of the long session of the last Congress. That bill provided for the forfeiture of the lands which are adjacent to and conterminous with the uncompleted portion of the main line of this road. I did ask that that bill should be delayed for examination. The bill provides for the confirmation of the title of this company to all lands conterminous to the road which has been built since the expiration of the grant. I was not prepared, without consulting the people of the State, to commit myself to that proposition.

I have always said to them that I would do whatever the people of that portion of the State desired in regard to this forfeiture, and that if they desired these lands forfeited from the point of Waldo to Tampa Bay, no part of the road having been built within fourteen years after the expiration of the grant, I would vote as the people desired me to vote on that proposition; and therefore I was not prepared to vote for the bill which the Senator from Kansas introduced. I have not made any reflection upon the Committee on Public Lands. I was not disposed to vote for that bill, and did not desire its introduction here until we knew what was the feeling of the settlers and the people of that part of the State.

Mr. President, I have made these remarks because a letter came to the Senator from Nebraska reflecting somewhat upon some of the representatives from Florida here for not having secured action on this subject and because there had been no forfeiture of these lands. The Senator from Kentucky received at the last session of Congress letters and petitions from Kentucky people who have settled there which he brought to my attention. Senators from different States and both sides of the Chamber have come to me with letters of this description from people of their States urging action on the subject, and whatever may be the fate of the Senator's resolution, it was eminently proper that I should show those people that we had not been inattentive to their request, and place upon the record the facts, which would do justice both to ourselves and to Congress.

I do not agree with the Senator from Alabama. I do not think that any grantee has a right to sell these lands where they were not earned before the act expired, where no part of the work was done, no part of the condition complied with. I think no one has a right to advertise and sell those lands as the absolute property of this corporation, thereby taking the money of innocent parties and dispossessing people; if the condition was not performed, Congress can re-enter upon the land, and I have no doubt that Congress has the absolute right to reenter on the land, and to open it to actual settlement, and to protect all actual settlers who may be on it.

I think the Senate has a perfect right, if it sees fit to do so, and if every one thought as I do it would to-day pass the resolution requesting the Attorney-General to prevent by notice or otherwise any further sale of this property, and I do the justice to the late Secretary of the Interior, Mr. TELLER, to say that in answer to a petition of citizens of Florida on this subject, as the correspondence I have referred to will show, he advised them that these people had no right to sell this land. I ask that this correspondence, so far as it relates to this subject, may be published as a part of my remarks.

In 1856, nearly thirty years ago, Congress granted these lands to the State to aid in the construction of a railroad from Amelia Island to Tampa Bay, and limited the time to ten years, after which it provided that the land should revert to the United States if the road was not built in ten years.

The State granted these lands to the Florida Railroad Company, which was then chartered to construct the line of railroad from Amelia Island to Tampa, with an extension to Cedar Keys. Mr. David L. Yulee, at the time this act was passed granting these lands to the State, was a Senator in Congress from Florida, and also one of the principal subscribers to the stock and president of the railroad company to the benefit of which the grant made by the Government inured.

Nearly thirty years have passed. The railroad to Tampa is not to-day built. The ten years expired nearly twenty years ago, and twelve years before a mile of road was built.

The subscribers to the stock of the railroad company for which the grant was made failed to pay their stock subscription and never have paid it, as has been testified by General James Finegan, who was one of them.

Mr. Yulee, the president of the road, makes the following statement in his testimony in the Johnson case:

But I will now say further that it was not expected that the gentlemen composing what was called "The Association" could furnish the means to build the road. It was known they could not. Mr. Cole and myself were probably the most wealthy of the number, and our means were very far short of the requirements of the enterprise. Indeed, there was no capital in Eastern Florida for the purpose. I selected the gentlemen who associated with me on account of the service I thought they could do in promoting my views for securing the construction of a road across the peninsula. It was expected that the charter and stock would be employed in the manner most useful for effecting that purpose.

To produce that end (the construction of such road) was the primary motive. I had been engaged in this object since 1835. I had embarked various parties at different times in its accomplishment, and had obtained for them legislation, in the shape of charters, at several sessions of the Legislature, in 1847, 1848, 1849, and 1850–'51. No interest in these charters was retained by myself or friends in Florida. They were placed wholly in the control and ownership of the Northern parties. No road was made under them. Some of my Florida friends became affected with the belief that the parties I had been treating with accepted the control of the charters for the purpose of defeating rather than constructing a road. At the session of 1852–'53 I procured a new charter and determined to hold its control in the interest of the enterprise. For this purpose the association was organized, and for this purpose so much of the stock as was not subscribed for by others was taken upon the last day by Judge Bronson and myself for the benefit of the gentlemen to be associated with us. They had all previously manifested sympathy and interest in my efforts. After the company was organized under this charter I secured for the company the terminal lands on the Atlantic, which Mr. Law owned, and those at the Gulf terminus, which were controlled by Mr. Parsons and myself. This valuable property was subordinated to the construction of the road for a nominal consideration. I procured also the passage of the "internal improvement act" by the State, whereby a good bonded security for $10,000 per mile, to iron and equip the road, and a grant of alternate sections of State lands were obtained.

I also procured a grant of alternate sections of public lands from the United States. These assets seemed sufficient for the construction of the road. They were all put into the treasury of the corporation and devoted to the uses of the enterprise. They were all by mortgages made primarily appropriate to construction. The means of construction were obtained upon the credit of this property and of the road to be constructed, and not upon the credit of the stock. The only benefit the stockholders could derive would be in dividends of earnings after the construction and maintenance of the road was fully paid. That was the only benefit they allowed themselves to contemplate for a successful result of their labors in securing the great boon to their State of a transit road across the peninsula. The object and spirit of the association is best shown in my letter to Mr. CALL of May 2, 1855, a copy of which I ask to be allowed to append to this answer.

The road was completed, but the disastrous consequences of the war swept the property from the company and extinguished the stock interest. All the assets of the association and of the company, which had proven to be in fact sufficient to build the road, were disposed of and exhausted in the work. The policy of the association practically made those outside of the stockholders, who furnished means in the construction, preferred stockholders to the full extent of the cost of the road. As a means of exhibiting and indicating my own notions and the spirit that actuated me in respect to this enterprise, impeached as they are by the implications in this case, I ask permission to have appended to this testimony an extract from a sworn statement made by me to a joint committee of the Legislature at the session of 1858, years ago.

HOMOSASSA, May 2, 1855.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your two letters of 18th and 25th in regard to the matter with Judge Bronson. I will agree readily to anything that may be agreeable to the rest of you. The fact is, it is with reluctance that we would part with the judge as an associate, and only from the necessities of the case on both sides.

The case stands thus: We embarked in a confidential association, essential necessities in which were unity of design and purpose, personal co-operation and sympathy, and mutual confidence. At the bottom of the whole and pervading the organization was the primary purpose of effecting the construction of a road across the peninsula of our State. Next to this leading purpose, and as far only as compatible with it, we proposed a personal profit to ourselves from the enterprise. This was necessary and useful to the main purpose, because the expectation of profit would serve as a stimulus to labor for the work and encourage the necessary sacrifices of time and capital in its accomplishment; and it was just and proper, because we, whose particular exertions and sacrifices effected the result, had a fair preference to its peculiar pecuniary rewards; the public having the general benefit of a road, with all its enriching effects to the Commonwealth, as much as if the particular profits of the stock came to us or to any others. But still the distinct agreement, and to which all individual profits to ourselves was to be secondary, was that we could, at all hazards, conduct the enterprise to a successful issue by the creation of a road in the State uniting the two seas, and would hold the control of the stock for that purpose until it was accomplished. This involved also a mutual pledge that if it failed of profit and a loss ensued we would mutually contribute, standing by each other in every contingency. That personal profit was to be secondary and ultimate only is shown by the fact that we appropriated the whole fruits of the town and other property to the construction of the road, so that it is only in case the road, after it is made, pays dividends beyond its debts that we desire any benefits, and then surely we ought to, as the originators and conductors of so important and beneficial an improvement. It was also a part of the social compact of the partners that in the event of the death of either the rest would keep in view and protect the interest of the decedent's family.

Now, if the judge could pay up the installments required and due, as the other associates have done, there would be no difficulty at all in the case, because the state of his health would make it our pleasure to carry on the affairs of the company to its best success and best profits, for his advantage equally with our own, without taxing him with any personal service. This would be done in the cordial spirit of the relations founded by our association, besides our previous personal ties.

But how stands the matter? We call for the restoration of the first 1 per cent., which was loaned to the subscribers till called for (I have faithfully regarded this as a loan, and have held myself in law and honor bound for the whole sum to the company, being myself responsible for it), and we also call for something further. Our friend, unhappily, by reason of his protracted sickness, is unable to respond to the demand. We have with great pleasure waited, and no doubt all of us would be cordially content to wait still longer for him to make his services available; or we would make some other arrangements that would be the substitute to us for the amount due by him to the company, so as to relieve him from present inconveniences in providing for the company payments.

But his wishes extend beyond this. He desires to realize a profit now upon his stock before the object of the association is secured. With this view he contemplated a negotiation and sale of one-half his stock to a friend in New York, requiring therefor the payment in full of all installments due upon the whole stock, and an advance of a considerable sum besides, upon long loan, secured by mortgage upon the remaining half.

We desire to gratify him, because we all esteem him, and thus a delicate point was presented for our action touching our private associated relations. So anxious were we to gratify the judge by serving his views that we had at first agreed to let him take the course he suggested, but further reflection and discussion disclosed practical difficulties and discovered the incompatibility of the arrangement with our plan of organization.

The objections that appeared were various, as for instance:

1. It destroys the ability of the association to carry out their fundamental principle of a road at all hazards. To do this we must control the whole stock and possess the interest in the whole. It was in order to secure this complete control and subjection of the whole stock to the original purpose that it was kept in few hands, who were willing to incur pecuniary risks and devote their time to the general object and to subordinate personal profit to the success of the enterprise; or, in other words, who fully sympathized in a common object. After sanctioning its going into market at a premium before the construction of the road is secured, we can not call upon this outside purchaser to sacrifice his investment to our general public purpose. He invested at a premium, with our consent, for profit singly, and with no other motive. We invested for a great public good, primarily, and ultimate profit as incidental and possible only. Our motives and inducements being different, the same rule would not apply to both. Thus to the extent that we let any of the stock go out of the association the fundamental point of partnership is vitally injured, for the stock is a material part of the means for building the road.

Suppose other plans fail, and by paying out the whole stock we can get the work executed, the plan of our association would require us to do it; yet to the extent that any stock has gone out from our control we are disabled, and if this part goes out others may follow.

The practical effect is to dissolve the association, for, when the power to execute the design is gone, the utility and effective life of the body is gone.

2. It would subject us to the inconvenience, and not agreeable necessity, of accounting for our doings to an interest foreign in residence and not sympathetic in motive, and of submitting to be questioned and criticised by parties not participant in our councils.

3. It would impair one of the supports to our individual activity, namely, the consideration that although in what we were individually doing the whole benefit would not be to the actor—it would be shared by special friends. This consideration has had useful influence with me, and therefore, of course, with my associates.

4. It is by no means certain yet that the enterprise is securely established upon a basis of profit. If it proves a loss, the association would suffer the odium of any loss which they had caused to a person buying his way in at a premium; while the matter remains as now organized, the hazards are mutually and voluntarily incurred, and no one can blame the other.

5. If the present contract fails, we have to resort to other arrangements, which may require the control of the stock.

6. It would have a tendency to place the movement before the public as a mere speculation, which would be unjust to the association, such not being the spirit of its organization.

These objections appearing, the first alternative that suggested itself was to see if a sale upon the judge's terms could be negotiated with Mr. Barrett, who, if he became connected with Mr. Bangs, would be in unity with our purpose, as it would be a leading object with him to accomplish the making of the road, or, in default of that, to arrange with the body of the association, and, with that view, Finegan went up with me to see the judge.

When we came to consult over the matter at Saint Augustine two difficulties struck us:

First. That it was impolitic to increase the influence of the contracting party in the company at the present stage of the movement; and, secondly, that after arranging for half of the judge's stock, we might again hereafter, for the same reasons of regretted necessity on his part and the same motive of self-preservation on the part of the association, be obliged to enter into competition for the other half. The necessity to make any purchase at all crippled our means to meet the exigencies of the company, but we agreed to raise a sum sufficient to relieve our friend's pecuniary exigencies as a premium of profit to him, and to take the stock with all its incumbrances of installments and the whole risks of loss in the enterprise, rather than depart from the original scheme of the association, or be subjected to the odium of involving outside parties, if the enterprise failed under our management, or if, in carrying out our main purpose, we imposed upon them a sacrifice to a domestic good which did not enter into the motive of their investment.

These were the considerations that led to the proposal you were requested to confer about with the judge.

Any other form that would meet the views controlling us as an association would be equally as acceptable to me as far as my available means would permit.

Yours, truly,

D. L. YULEE.

GEO. W. CALL, Esq.

The State, through the internal improvement fund, guaranteed the interest on these bonds, and became a paid-up stockholder, and, General Finegan testifies, the only paid-up stockholder of any considerable amount. The railroad was sold in 1866, under the provisional State government, by the provisional officers, without any decree of any court, without any authority of law, and in violation of the express language of the statute. It was bought in the name of Edwin M. Dickinson and associates, and paid for with the bonds of the company, guaranteed, as to their interest, by the State internal improvement fund, which were not due for twenty years, bought for 20 cents on the dollar.

The railroad, one hundred and fifty miles in length, was sold for about $320,000, payable in these bonds, rated at 20 cents on the dollar. The purchaser of the railroad, Mr. E. M. Dickinson, had been before the war purchaser of a contract made by the railroad company with certain of its own directors and principal stockholders, which practically gave these directors, Finegan & Cole, all the lands granted by the State and the United States, also bonds to the extent of $10,000 a mile, with interest guaranteed by the State's internal improvement fund, also a majority of stock, to construct the road from Amelia Island to Cedar Keys. The plan evidently was, according to Mr. Yulee's statement, and it is so testified by General Joseph Finegan, to pay for the stock by building the road with the lands and with the State's guaranteed internal improvement fund's interest, guarantee of the railroad company's bonds, for which the State became a paid-up stockholder.

The result was that the State was the only paid-up stockholder, and instead of the company having as its assets, as the law required, the paid-up subscriptions to the capital stock, also the lands, also the interest guaranteed bonds, it had nothing but the benefits granted by the State and the United States. When Mr. Dickinson became the purchaser of the contract he obligated himself to assume all the debts of the contractors and to complete the road to Cedar Key. This was done by giving not his own but the railroad company's notes for the obligations of the contractors and for the construction of the road to Cedar Keys, which was thus built. Mr. Yulee further states as follows:

I append what I believe to be a full statement of the liabilities incurred by the company in aid of the contractors as well as on its account through my acts.

In my answer, as president, to the confederate district court, in the proceedings there pending under the confiscation act of the Confederate States government, and which are made an exhibit of in the bill of complaint in this case, I made an introductory statement in reference to the notes executed in connection with the contract of construction in the following words:

I said I thought it advisable to specify the debts owing by this company to parties residing in the United States (now at war with this government), which were contracted on account and in behalf of the contractors, Edward N. Dickerson & Company. The obligations of this company (Florida Railroad) were given, but the collateral security, in every case large, was furnished to the company by the contractors, to be placed with the notes as security to the company, as well as the creditors.

The convenience of the company name in these cases was afforded to the contractors for reasons useful to the object of the company, but without any agreed pecuniary considerations.

The notes given by the company in the place of the contractors under this arrangement were as follows:

D. L. YULEE.

It appears, then, from this statement of Mr. Yulee, that the company gave its notes for $630,845.25, debts of the contractors for building the road which Mr. Dickerson, the purchaser at the sale in 1866, was bound to pay—and that this sale in 1866 was made in part to pay the "sinking fund" and the interest on the $764,000 of the company's first-mortgage bonds deposited by the company as a collateral for this debt which Mr. Dickerson was bound to pay, and that Mr. Dickerson instead of paying the $630,845.25 and the interest thereon, becomes the purchaser of the property at $320,000, purchases the bonds at 20 cents on the dollar and pays them in as purchase-money, and becomes, with his associates, the owner of the franchise, not only leaving his debt then and now unpaid, but also leaving the State or the internal improvement fund, which was the only paid-up stockholder, without any interest in the property, and also leaving this cash stockholder and creditor, the State, liable on its guarantee of the Vose bonds on which the State, through its internal improvement fund, in 1880 paid, under a decree of the United States court, the sum of about or near $1,000,000. Yet under these facts Mr. Dickerson and his associates and assigns claim a railroad property worth probably $3,000,000, including a land grant of near 1,800,000 acres, free from all liability to the State.

It is not too much to say that this is a plain and manifest absurdity. There is no such law. No court of last resort would dare to so prostitute their judicial functions as to sustain it. This more than a million of dollars due the State, if no more, should be collected and the money invested in the education of the children of the State and in her institutions of charity; and this great land grant, so far as it was not earned before 1866, should be held first subject to the rights of actual settlers, and it is one of the strangest of all strange things that there should ever have been or should be now any delay or hesitation in those who are charged with the duty of protecting the public interests in thus at least submitting the question to some judicial tribunal of last resort to know whether if the State pays the debts of a corporation with the public money it is not both their right and duty to hold its property liable for the debt; whether if the State was a paid-up stockholder and a creditor in a corporation where there were no other paid-up stockholders, there is any lawful means by which the property and the franchise may pass to the principal debtor and the stockholder who has not paid, by their compromising the claims of other creditors for 20 cents on the dollar many years before they were due, and paying them in as the purchase-money of the property and hold the property worth millions of dollars as their private property and leave the paid-up stockholder to pay a million of dollars of other debts for which its liability continues; whether the State being the grantee of 1,100,000 acres of land granted by Congress for the construction of a railroad between certain points in ten years and the title continuing in her unforfeited, it is right in those who control her public affairs twenty years after the ten years have expired to pass the title of this land to the persons for whom she has paid this million of dollars and who have grown enormously rich out of the property thus paid for by the State, leaving the poor man, the actual settler, to be turned out of his home and improvements by speculators who have bought the land from these debtors of the State and stockholders who have not paid for their stock and who never paid either money or other consideration for it. I do not think so. I think that this is so plain and undeniable that he who runs may read, and that the path of duty and right and public policy is in the defense and maintenance of the people's rights.

The State, through the internal improvement fund, being then and always the only paid-up stockholder, under his contract he became, as I think conclusively appears from a statement by Mr. Yulee, under oath, in the proceedings in confiscation during the war, a copy of which is still extant, a debtor of the company in an amount of something like one million of dollars.

Mr. Yulee, the Senator, and president of the railroad company at the time the grant was made, the president and one of the principal stockholders after the grant was made, and up to the time of the alleged sale to Mr. Dickinson, the vice-president and manager of the property since, as will appear from Executive Document No. 91 in 1880-'81, obtained from Mr. Schurz, Secretary of Interior, the reservation of these lands fourteen years after the ten years' limit of the grant had expired and before any road had been commenced to Tampa, although a contract had been made, as I have been informed, by Mr. Agnew, of Ocala, member of a distinguished and successful mercantile firm, to grade and cross-tie the road from Waldo to Ocala out of his own means and to take payment from the freights on the road.

In the report of the treasurer of the internal improvement fund of January, 1882:

Estate Vose, assignee J. H. Paine	903 00

It is thus seen that the State of Florida has paid about $1,000,000 on the capital stock of the Florida Railroad Company and in the payment of its debts—that it was really the only paid-up stockholder; that it paid the Vose debt within the last two or three years of about $1,000,000, which was for the iron on the road.

The State and the United States gave the lands, guaranteed the interest on the bonds, paid it, paid its debt for the iron in 1880–'81, yet the State has nothing, and there has never been a suit or judicial inquiry into her rights, and the subscribers for the unpaid stock hold all the property, and nearly twenty years after the expiration of the grant are selling the lands at high prices and dispossessing the settlers and their families, the poor men of the country. The commissioner, one S. I. Wailes, of Washington city, of whose acts these petitioners complain, seems to have assumed as railroad commissioner, as he terms himself, to control the State of Florida, to appropriate her revenues, and to dispose of the public lands of the United States without authority of Congress, without even the authority of the Commissioner of Public Lands or the Secretary of the Interior.

As an evidence of the necessity of some inquiry by Congress as to who this railroad company is composed of, what disposition is being made of the proceeds of the grants, as to whether they are being used for the purposes intended by Congress, as to whether they are being used to oppress and injure actual settlers and the citizens of the State, whether these proceeds are being invested in princely mansions and supporting in regal style those who have paid nothing while the creditors remain unpaid, I read the following items from the report of the treasurer of the internal improvement board—the following statement of sums of money paid Mr. S. I. Wailes as State land agent for getting patents under the acts of Congress, which the secretary is obliged and required to carry out, and in regard to which there is no possibility of rendering any service, or doing anything whatever more than to say to the secretary or commissioner what the law now says and what everybody knows, and to do which two Senators and two members of Congress are here with power and authority:

Besides this large sum of money, I am informed that large grants of land have been made to Mr. Wailes as an alleged compensation for inducing the Secretary of the Interior to do what the law requires him to do, and what he will be subject to impeachment for not doing, and what no agent can render him any aid in doing.

The same commissioner, as appears from the letter of Hon. W. D. Bloxham, late governor of Florida, which will be published as an appendix to these remarks, has been demanding the payment of more than $60,000, being nearly the whole amount of money recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs to reimburse the State on account of its expenditure in suppressing Indian war hostilities, on the plea of services rendered in inducing Congress to make the appropriation. Every Senator here, and especially the distinguished Senator from South Carolina, General HAMPTON, who made the favorable report, well knows that we never saw his face here, that he had nothing whatever to do with the action of the Senate, and that he rendered no service of any kind.

Mr. President, I have made these statements in order that the people may know and Congress may know the facts as they appear in these papers and that it may be known that I shall do all in my power to induce Congress to protect the actual settlers on these lands, to prevent these grants and the proceeds of these sales from being invested outside of the State and accumulated in enormous fortunes for the benefit of individuals and not for the public good.

I am informed by the following letter of the Commissioner of Public Lands that the Florida Railroad has 300,000 acres of land, earned before the war by the completion of the railroad to Cedar Keys in 1860, and that its trustee has just made application that this land should be certified to the assignees of the Florida Railroad Company; and Mr. Samuel Swan, a well-known and reputable citizen of Florida, for a long time the representative of the Florida Railroad Company, has been appointed State agent to make the selection and receive the certificate.

Mr. President, there is living in this city a venerable gentleman nearly 85 years of age, who is dispensing a princely fortune in beautiful charities. The Louise Home, the Academy of Art, with many donations to education and religion, will bear his name to posterity with honor, and we may hope will obtain for him the crown of a happy immortality. This gentleman has held for many years the unpaid bonds of this Florida Railroad for a large amount, for which he has in vain up to this time sought payment. But it seems as if those who control it could defy creditors, and that even the Government of the United States is to be made a party to such action as will accumulate this vast land grant of 1,100,000 acres into the private estate of those who have contributed nothing in money to the purposes for which it was granted.

I shall oppose all such action as will interfere with the use of this land by actual settlers. I am willing that titles of persons who have bought in good faith should be protected in limited quantities, and I should like to see such legislation as will be just to the railroad company, to its bona fide owners, to its creditors, and to the State and the people, and such as will open to the light of day and a fair judicial investigation these transactions. It seems strange that in a country governed by law a case should exist where stockholders who have not paid for their stock should hold the property against the stockholders who have paid for their capital stock—debtors who have not paid their debts should hold the property against the creditors, and that a naked franchise shall be held valid to transfer rights to the property emancipated from all the obligations of the company without any judicial decree, and that this should be sought to be done by the artful manipulations of Congress and the Departments of the Government, and that the great powers of legislation in Congress should be made the convenient tool and ready instrument for such ends.

I have no right to say here whether the State should hold this property and this grant responsible for the large sums of money which she has only recently paid for its debts; but I have a right to say that her honest poor laboring citizens, who have gone upon this land and are making happy homes upon it, shall be protected and secured in their homes so far as my vote and voice can accomplish it.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 19, 1885.

SIR: In reply to yours of the 15th instant, requesting to be advised as to "the number of acres claimed by the Florida Railroad Company and its alleged successors," you are referred to Senate Executive Document 90, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, wherein upon page 25 "the estimated number of acres granted for the entire road" is given as 1,171,200.

Of that quantity, and on account of that part of the main line of said road from Fernandina to Waldo, and of the entire branch line from Waldo to Cedar Keys, completed within the time fixed by the grant of May 17, 1856, for the completion of the entire main line and branch, it is estimated that the State would be entitled to 595,200 acres, of which 290,183.28 acres have been certified to the State for the benefit of said Florida Railroad Company, leaving 305,016.72 acres as the estimated amount due the State on account of that part of said line and branch completed within the statutory period, and 576,000 on account of that part of the located line of said road from Waldo to Tampa, now said to be in process of construction.

You also ask as to "the number of homesteaders who were on said lands whose right to the same was contested by the assignees of the Florida Railroad Company, and the number of appeals taken by Mr. Willard to the Secretary of the Interior." Presuming that by "the assignees of the Florida Railroad Company" and "Mr. Willard" you refer to the same parties, namely, the Atlantic, Gulf, and West India Transit Company and their successors, the Florida Transit and Peninsular Railroad Company, you are advised that neither of said corporations has antagonized the claims of settlers whose entries under the homestead laws have been admitted to record, except for the determination of the rights of said companies under the act of June 22, 1874.

That question having been finally settled in favor of the company by the decision of the honorable Secretary of the Interior under date of January 30, 1884 (see Senate Executive Document 91, Forty-eighth Congress, first session), no appeals have since that date been taken by said corporations.

Very respectfully,

N. C. McFARLAND,
Commissioner.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL, United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1885.

SIR: In yours of the 19th instant you ask when application was first made for the certification to the State of Florida of the 305,076.72 acres shown by my letter of the 19th instant to be still due under the grant of May 17, 1856, on account of that part of the Florida Railroad and its branch completed within the statutory period, namely, that portion of the main line included between Fernandina and Waldo, and the entire branch extending from Waldo to Cedar Keys; in all, one hundred and fifty-six miles.

In reply you are advised that, under date of the 17th instant, the first application for the certification of said lands was made by Samuel A. Swann, esq., as a duly accredited agent of the State of Florida. I inclose herewith a copy of Mr. Swann's letter and of my reply thereto.

What proportion of the 500,000 acres certified to the State under the internal improvement act of September 4, 1841, lies within the limits of the withdrawal made for the benefit of the Florida Railroad Company can not be ascertained without such a thorough examination of the records of this office as would occupy a considerable clerical force for many days.

This office has no knowledge of the disposition made by the State of Florida, under the State internal-improvement act, of the lands granted by the act of Congress of September 4, 1841. Your queries in regard to swamp and overflowed lands will be the subject of another communication.

Very respectfully,

N. C. McFARLAND,
Commissioner.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1885.

SIR: Replying to yours of the 17th instant, you are advised that no withdrawal or reservation of lands has been made by this office, nor has any selection been made by the State of Florida on account of the deficiency of 305,016.72 acres supposed to exist as the estimated amount due the Florida Railroad Company, or its successors, under the grant of May 17, 1856, and on account of that part of the railroad constructed by said company within the period fixed by said act for the completion of the entire line.

The withdrawals made in 1856, reaffirmed in 1857 and again in 1881, are in full force and effect to-day, and the lands covered thereby are reserved for the satisfaction of the grant in its entirety.

No lands have been certified to the State of Florida for the benefit of said railroad company since 1858.

As regards action that may be taken by you to secure an early certification of lands on account of the deficiency above stated, you are advised that lists of selections of lands inuring to the grant, made up from the records of the local office at Gainesville, must first be filed in this office; but under the instructions of the honorable Secretary of the Interior (see Senate Executive Document 91, Forty-eighth Congress, page 87) no action can at present be taken by this office looking to the certification of such lists.

In compliance with your request, a certified copy of your appointment as agent for the State of Florida—original filed with your letter of the 17th instant—is herewith inclosed, the fee for said copy and certificate being $1.30, which you will please remit.

Very respectfully,

N. C. MCFARLAND, Commissioner.

SAMUEL A. SWANN,
Agent for the State of Florida, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 17, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to present herewith a certified copy of my appointment by the circuit court, fourth judicial circuit of Florida, as trustee of the Florida Railroad, in lieu of James T. Soutter and John McRae, both deceased.

Also copy of my further appointment, by the United States circuit court, northern district of Florida, as receiver of the real property thus far acquired by, and to be acquired, for the benefit of said Florida Railroad and its assigns.

And also my appointment by the governor of Florida as special agent, to apply for and acquire, in the name of the State, any and all lands that may be found due to the aforesaid road, or its assignees, under the grant of lands made by the United States to the State of Florida for the benefit of the said Florida Railroad, by act of Congress approved May 17, 1856; and, more especially, to ask the certification of the 305,016.72 acres found due upon the 155 miles of completed road from Fernandina to Cedar Keys.

As my stay in the city is very limited, may I ask that you inform me by Thursday evening next, if it is possible to do so in so short a time, the number of acres, both on the main line of road from Fernandina to Tampa and also on the branch to Cedar Keys (stated separately) that have been withdrawn from entry, reserved, or selected as indemnity on account of the deficit of 305,016.72 acres found due as above stated on the completed branch road?

Also, if any lands selected on account of said deficit have as yet been certified by your Department; and if so, what quantity and to whom have certified lists, if any, been delivered.

And, if no part of the 305,016.72 acres have as yet been certified to the State, if you will kindly inform me what further action, if any, should be taken by myself, or the railroad company, in order to promote an early certification of the lands.

I have copy of Senate Executive Document No. 91, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, embodying all correspondence touching the grant to the Florida Railroad and the action of the Interior Department upon the same, to the date of Secretary Teller's report, February 7, 1884, and now only desire to be advised of what further action has been taken looking to the reservation, indemnity selections, and certification of lands for the benefit of the road from Fernandina to Tampa, with branch to Cedar Keys, but with more special reference, as before mentioned, to the 305,016.72 acres found to be due on that portion of the road completed in 1860.

Respectfully,

SAML. A. SWANN.

Honorable COMMISSIONER GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, in the course of some investigation the Committee on Public Lands were making of the general question of the forfeiture of what are described as unearned land grants, this grant to which the Senator from Florida has referred in his speech and which is the subject of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Nebraska came under partial consideration, and enough was elicited to lead me to think that the committee ought to have more full jurisdiction with a view to at least a possible action forfeiting the grant. For that purpose I introduced on the 30th day of June, 1884, a bill, which I will ask to have printed in the RECORD, Senate bill 2353 of the Forty-eighth Congress. If there is any objection to printing it I will read it at length. It is a bill forfeiting so much of the grant as had not been earned by the completion of the railroad.

The bill is as follows:

A bill to forfeit the unearned lands granted to aid in the construction of the Florida Railroad by "An act granting public lands in alternate sections to the States of Florida and Alabama to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said States," and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all lands, excepting the right of way and lands for stations, heretofore granted for a railroad from Amelia Island, on the Atlantic, to the waters of Tampa Bay, with a branch to Cedar Keys, on the Gulf of Mexico, by an act entitled "An act granting public lands in alternate sections to the States of Florida and Alabama to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said States," approved May 17, 1856, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which are adjacent to and coterminous with the uncompleted portions of the main line of said road embraced within both the granted and indemnity limits, as contemplated to be constructed under and by the provisions of the said act of May 17, 1856, and acts and joint resolutions subsequent thereto and relating to the construction of said road, be, and the same are hereby, declared forfeited and restored to the public domain, and made subject to disposal under the general laws of the United States as though said grant had never been made: Provided, That the price of the lands so forfeited and restored shall be the same as heretofore fixed for the even-numbered sections within said grant.

After the introduction of this bill, and as my recollection now serves me on the morning on which I introduced it, the Senator from Florida who has just taken his seat came to me and said to me with some particularity that he did not think it was proper to then proceed to forfeit the grant for some reasons which I do not now remember the full scope of, but which were satisfactory to him; and I thought he rather seemed to suppose that in introducing the bill myself I was interfering in a matter which was personal to the State of Florida, which might properly have been left to the consideration and to the initiative of the Senators from that State. I got the impression very decidedly from that conversation, as I did subsequently, that the Senator from Florida did not think the committee was in possession of facts to enable it to go ahead properly and forfeit this grant, but that it was a thing which ought to wait until he and his colleague were able to devote attention to it. That is the reason why the bill was not formally considered by the committee subsequently.

This being a matter personal to the State of Florida, I can conceive that there might have been reasons, from the standpoint of the State in regard to the completion of this road, which might have been presented with a great deal of force to the consideration of the Committee on Public Lands and of Congress, and which might have had the effect possibly of inducing Congress to let this grant remain. But this whole proceeding is in the nature of a reflection upon Congress for not having done something heretofore; and it seems to me that it is proper that the facts should be understood and that it should be brought to the attention of the Senate that those who have represented Florida here have not heretofore deemed it of sufficient importance to do anything of a practical character toward the forfeiture of this land grant. The practical thing is not to introduce a resolution, which is absolutely as futile as a Pope's bull against the comet would be, because there is no constraint that Congress itself or the Attorney-General or the Secretary of the Interior can possibly exercise on this railroad company to prevent it selling land. It can sell any property if it chooses so to do; that is to say, it can execute a paper for that purpose, and I do not know of any power to prevent it from doing that. No court can do that, no court can enjoin one man from proceeding to sell the property of another. That thing goes on by design or by mistake all the time.

This company, according to the theory of the Senator from Florida, does not own these lands, and yet it is proposing to sell them. Who gets any title by reason of that sale, and who is harmed by reason of it, and whether harmed or not, who can prevent it? If there is any power anywhere to do so it resides in the courts of Florida to proceed by injunction to prevent the company from doing this or any other act which they are seeking to do under their corporate franchise. Therefore it seems to me that if the Senator from Florida really designed to accomplish something practical in this matter, he would do it a great deal more effectively if he would simply introduce a bill, and if he would then go before the Committee on Public Lands and ask them to consider the bill upon the facts which he should present in support of it, in order that it might be reported to the Senate and thereby put the thing in shape to be developed in some practical way.

The committee has had a great deal to do, has endeavored to do something, but it would have been glad to have done more. If the Senator from Florida had presented a plain case, which he assumes now to exist in regard to this particular land grant, I do not know of any reason why the committee would not have reported this bill favorably. Certainly if it was not considered in the committee, it was because I at least, and I think other members of the committee also—the Senator from Alabama has spoken for himself—believed that the Senators from Florida did not think the time had arrived when Congress ought to proceed with propriety to forfeit this grant.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, there is no authority for the opinion of the Senator from Kansas, nor for that of the Senator from Alabama, or for the statement that either of the Senators from Florida failed to take such action as was proper for the forfeiture of this grant. The State of Florida has never in its capacity as a State taken any action upon this subject; in this direction consequently there was nobody to apply for it except the people along the line of road. In 1880, for the first time, the application for the reservation of the land formally was allowed. We were not aware what was the popular sentiment there, whether they desired the grant to continue or not, until these petitions began to come in. In 1880 I presented a petition, and made some remarks upon it, from Hon. John T. Lesly, a member of the senate of the State of Florida from that section of the country, and from the people, and I had their petition referred to the Committee on Public Lands, praying for the forfeiture of this grant.

It was signed by a comparatively small number of persons. I have followed that up at every session of Congress, and there have been no bills of forfeiture passed except those which came from the House since I have been here. I have presented these petitions which I have read here at the last session of Congress and at the preceding session of Congress and have referred them to the committee. I have alluded to the bill referred to by the Senator from Kansas introduced late in the session. It is a bill of confirmation of the title of this company, and not a bill of forfeiture. While I made no reflection upon the Senator from Kansas or the Senator from Alabama, I was not prepared to say, and I am not now, that to confirm the title of the State and of this company to all the land between Waldo and the point where the road is now completed would be acceptable to the people of the State. I have done everything except the introduction of a bill, which was not at all necessary, because the committee could just as well have considered the case on the petitions which were presented and referred.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, March 13, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

BACKBONE AND OTHER RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution introduced by the Senator from Nebraska, which was postponed until to-day.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the resolution may lie on the table until the committees shall be appointed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the resolution will lie on the table for the present.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, since I voted on the question of the admission of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] the other day, and made some remarks in opposition to his admission, my attention has been called to the fact that in the Bell case, in 1879, I appear, according to the Journal of the Senate, to have voted for the seating of Mr. Bell, therefore placing me in an inconsistent position on the question. I should not have given any attention to this matter but for the fact that I received a letter this morning from a gentleman who has published a pamphlet, apologizing for the injustice he had done me in following the Journal and so reporting me in his handbook of 1880. The Journal says that on the proposition to admit Mr. Bell I voted in the affirmative, but the RECORD shows that I did not vote at all, and that I stated I was paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], who would vote for the seating of Mr. Bell, and but for the pair I should vote against his seating. I did not pay any attention to the matter when it was first brought to my notice.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator from Delaware will yield to me for a moment I will state that my recollection is exceedingly distinct on the subject. The Senator did me the favor to pair with me on that occasion.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Inasmuch as the matter has been referred to in a book which has been published, and my attention has been called by the author of that book to the fact of his seeming injustice to me, I have deemed it proper on this occasion to state that I was against seating Mr. Bell, and that the Journal is incorrect. I am told by the clerks that it was a clerical error, because the manuscript copy of the Journal shows just as the RECORD does, that I was against seating Mr. Bell.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator was the author of the adverse report.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I may state further that I made the report of the committee, as chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, against the seating of Mr. Bell, and I made an elaborate speech in opposition to his right to a seat. As I remarked, I should have given no notice to this matter except for the fact that my attention was called to it by the Journal Clerk, and I have received a letter from a gentleman who has published the handbook to which I referred, in which he stated that he followed the Journal, and apologized to me in that letter for the injustice he had done me in recording my vote on that question as in the affirmative.

SENATE COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

On Transportation Routes to the Seaboard—Messrs. Aldrich (chairman), Cameron, Manderson, Palmer, Cullom, Gibson, Vest, and Call.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the following constitute the Select Committees of the Senate of the United States for the Forty-ninth Congress:

SELECT COMMITTEES.

To Investigate Condition of Potomac River Front of Washington—Messrs. McPherson (chairman), Ransom, Gorman, Conger, Sabin, Manderson, and Spooner.

To make provision for taking the Tenth Census and ascertaining the results thereof—Messrs. Hale (chairman), Morrill, Sawyer, Wilson, Coke, and Jackson.

To Inquire into all Claims of Citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua—Messrs. Maxey (chairman), Beck, Hoar, and Harrison.

On Woman Suffrage—Messrs. Cockrell (chairman), Fair, Brown, Blair, Palmer, Chace, and Bowen.

On Additional Accommodations for the Library of Congress—Messrs. Voorhees (chairman), Butler, Gibson, Morrill, and Miller of California.

To Inquire as to the Capacity of Steel-Producing Works in the United States—Messrs. Hawley (chairman), Miller of California, Aldrich, Morgan, and Butler.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I respectfully decline to serve upon the Committee on Finance.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio declines to serve upon the Committee on Finance. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to excuse the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HARRIS. I was simply going to suggest that if the Senator from Ohio does not wish to serve, the usual method is to ask the Senate to excuse him, the appointment having been made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it is necessary for me to ask the Senate to be excused from that service; I respectfully decline.

Mr. MORRILL. I hope that no action will be taken upon that question to-day.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask unanimous consent that there be a change made in the constitution of the Committee on Naval Affairs; that I be excused from serving on that committee and that my colleague [Mr. STANFORD] be appointed in my place; and that he be excused from serving upon the Committee on the District of Columbia and that I be appointed in his place. That is arranged between us so as to give him service on more prominent committees than he has under the present arrangement.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not hear the Senator.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I first ask to be excused from serving upon the Committee on Naval Affairs and that my colleague be appointed in my place on that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the Senator from California be excused from service on the committee mentioned by him and his colleague [Mr. STANFORD] be assigned to his place upon the committee?

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER, of California. The other change I request to have made is that my colleague [Mr. STANFORD] be excused from service upon the Committee on the District of Columbia and that I be appointed in his place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is that agreeable to the Senate? If so, it will be done by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BECK. I ask permission to make a statement in regard to the minority appointments on the committees. I am instructed by the committee having charge of filling up the minority places on the committees to say that the retirement of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] from the Committee on Appropriations was at his own instance and request, he believing that in the last hours of the session, when the Senate has to consider the important appropriation bills, his health was not quite sufficient to enable him to do justice to them; and therefore with regret we consented to his being relieved from service on that committee.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

Several messages in writing were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

OCCUPATION OF OKLAHOMA LANDS.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask action upon the resolution which I send to the Secretary's desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate such information as may be in his possession concerning the occupation of the Oklahoma lands in the Indian Territory by settlers, and also what action has been taken by the Executive thereon.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be printed and go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over on the objection of the Senator from Missouri, and be printed.

AFFAIRS IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move that the resolution I offered yesterday in relation to affairs in Central America, and which was ordered to lie on the table, be now referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and it is hereby, continued, and authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to consider the best means of preserving the forests of the public domain, and to employ a clerk at the regular per diem, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday next, March 16.

MONDAY, March 16, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

OCCUPATION OF OKLAHOMA LANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted on Friday last by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate such information as may be in his possession concerning the occupation of the Oklahoma lands in the Indian Territory by settlers, and also what action has been taken by the Executive thereon.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator who offered the resolution is not in his seat, and unless it be otherwise required it will be informally passed over until he comes in.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it lie on the table until the Senator from Kansas comes in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered unless there be objection.

RELATIONS BETWEEN LABOR AND CAPITAL.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to offer a resolution authorizing the continuance of an investigation by a committee; a mere formal resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be directed to continue, with a view to its completion during the ensuing vacation, the investigation of the relations between labor and capital, authorized and directed by Senate resolutions of August 7, 1882, and Febuary 26, 1883, with the same rights and powers conferred by previous resolutions of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let that be printed and lie upon the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish merely to say a word.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri object to the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to its present consideration. I ask that it be printed and lie on the table; but I withdraw the objection until the Senator from New Hampshire can be heard.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator will give me his attention I have no doubt he will withdraw his objection. The investigation is substantially concluded. A like resolution was passed covering the last vacation, but owing to ill health and other engagements as chairman of the committee I was unable to give attention to it. I only desire that there be an extension of the time without any extension of the original work contemplated. The whole has been provided for, and I do not anticipate that it will be attended with any substantial expense. It is merely for the purpose of completing and submitting the final report of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be printed and lie on the table, and I shall look at it by morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator can call it up to-morrow morning. There is nothing pressing about it.

Mr. BLAIR. No; nothing pressing.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the following resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coast Defenses be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a clerk, who shall be paid, at the same rate that the other per diem clerks are paid, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Is that for the present session of the Senate or for the year?

Mr. DOLPH. I suppose it would apply to the present session, as well as for the year; it is for a per diem clerk.

Mr. INGALLS. The resolution had better go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator so move?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kansas moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to suggest that I think the Committee on Coast Defenses is entitled to a clerk under the rules of the Senate, as it is a standing committee. That is all I desired to say. However, it can go to the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. For the purpose of ascertaining the facts it had better go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses and be considered there.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD LANDS IN FLORIDA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] on the 11th instant, which is the unfinished business. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General of the United States be, and they hereby are, directed, respectively, to take such action as each may deem necessary to prevent any sale by the Atlantic and Gulf West India Transit Company, or by any company or person claiming under them, of the lands described in the act approved May 17, 1856, and entitled "An act granting public lands in alternate sections to the States of Florida and Alabama, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said States," so far as the same lie within the line of said railroads between Waldo and Tampa Bay, Florida, until Congress shall have authorized the same.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that that resolution may lie over until to-morrow, and that the Senate consider to-day a former resolution submitted by me in regard to the Backbone Railroad land grant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator proposes that the present resolution lie over until to-morrow. It is so ordered unless objection be made.

BACKBONE AND OTHER RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Now I ask for the consideration of the other resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks for the present consideration of the resolution submitted by him on the 6th instant, which will now be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate whether patents have been issued for the lands granted in 1871 to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg, popularly known as the Backbone, Railroad; if so, for what number of acres, to what corporation or individuals, whose receipt was taken for the same, when signed, whether unusual means were used to hasten the preparation and execution of said patents, whether the clerical force employed worked nights and Sunday so they might be completed before March 4, what day they were ready for the signature of the President, what the necessity for any special exertion to secure the completion and signature before the 4th day of March, whether anything was done to protect the actual settlers in their rights to any of such lands; also, whether previous to the 4th day of March anything was done or written in regard to any other of the unearned land grants the forfeiture of which had been considered by the Forty-eighth Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, the fact that many persons in Louisiana are interested in this question is my excuse for claiming the indulgence of the Senate for a few moments.

If this were an ordinary case, as was stated by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]; if it did not present very exceptional features of hardship to honest settlers in my State; and if it were merely a question between the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company and the Government of the United States, I should leave the defense of the rights of the Government in much abler hands; but being personally cognizant that a great wrong has been done to the people of Louisiana, that an injury almost irreparable has been inflicted upon a poor class of people in that State, I wish to refer to one or two points in this controversy to sustain my protest against the issue of the patents by which the rights of these poor settlers are to be disturbed if they are not to be entirely despoiled of their present homesteads.

In order to understand whatever may be said upon this subject it is necessary to bear in mind two important facts: First, that the Government of the United States made an original grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, known as the Backbone Railroad Company; secondly, that the grant of land was assigned by the Backbone Railroad Company to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, and that the only title which the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company claims is by virtue of that assignment, there never having been any privity whatsoever between Congress and the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, and there never having been any contract of any character whatsoever between them.

If the Government of the United States desired to make an unconditional and a gratuitous donation of these lands to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company contemplating that the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company had accomplished work which the Congress of the United States desired should be accomplished—if, I say, in a spirit of liberality, the Government of the United States chose to confer this beneficence upon the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, that would be a different proposition from the one involved in this controversy. In that case the beneficence would have been conferred by Congress, and in that case, while Congress conferred this grant upon the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, the rights and the interests of these settlers would have been protected by the same act recognizing the claims of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, whereas the present condition of affairs is (and I say it with due respect to the honorable Senator from Colorado) that this beneficence has been conferred by an executive officer of the Government, and thereby these poor settlers have been left at the mercy of this rich railroad corporation; and we all understand the full significance of that statement.

This grant was made by Congress and not by an executive officer of the Government. The conditions of the grant were imposed by Congress and not by an executive officer. Whether or not those conditions had been fulfilled was a question which I shall endeavor to show was properly and was exclusively within the jurisdiction of Congress, and was not within the cognizance of any executive officer of this Government. Congress was the tribunal which all the parties in interest had selected for the adjudication of their rights; Congress was the tribunal to whose judgment all the parties had appealed; Congress was the tribunal which was competent to judge of the peculiar equities involved in this controversy, and yet Congress is not the tribunal which has passed judgment upon these questions and has adjudicated these rights, but it has been done by the order of an executive officer of the Government.

Therefore these settlers have a right to demand, and I demand in their behalf, what is this title which you have set up as a legal and a valid title and a title superior to our own, by which you propose to dispossess us of the lands which we have acquired according to the laws of the United States? Is it a legal title? Is it a title free from fraud? Is it a title that can stand the test of scrutiny and investigation? Is it a title that can be exhibited in a court of justice? That title, you must remember, you rest upon; you claim no other right, you claim no other interest in these lands except what results from the alleged validity and legality of that title

Mr. President, I deny that that title is a legal title. It is true that we have been referred to opinions of the Attorney-General; it is true that we have been referred to the opinion of a committee of the House of Representatives upon this question; but on examining these documents it will be clearly apparent that what I consider and what others consider the most important questions in this whole controversy were never submitted to the Attorney General and were never passed upon by the Judiciary Committee of the other House; and it is for that reason that the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company endeavored not once but repeatedly to have Congress recognize the validity of their claim to this grant of lands. It is for that reason that they made strenuous efforts to have legislative recognition that they had earned this land grant, and it is for that reason that no act of Congress, no proceeding of the two Houses can be shown by which the Congress of the United States, the grantor of these lands—by which the Congress of the United States, the tribunal which had been selected by these parties—has ever by any legislative act or by any joint proceeding given the slightest recognition whatever to the claim of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company to this land.

In my judgment that is not only an illegal but a fraudulent title. It would take too long to review all the proceedings and transactions connected with this land grant. It is a very painful history; it is one that presents features which I hope will never be presented again in the history of this country.

In 1869 the Legislature of Louisiana incorporated the Backbone Railroad Company. In 1872 the charter was amended, but in both of those acts it was specifically provided and made an express condition of the exercise of any corporate power by the Backbone Railroad Company that they should build a railroad on the east bank of the Mississippi River from New Orleans to Baton Rouge. That was, I say, an express condition and an essential condition of the very existence of the corporation. It was created for that purpose. The line of that railroad was located by the State of Louisiana in the act of incorporation. It was not left discretionary to any one, but it is in the proviso of the act, "provided that this railroad company incorporated shall build a railroad from New Orleans to Baton Rouge on the east side of the Mississippi River."

The grant of lands was made by Congress in 1871. That grant became as it were a part of the then charter of the Backbone Railroad. Congress could not increase the powers of that corporation; Congress could not change the location of the road as located by the State of Louisiana in the charter of the Backbone Railroad. If Congress chose to make a donation, it made that donation subject to all the conditions and limitations contained in that State charter.

Now I will ask the Senator from Colorado or any other person conversant with this subject whether either the original grantee or the assignee of the grant has ever built a solitary mile or foot of railroad on the east bank of the Mississippi River? Is it complying with the conditions of the State charter to the Backbone Railroad to purchase or to build a railroad on the west side of the Mississippi River? Had not the State of Louisiana the power to create whatever capacities and faculties it chose with reference to this act of State incorporation; and is it not a clear proposition that whether it was disabled by its charter or whether it was disqualified in any other manner it could not accept that grant from Congress unless it could fulfill the conditions of its State charter? The assignee of this road purchased a portion of a road on the west side of the Mississippi River, and continued to build it to Baton Rouge on the west side of the Mississippi River.

I say that it is a clear proposition in law that the original grantee was incapacitated from accepting this grant from Congress so long as it was not able to fulfill the conditions of the State charter, and the assignee in claiming this grant under the assignment accepted all the incumbrances and all the responsibilities and all the obligations which were imposed both by the grant and by the charter of the Backbone Railroad Company under the provisions of its act of incorporation. The honorable Senator says that this was a condition precedent.

Mr. TELLER. A condition subsequent.

Mr. EUSTIS. A condition subsequent, and that the opinion of the Attorney-General was that the grant vested in the Backbone Railroad Company. But whether it was a condition precedent or a condition subsequent; whether it was a suspensive condition, that is, a condition that suspended the grant, or whether it was a devolvative condition, that is, where the estate devolved pending the condition, what difference does that make so long as the condition exists? The condition must be fulfilled; there is no question about that. Whether it is precedent or subsequent, the condition must be wholly fulfilled. A grant is an entirety. A condition to a grant is an entirety. A man can not partially fulfill a condition and claim any interest in the estate, because the condition is imposed by the grantor. He imposes the condition of the grant and not the grantee. It is his purpose which is to be accomplished; it is his intention which is to be carried out; and whether the grantee chooses to accept the grant or not it is a voluntary act on his part, but if he does accept, then he accepts it subject to all the conditions.

If it be true that the grant is an entirety, if it be true that the condition to a grant is an entirety—and I hope that no one will dispute that proposition—then the grant can not be earned, no part of the grant can be earned, unless the whole of the condition is absolutely complied with and fulfilled and discharged. Therefore I say as to this corporation, the Backbone Railroad Company, whether the condition was precedent or subsequent, whether the condition was suspensive or not, whether the grant was suspended or not by the condition, yet the condition was a condition; it was an essential condition; it was a fundamental condition, and it had to be complied with before property could be acquired, and it could not be complied with because of the incapacity of the Backbone Railroad and of the assignee to build any railroad on the east bank of the Mississippi River.

If it be said, as has been said, that the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company substantially complied with the grant by making the connection between New Orleans and Shreveport, although a large portion of the road was built on the west side of the Mississippi River, I maintain that the acquisition of this land was never made by the Backbone Railroad Company, because the essential conditions of its own charter were never complied with either by the original grantee or by the assignee of the grant.

Again, it is almost incredible that the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company should at this day claim title to these lands by virtue of the alleged assignment. I heard the honorable Senator refer to a great deal of law, to the Attorney-General's office and to the office of the Interior Department, but certainly there is such a thing as the law of estoppel. This very title which the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company sets up to-day, this very title which it claims to have derived from the Backbone Railroad Company, has been denounced by the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company in documents which have been presented both in Congress and in the Interior Department, as an utterly baseless, illegal, and fraudulent title.

The president of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company telegraphed as follows:

No arrangement looking to any recognition of the pretended claims of the Backbone Company will be entertained by my company.

Again, in another telegram, he said:

We now have ability to complete our road without Government assistance, and if our friends can not secure land grant, we must get along without it. My telegram—

Referring to the former telegram—is final.

Mr. BUTLER. Whom is that signed by?

Mr. EUSTIS. It is signed by the president of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company.

The New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company had a bill introduced in the House of Representatives in order to have Congress recognize that it, the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, had earned this grant, and to declare the forfeiture of the grant as regards the Backbone Railroad Company. It represented—what I consider a very important point as a legal question, which has not been referred to by the Attorney-General, which has not been referred to by the Senator from Colorado, but which was urged with great strenuousness by the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, which if recognized, and I believe that it is a good point, would render this claim utterly without any foundation whatsoever—it represented that in 1877 the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, three years before this assignment was made, had repealed the charter of the Backbone Railroad Company. The New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, in its statement to the House committee, says:

This corporation—

Speaking of the Backbone Railroad Company—has forfeited its charter by a failure to comply with the conditions thereof.

As I said in 1877, everybody being perfectly well agreed that the Backbone Railroad Company was a nuisance, that it was a disgrace, that it never at any time or for any purpose complied with a single one of the many conditions of its charter, that it never paid a debt, not even its lawyers' fees, that it never lived for any corporate purpose whatsoever, but was considered the mere skeleton and carcass of a derelict and abandoned corporation, its charter was repealed by the State of Louisiana, the New Orleans Pacific Company having probably urged its repeal; and yet the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company claims by virtue of an assignment by a corporation which itself had declared to have forfeited its charter by failure to comply with its conditions, whose charter had been repealed by the State of Louisiana, as dead a corporation as a corporation can be under any circumstances, stabbed by its enemies and stabbed by its friends.

At that time fierce war was raging between these two corporations, but the New Orleans Pacific Company accomplished its purpose of extinguishing the Backbone Railroad Company entirely; and yet in 1881, by one of the most extraordinary proceedings, I venture to say, which has ever occurred in the history of corporations, this defunct corporation, the Backbone Railroad Company, made an assignment of these lands to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company; and it is under such a title that the patents have been issued to the latter.

Now what were these proceedings? The charter of the Backbone Railroad Company provided that its domicile should be in the city of New Orleans. It was there where all the corporate acts had to be performed. It never had any real domicile anywhere, but it discovered a domicile in the city of New York, and there the assignment was made by what was called a board of directors of the Backbone Railroad Company to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company. The directors of a Louisiana company, a company incorporated by the State of Louisiana, passed in New York a resolution assigning its grant. The resolution does not state how many directors were present or even who were the directors of the company. It has been intimated that there were no directors at all, but they assumed to meet in the city of New York, and by a simple resolution a board of directory assumes to divest its corporation of all its property whatsoever, and to make a voluntary transfer of its property to another corporation.

Some one discovered that that was a barefaced proceeding, that it was utterly illegal, that not even any officer of the Government would recognize such a transaction as that; and in order to give it apparent validity, in order to sanctify the proceeding, there was a meeting gotten up of the stockholders of the Backbone Railroad Company in New Orleans, nearly all of them represented by proxies which were not worth the paper they were written upon, and those stockholders did not transfer or make the assignment itself, but they ratified what had been done by the directors in the city of New York.

Under the law of Louisiana, and I suppose it is the universal law, an act that is absolutely void is not susceptible of any ratification whatsoever. The act in New York by which the board adopted the resolution assigning the lands to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company was radically vicious, it was absolutely void, it had not the semblance of legality.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana what was the actual consideration which passed, or did any consideration pass, between the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company and what is called the Backbone road?

Mr. EUSTIS. It was the large sum of "one dollar," sir. This act of ratification was only done by two-thirds of the stockholders. I have examined the charter of the Backbone Railroad Company very carefully, and I have yet to find by what provision two-thirds of the stockholders could assign the whole property of the corporation, admitting for an instant of time that the act performed in New York was not so absolutely void that it was susceptible of ratification. Two-thirds of the stockholders met in New Orleans to ratify the act. We know that in order to ratify an act you must have the same power as was required to perform the original act. You can not ratify an act unless you have that original power, and yet there were only two-thirds of those stockholders who consented by that act of ratification to the transfer of this property from the Backbone Railroad Company to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company.

What was the consequence? The third of the stockholders who were left out filed protest after protest in the Interior Department denouncing this transaction as a swindle, as a sham, as a fraud, saying that it had been done without their consent, without their knowledge, and without any notification whatsoever to them. The honorable Senator from Colorado may tell me in answer that those protests were withdrawn; but I notice that in the withdrawal of the protests there was not a single one of those stockholders or protestants who recanted what he had said in the protest or who withdrew any one of these serious charges with reference to this transaction. So we have the case of the Backbone Railroad Company, whose title and whose pretensions to this land, and even whose title to exist, had been denounced time and again by the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, which now claims to be the beneficiary under a grant made by this very dead corporation.

Mr. MAXEY. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the Senator's argument, and I wish to see if I understand the drift of it. If I understand the position of the Senator from Louisiana, it is first that the original charter of the Backbone road required that road to be built on the east bank of the Mississippi River; second, that they never built any there; third, that in 1877 the Legislature of Louisiana repealed the charter; and fourth, that the assignment was made subsequent to that repeal of the charter. What I want to know is if the Backbone road by any act acquired any vested right, choate or inchoate, by building or otherwise, prior to the repeal of the charter in 1877. The argument, if I understand it, is that having no right vested in any way whatever the company had nothing to assign. Is that the argument?

Mr. EUSTIS. There was not a single step taken prior to 1881, which is the date of the assignment of the Backbone Railroad Company to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, there was not a single utterance made, there was not a single representation urged, which did not concur in the statement by the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company that the Backbone Railroad Company had never earned the grant, that the Backbone Railroad Company had never acquired the grant, that the Backbone Railroad Company could not have any title whatsoever in these lands by virtue of the grant, and that on the contrary they had nothing but baseless pretensions, and could not come to Congress or go anywhere else and assert a single right or title to any portion of this domain.

Mr. President, in view of the position taken before Congress and the Interior Department by the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company with reference to the existence, to the corporate rights, to the earning of this grant by the Backbone Railroad Company, is it surprising that all the proceedings by which this claim of this dead corporation was assigned, that all the proceedings by which it was claimed that it had an assignable capacity, that all the proceedings by which it is now claimed that that title was acquired and that that interest became vested—I ask in the face of such clear and emphatic contradiction, in the face of such absolute estoppel, is it surprising that there should be a suspicion that these proceedings have not been regular and that the interests of the poor settlers in the State of Louisiana who entered these lands under the laws of the United States, small farmers, black and white, whose complaints I have personally heard, have been sacrificed—I ask is it strange that the accusation should be made that these proceedings have been entirely irregular and in their effects are monstrously oppressive?

I do not intend to detain the Senate any longer. I merely wanted to state the argument rather than to elaborate it. I am glad indeed to know that the Secretary of the Interior under our new administration has suspended the issue of these patents. I am glad to know that he is to investigate this matter, and I hope that in the future, if Congress has not the power yet to effectively assert its jurisdiction over this question, which I do not concede, some power will be exerted. I trust there is power yet residing in Congress to assert its jurisdiction over this question, and that that jurisdiction will not be ousted by any executive officer of the Government. At any rate I hope that now and in the future we have an administration that will be in sympathy with the people and will protect them against the exorbitant demands and merciless rapacity of rich railroad corporations. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Louisiana a question. Did I understand the Senator to say that the constitution of Louisiana authorized the Legislature of that State to repeal the charter of the Backbone Railroad Company?

Mr. EUSTIS. We have a provision in the Civil Code, which has been the law of the State of Louisiana over forty years, that the Legislature of the State has the power to repeal any charter, provided that if upon the faith of a contract any parties shall have advanced money or property to the corporation the State shall indemnify the parties. There was a provision in the charter of the Backbone Railroad Company that this was a contract, and therefore it has been claimed that the charter could not be repealed at the pleasure of the Legislature; but of course a contract imports a mutuality of obligation. The State of Louisiana, I think as a clear proposition, is not bound by a contract unless the party who makes the contract is also bound. This railroad corporation never discharged a single one of its obligations, and therefore the State of Louisiana assumed the power to repeal its charter. I mention that as an open question, which has not been referred to the Attorney-General. There was a case where the question which the Senator from Mississippi asks was submitted to the United States district court as to the effect of the repeal. The district judge decided that the repeal would not operate; but I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company by a public document laid before the House of Representatives represented that that was a manufactured case, and that a fictitious issue was presented by that case, and that both parties to it had a concurrent interest in having the judgment in one way.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I think I can answer the Senator from Mississippi to his entire satisfaction as to the question of repeal. In the first place, when the State of Louisiana chartered the original company it contracted with the company not to modify or repeal the act of incorporation except by its consent. That entered into and became a part of the charter. I have it here and can read it, and will read it. This is an extract:

That the said company shall possess and enjoy the rights and franchises granted to said company by the State of Louisiana in this act and heretofore; and such grants and the engagements herein made——

Mr. GEORGE. We do not hear what the Senator is reading.

Mr. TELLER. I will send it to the desk and have the Secretary read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

By act of the Legislature of Louisiana approved December 30, 1869, the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company was chartered, with a provision that the said company "shall possess and enjoy the rights and franchises granted to said company by the State of Louisiana in this act and heretofore; and such grants and the engagements herein made and entered into on the part of the State of Louisiana shall be deemed to be, and shall be, binding contracts between the State of Louisiana and the said company, not to be impaired, disturbed, or modified by subsequent legislation, except with the consent and on the petition of said company."

In article 447, Code of Louisiana, the general law provides that—

"A corporation legally established may be dissolved—

"First. By an act of the Legislature, if they deem it necessary or convenient to the public interest; provided that when the act of incorporation imports a contract, on the faith of which individuals have advanced money or engaged their property, it can not be repealed without providing for the reimbursement of the advances made or making full indemnity to such individuals.

"Second. By the forfeiture of their charter, when the corporation abuses its privileges or refuses to accomplish the conditions on which such privileges were granted, in which case the corporation becomes extinct by the effect of the violation of the conditions of the act of incorporation."

Mr. TELLER. With this charter, and not, as the Senator from Louisiana says, without any act on their part of corporate authority, the company filed two plats in the Land Office, which was preliminary of course to anything that they might do in building the railroad, having issued a mortgage upon these very lands and put out bonds and sold them in the market. The company had exercised all the corporate authority that such a corporation could exercise except to build and complete its road, which had not been done. The Senator will not claim that there was any provision in the charter which restricted them to any particular time in which they were to build the road. It was a charter of wonderful power. It not only authorized them to build on the east side of the river, but pretty nearly anywhere else in the State that they saw fit. The Legislature of Louisiana did attempt to repeal the charter, and did undoubtedly make that attempt at the bidding and at the request of the subsequent grantee of the original company. There is no doubt that the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company were the moving cause of the attempt to repeal that charter. It was the same company that afterward came here with a petition to have the Congress of the United States recognize the assignment. After the Legislature passed an act to repeal the charter the parties holding the bonds went into the United States court and brought a suit, and the court held that there had been no repeal. The honorable Senator says that is a question which had not been considered when the matter was before the Senate, and when it was before the Judiciary Committee of the House. Did I misunderstand him?

Mr. EUSTIS. I know that the Judiciary Committee of the House passed upon that point.

Mr. TELLER. I understood the Senator to say that nowhere had that been discussed. That very question has been considered every time the subject has been before either the legislative or executive branch of the Government. Every time three questions have been considered: First, the existence of this company, and its right to the lands; secondly, its right to assign; and thirdly, the right of the assignee to take, because even its corporate powers have been attacked by some parties. The New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Company had taken an initial step, had filed its map, had held its meetings as a corporation, had done everything that a corporation is required to do in the beginning, had claimed this property, had executed a mortgage, and put its bonds on the market and sold them. It is true it has been charged that the members of the corporation put in their pockets the money thus realized. That has nothing to do with the question. I do not care how dishonest the original incorporators may have been; they swindled somebody perhaps by selling the company's bonds; but they had asserted the corporate right to put a mortgage upon all the property that their franchise included; and when this New Orleans Pacific Company discovered that it could not get an assignment by legislative action, that it could not destroy the existence of the original company, and could not return these lands to the public domain, then it negotiated, as I stated the other day, with the original company, and at that time everybody in Louisiana (and so far as the record shows the Senator himself was not an exception) wanted the company to take these lands and build the road. Mr. Dodge put on file, and it has never been questioned or disputed, that they had repeatedly declared that they would not build the road unless they could succeed to the grant, either by a purchase or by an assignment or by some legislative action in their behalf.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. EUSTIS. I want to know whether it is not a fact that three parishes of the State of Louisiana protested against this whole proceeding?

Mr. TELLER. That is a fact.

Mr. EUSTIS. Are not those protests alive to-day? I will take for instance the parish of Saint Landry, which is the largest parish in the State of Louisiana, and the parish most interested in this question; I ask the Senator whether he does not know the fact that the police jury of that parish passed a resolution denouncing this whole proceeding, and that the New Orleans Pacific Company sent an attorney there to argue that case before the police jury, and that the police jury heard the argument and refused to rescind the resolution which they had passed?

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to the honorable Senator interrupting me and asking me a question, but I do rather object, after he has had the floor, that he should make a speech in the middle of mine, for I do assert that he does not know any more about this case than I do. I know that the police jury did object. When did they object? Not when this company was raising money, not when this company was being importuned by the citizens of Louisiana to build the road, but after the road was built. That was the time they interposed their objection and sent it here by Mr. Lewis, who was elected to the Forty-eighth Congress. He came here after the election and brought these protests, and filed them after the road was built. Other members of that delegation had been before the Land Office, had been before the Secretary of the Interior who preceded me, had been before Congress, invoking the Department to recognize the assignment, and up to that time there had been no protest from anybody on this subject that I am aware of except the Vicksburg road, which protested against the transfer by Congress of the grant from that company to the New Orleans Pacific.

Mr. President, another suggestion the honorable Senator has made as a new one with reference to the illegality, as he calls it, of this proceeding. There is not a single suggestion in the case, not an idea, which has not been presented both to the legislative and executive departments of this Government. The whole question was presented to my predecessor, who recognized it by sending out a commission to determine whether the road had been built in accordance with the statute or not; it was recognized by the Attorney-General, and the very question that the Senator from Louisiana now raises here as to the right to build on the west side of the river was one of the questions that the Attorney-General specially passed upon, and he declared the right to exist to build this road on the west side of the river. The honorable Senator has not made a single suggestion that has not been made heretofore upon this question, that was not made to the Attorney-General, and every point that he has raised is covered by the Attorney-General's opinion, every point that he has raised has been covered by the opinion of thirteen out of the fifteen members of the Judiciary Committee of the House. I will send to the desk and have read and put in the RECORD the opinion of the Judiciary Committee of the House.

The Secretary read as follows:

[House Report No. 1556, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

EDWARD B. WHEELOCK, PRESIDENT OF THE NEW ORLEANS AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

May 17, 1884, referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany Mis. Doc. 54):

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which has been referred House resolution

No. 232 and the memorial of Edward B. Wheelock in respect to the same matter, beg leave to report upon said memorial as follows:

By act of the Legislature of Louisiana approved December 30, 1869, the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company was chartered, with a provision that the said company "shall possess and enjoy the rights and franchises granted to said company by the State of Louisiana in this act and heretofore; and such grants and the engagements herein made and entered into on the part of the State of Louisiana shall be deemed to be, and shall be, binding contracts between the State of Louisiana and the said company, not to be impaired, disturbed, or modified by subsequent legislation, except with the consent and on the petition of said company."

In article 447, Code of Louisiana, the general law provides that—

"A corporation legally established may be dissolved—

"First. By an act of the Legislature, if they deem it necessary or convenient to the public interest; provided that when the act of incorporation imports a contract, on the faith of which individuals have advanced money or engaged their property, it can not be repealed without providing for the reimbursement of the advances made or making full indemnity to such individuals.

"Second. By the forfeiture of their charter, when the corporation abuses its privileges or refuses to accomplish the conditions on which such privileges were granted, in which case the corporation becomes extinct by the effect of the violation of the conditions of the act of incorporation."

This railroad was known as the Backbone Railroad. It was authorized to construct a road from New Orleans to Shreveport and to Baton Rouge, an intermediate point, upon the east side of the Mississippi River.

By act approved April 30, 1877, the Legislature repealed the said charter (S. Ex. Doc. No. 31, pages 12, 13, Forty-eighth Congress).

The first question presented for consideration is as to the effect of this repealing act. The committee hold it of no effect, because—

First. It was in violation of the terms of the charter, being without the consent and not upon the petition of the company.

Second. Bonds had been issued by the company upon money loaned to it; and in the repealing act no provision was made for reimbursement of money, or for indemnity, as required by article 447 of the code.

On both grounds the repealing act was void and of no effect. And the circuit court of the fifth circuit of Louisiana so decided in the case of Counsellor vs. New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, the record of which may be found in Senate Executive Document No. 31, pages 13-16.

The necessity of settling this as a preliminary question will hereafter appear, as it affects the capacity of the said company to make the deed under which the New Orleans Pacific Company claims.

Congress with a view, as appears by the legislation of the period, to securing a continuous line of railway communication along the thirty-second parallel, from San Diego, in California, to the Mississippi River, at New Orleans, incorporated the Texas Pacific (afterward the Texas and Pacific) Railroad Company by several acts, one approved March 3, 1871, and the other May 2, 1872.

The first of these acts made Marshall, in Texas, and San Diego, in California, the termini of the road (section 1). The ninth section of the act made land grants by alternate sections, twenty thereof in Texas, ten in California, on each side of the railroad, to aid in its construction, &c. The twelfth and eighteenth sections provided for issue of patents to said company upon completion of each section of the road, on the order of the President of the United States to the Secretary of the Interior, upon a report made to the President by a commissioner to be appointed by him, of the full completion thereof as in the act provided.

By the fifth section of the last of these acts, the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company was authorized and required to construct, maintain, control, and operate, or to control and operate any existing road between Marshall, in Texas, and Shreveport, in Louisiana, with privilege to all roads terminating at Shreveport to make and have running connections for business with the Texas and Pacific Company.

Comparing this section with the twenty-second section of the first act abovementioned, by which Congress granted lands to the Backbone Company to aid in its construction to unite with the Texas and Pacific Railway, it is very obvious that Congress contemplated making a continuous chain of railways from New Orleans to San Diego, of which the Backbone Company would furnish one link from New Orleans to Shreveport, the Texas and Pacific another from San Diego to Marshall on its own proper line, and another and final link from Marshall to Shreveport, provided for by the fifth section of the above act of May 2, 1872. This was the ruling idea of Congress—to use its own charter and that of the States of Texas and Louisiana to achieve the great result of a continuous communication from the Mississippi to the Pacific. And in order to make the line available for San Francisco, by the twenty-third section of the above act of March 3, 1871, the Southern Pacific Railroad, chartered by the State of California, was authorized to be connected with the Texas and Pacific Railway, at or near the Colorado River, in order to make the through connection from the Mississippi to the Golden Gate of the Pacific.

Bearing in mind this general purpose, and the means by which it was proposed to attain it, attention will now be directed to the seventeenth and twenty-second sections of the act of Congress, March 3, 1871, upon the construction of which the answers to the questions submitted to the committee depend.

Before proceeding to the interpretation of these sections, it will be well to state certain conceded facts:

1. The Backbone Company never constructed their road at all, nor earned the land grant made by the twenty-second section, and allowed the whole five years fixed for its completion from the date of said act to elapse without doing any work on its line.

2. The Backbone Company, at a special meeting of its board of directors held December 29, 1881, ordered a deed to be made of all the land granted to it by the act of March 3, 1871, to the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company. The deed was made January 5, 1881 (date in deed erroneously recited as January 5, 1880), in accordance with said order, and the act was confirmed by the meeting of its stockholders December 9, 1881. All these facts appear in S. Ex. Doc. 31, pages 21, 22, 23-39, 40, 41, 42. And while some criticism has been made upon these proceedings and their good faith, nothing appears to your committee to impeach their legality. The said deed was duly accepted by the grantee.

3. The New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company was chartered by the State of Louisiana June 29, 1875, and under act of its Legislature approved February 19, 1876, (Sen. Ex. Doc. 31, pages 17-20). By its third article it had power to construct a road from Shreveport to New Orleans, or a point on the right bank of the Mississippi, or from any other points; to obtain and receive by purchase grant from the United States, real and personal property; to purchase from any railroad company its charter, franchises, or property, &c.

4. The New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, after obtaining said deed from the Backbone Company, applied to the General Land Office and Interior Department for information as to the recognition of the validity of the transfer of land to it on the part of the authorities of the United States. The events which led to this may be noted in order.

February 3, 1881. Resolution of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company authorizing its president to accept the grant. On the 17th of February a letter of Commissioner Williamson to Mr. Barnum, president of the Backbone Company, which closes as follows (Senate Executive Document No. 31, pages 23, 24):

"There can be no doubt that when the president of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company accepts said transfer the company will be fully vested with all the right, title, and interest which the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company has in and to said grant."

On the 19th of February, 1881, the New Orleans Pacific Company accepted the grant, and on the 21st of February, Commissioner Williamson wrote to Mr. Barnum, president of the Backbone Company, in these words:

"The transfer by the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company of all its right, title, and interest in and to said grant to the said New Orleans Pacific Railway Company is now complete." (Senate Executive Document No. 31, pages 24, 25.)

These events in their order show that before its acceptance of the grant of lands the New Orleans Pacific Company was careful to be satisfied that their titles would be effectual, and for the reason, which fully appears from the affidavits of G. M. Dodge and E. G. Wheelock, that they did not intend to undertake to build the road along the general line of the Backbone Company without the Congressional land grant to that company as a basis of credit upon which to proceed securely.

Much contention seems to have arisen over the whole matter, as appears in Executive Document No. 13, which ended in the opinion of Attorney-General Brewster, dated June 13, 1882, upon the validity of the assignment. (See pages 52-55.) That opinion held that the Congressional grant to the Backbone Company was legally assigned to the New Orleans Pacific Company, and was a grant in præsenti.

The Attorney-General, however, indicated a distinction of great importance in this connection. Where a grant of land is assigned to a company to aid it in the construction of the road contemplated by the grant, it will avail the assignee as it would have availed the original grantee. But where a grant of land in aid of construction has not been used for the purpose by the grantee, and another company has constructed the line of road, and afterward takes an assignment of the land grant, such assignment will be invalid.

The reason is obvious. The benefit of the grant to the original company is coupled with the duty of using the lands for construction of the road. Any other company which takes the assignment of the lands must take them with the same burden and for the same purpose. They are granted to aid in constructing—not to pay for construction already done. Construction is a condition subsequent annexed to the grant, and it operates upon every assignee of the grant—and his performance of the condition involves construction as incident to his title as assignee; and no construction of the road prior to his title as assignee of the grant can be imputed as a performance of a condition annexed to the grant with which at the time of construction the assignee had no privity. His construction of the road in such case is independent of the grant—has no relation to it—and can in no way be held to be a performance of the condition which will save the grant from forfeiture; for the grantee has not fulfilled it while holding the grant, and the supposed fulfillment by the other party was before any title by assignment.

In this case the Backbone Company, at the date of its deed of assignment of this land grant to the New Orleans Pacific Company, had fulfilled no part of the condition of its grant. The assignee company stepped into its shoes for the land grant and to use it in aid of performing the condition with which it was connected. It took the land cum onere. It would not have borne the burden, except for its buying the benefit. It cautiously inquired whether in construction of this line it would secure as assignee the granted aid from Congress. Supposing it had done so, it claims the aid, and the question remains, is its claim valid, and has it been or can it be forfeited?

To the interpretation of the twenty-second section of the act of March 3, 1871, it is now necessary to proceed. It reads as follows:

"SEC. 22. That the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, chartered by the State of Louisiana, shall have the right to connect by the most eligible route to be selected by said company with the said Texas Pacific Railroad at its eastern terminus, and shall have the right of way through the public land to the same extent granted hereby to the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and in aid of its construction from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, thence by the way of Alexandria, in said State, to connect with the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company at its eastern terminus, there is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns, the same number of alternate sections of public lands, per mile, in the State of Louisiana, as are by this act granted in the State of California, to said Texas Pacific Railroad Company; and said lands shall be withdrawn from the market, selected, and patents issued therefor, and opened for settlement and pre-emption, upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas Pacific Railroad Company, within said State of California: Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act."

The first question in regard to this section is, what does it convey?

Its language is clear—that "in aid of its construction * * * there is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns," so much land.

The case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman (21 Wallace, 44) is complete authority to the point, that these words import a grant in præsenti (see also Railroad Company vs. Baldwin, 103 United States Supreme Court, 426; Grinnell vs. Railroad Company, ibid., 742, 743).

Nor can there be any doubt of the right of the grantee company to assign the land grant. The jus disponendi is incident to the title granted, even if the word "assigns" did not imply such right, as it clearly does (Lewis vs. Lewis, 9 Mees. & W., 664; Bailey vs. De Crespigny, L. R. 4 Q. B., 186; Watson vs. Donnelly, 28 Barbour, 658; Furney vs. Ford, 22 Wisc., 173; Ball vs. Chadwick, 46 Ill., 32).

Whether the grant was absolute, or was upon condition subsequent, or was coupled with a trust enforceable by the grantor, depends upon other words in the section.

It was clearly not an absolute and indefeasible title and free from trust or condition.

The last clause of the section is in these words:

"Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act."

These words are appropriate to the creation of a condition subsequent, on the non-fulfillment of which the estate granted would determine, upon the re-entry of the grantor for its breach. And there is no doubt in this view, that as there was a breach of the condition by the grantee company, the right of the United States to enter is unquestionable.

Before proceeding to discuss the relative rights of the Government and of the assignee company under this view, it is proper to consider the alternative views insisted on for the assignee.

And first, it is claimed for the assignee that the seventeenth section of the act of March 3, 1871, is to be read and construed as affecting and modifying the provisions of the twenty-second section of the act.

That section is as follows:

"SEC. 17. That the said Texas Pacific Railroad Company shall commence the construction of its road simultaneously at San Diego, in the State of California, and from a point at or near Marshall, Tex., as hereinbefore described, and so prosecute the same as to have at least fifty consecutive miles of railroad from each of said points complete and in running order within two years after the passage of this act; and to so continue to construct each year thereafter a sufficient number of miles to secure the completion of the whole line from the aforesaid point on the eastern boundary of the State of Texas to the bay of San Diego, in the State of California, as aforesaid, within ten years after the passage of this act; and upon failure to so complete it Congress may adopt such measures as it may deem necessary and proper to secure its speedy completion."

This section applies expressly and only to the Texas and Pacific Railroad Company. That company was chartered by Congress. Whether it was a grant in præsenti, upon a condition subsequent, to be void upon the non-completion of its road within ten years, or was a retention by Congress of a power to take such steps in the use of the lands granted "as it may deem necessary and proper to secure its speedy completion," is a question which your committee do not think it necessary to decide. It is sufficient to say that there is nothing in the language of the twenty-second section which refers in any such manner to the seventeenth section as to demand its incorporation into the twenty-second section, and that the condition subsequent found at the close of the twenty-second section should be qualified by the words of the last clause of the seventeenth section.

The grant by the twenty-second section was to a corporation chartered by Louisiana; that by the seventeenth section, to one chartered by Congress. Congress had no power, or certainly claimed none, to build the road in Louisiana, provided for by that State's charter. This accounts for the diverse language used in the act at the close of the two sections. Congress could construct the Texas Pacific road, if its chartered company failed to do so. It could not construct the Backbone road if the Backbone Company failed. It could use its own lands to construct the former, it could not do so to construct the latter. Its remedy, in the contingency of the failure of the Texas Pacific Company, was to use the lands granted to do what that company failed to do. Its only remedy as to the Backbone Company was to enter for a breach of the condition, and reinvest its title to the lands granted by the twenty-second section.

The only words in the twenty-second section which place the Backbone Company on the same basis as the Texas Pacific are contained in the clause which gives to the former the same quantity of land as is given to the latter in California, and the clause which provides for the withdrawal, selection, and issue of patents and opening for settlement and pre-emption "upon the same terms and in the same manner and time as is provided for and required from said Texas Pacific Railroad Company within said State of California." These terms, manner, and time are provided for in sections 9, 12, and 18 of the act, and do not relate at all to the contingency of a failure to construct by either company, or to the right of the Government in case of such failure.

There does not seem to be any reason why, if Congress intended to modify the proviso of the twenty-second section by the last words of the seventeenth section, the act should not have so expressly declared, or inserted the terms of the seventeenth at the close of the proviso of the twenty-second section. Not having done so, it does not seem to the committee that any canon of interpretation of statutes either requires or justifies it.

But there is a clause in the twenty-second section which may modify the construction given to the proviso at its close. That clause is as follows:

"And in aid of its construction from New Orleans, &c., * * * there is hereby granted to said company," &c.

And then comes the proviso—

"That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act."

Construing these clauses together, the question may be raised, does this create a technical common-law condition, or does it create a trust coupled with the grant?

In former times this question would not have been permitted. But the disfavor to forfeitures upon breach of conditions subsequent, in modern times, has given rise to the construction that the grant is charged with a trust rather than affected by a condition.

In the case of Wright vs. Wilken, in the Queen's Bench, and affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber (110 E. C. L. R., 232, Camm. Scac., 259), it was held that in a will the words "upon express condition" should be construed to import a trust, and not a condition, upon a view of the whole will, as to the real intention of the testator. And the language of Lord St. Leonards, in his great work on powers (Sugden on Powers, 122), is cited as high authority for the decision. His lordship's words are these:

"And in regard to its being an estate upon condition, we may observe that what by the old law was deemed a devise upon condition would now perhaps in almost every case be construed a devise in fee upon trust, and by this construction, instead of the heir taking advantage of the condition broken, the cestui que trust can compel an observance of the trust by a suit in equity."

If this modification of the common-law doctrine is now sanctioned in cases of devise, in order to effectuate the intention of the devisor, it might well be contended that a like rule should be applied to grants by the Government for great public purposes, and they be held to be enforceable as trusts binding on the grantee and not as conditions upon breach of which forfeitures will result, without securing the public benefit contemplated in the grant.

But conceding that neither of the alternative interpretations suggested are tenable, they are not without their weight in deciding the questions submitted to the committee, if the proviso in the twenty-second section of the act is construed as a strict condition subsequent.

It is undeniable that the condition follows the estate into whatever hands it comes. The assignee takes it cum onere. He is bound by and may perform the condition, in like manner as his assignor.

Any one who is interested in a condition, or the estate to which it is attached, may perform it, and when it has once been performed it is thenceforth gone forever. (2 Washburn on Real Property, second edition, page 10; 2 Crabbe, Real Property, 815.)

If the condition be performed in substance it is sufficient. So if it be performed as near the intent of the condition as can be. (Comyn's Dig., Condition, L. 1.)

And conditions are not favored, nor are forfeitures for their breach. (4 Kent's Comm., 128, 129.)

An entry after a breach of the condition avoids the original title conveyed, and revests the title in the grantor, avoiding all intermediate alienations, for the assignees of the original grantee taken subject to the condition. And it was a principle of the common law that no performance of the condition after the day fixed for it could save the forfeiture from the power of the grantor to re-enter. (2 Cruise Dig., title 13, chapter 2, section 10.)

This rule was prevalent three centuries ago, in respect to bonds in a penalty, defeasible on condition subsequent, whether to pay money or perform a collateral act, to mortgages, and to conditions for re-entry for non-payment of rent by lessees and the like. But that rule is now obsolete in a great degree, and the victims of its rigor are now happily unknown, owing to the beneficent intervention of courts of equity and the action of courts of law in accordance with the just rules of those tribunals.

As early as Langford vs. Barnard (Tothill, 134), decided in 37 Elizabeth, the equity of redemption was secured by the chancery court to the mortgageor, whose estate was forfeited at law for non-performance of the condition at the day.

In 1598, about two years after this decision convulsed the Kingdom by the fierce conflict between the rude common law and the public conscience, a poet companion of Lord Bacon and the lawyers of that day gave to the world a picture of the controversy in the immortal drama of the Merchant of Venice. The hard, unrelenting, and cruel Shylock, the impersonation of the common law, demanded the pound of flesh as his right by forfeiture for the failure to fulfill the condition subsequent within the fixed period of performance. In vain his victim tendered performance. It was too late. The day of grace was ended. No after performance could save the forfeited life. Such was the law maintained by judgment of a common-law court.

Portia, the impersonation of the court of equity, which had just asserted redemption as the right of the victim of forfeiture, put in the plea of mercy to temper the rigorous justice of the law. And ever since that day our jurisprudence has, with the poetic justice so wonderfully dramatized by the great master of the human heart, fixed it as a canon of right, that no forfeiture shall be enforced where the performance of the duty secured by a penalty is tendered in full by the victim of the rigid construction of his contract under the rules of the common law.

This principle has been extended to cases of penalties and conditions to do some collateral act other than payment of money; and where such can be compensated in money, when not specifically performed, forfeitures have been relieved against. (See Peachy vs. Somerset, 1 Strange 477; Sloman vs. Walter, 1 Bro. C. C., 413; the leading cases commented on in 3 Wh. and T. L. C. Eq., 862, 895.)

Nor are these mere creatures of equity; for so far has the equity of redemption been upheld that it is now regarded as an estate in land subject to descent, devise, entail, custody, &c. (Casborne vs. Scarpe, 1 Atk., 603.)

But this is not all. Courts of law, taking the lesson which equity and poetry in the Elizabethan period taught it, administers the same relief from penalties and forfeitures for condition broken in many cases as courts of chancery do.

As early as eighth William III, without statutory aid, the law court, in Downes vs. Turner, cited in Gregg's case (2 Salkeld, 597), stayed proceedings in ejectment by a lessor, who entered for breach of condition to pay rent, upon payment into court of what was due by the lessee, thus relieving at law from a forfeiture arising from failure to perform the condition at the day. (See also Doe vs. Roe, 4 Taunt., 883.)

Mr. Justice Wilde, in speaking for the court in the cases of Atkins vs. Chilsm (11 Metcalf, 112), and Sanborn vs. Woodman (5 Cush., 36), reviews the English cases on this point, and confirms the doctrine, that a court of law will stay the hand of the grantor who seeks to enforce a forfeiture upon one who tenders in court the performance of an already broken condition.

The legal right, therefore, of one who has incurred a forfeiture by breach of condition subsequent to relief against an unwilling adversary, upon a substantial performance after the day, at law and in equity, and undoubtedly in the latter forum, can not be denied.

But one other point remains to be considered. After breach of the condition subsequent the estate does not determine ipso facto, but only at the election of the grantor by re-entry. And, therefore, if the grantor after such breach accepts performance of the condition tendered by the grantee, he waives the forfeiture, the condition is gone forever, and the estate becomes absolute.

In Dumpor's case (2 Coke, 119; 1 Smith L. C., 15) we find the basis of this principle. In Goodright vs. Davies (Cowper, 803) Lord Mansfield says: "Cases of forfeiture were not favored at law; and where the forfeiture was once waived the court would not assist it." (See also Ward vs. Day, 116 E. C. & R., 337; Doe vs. Birch, 1 M. & W., 402; Croft vs. Lumley, 85 E. C. & R., 648; S. C. Camm. Scac., ibid., 682; Jackson vs. Barman, 7 Johnson, 227, and other cases cited in note by American editor.)

Ludlow vs. R. R. Co. (12 Barbour, 440) is a case where a railroad company failed to construct road within time prescribed by the plaintiff in a grant of land to it. It proceeded to do so afterward, under the eye and without dissent by grantor. It was held to be a waiver of the forfeiture.

The facts already set forth with sufficient fullness satisfy your committee that the substantial fulfillment of the condition has been met by the assignee company; that it was done under the eye of, and was accepted by the executive department under the provisions of the law of Congress; that all which Congress contemplated in making the grant has been realized, and that it was done by the company on the belief of having secured the grant, a belief based upon the assurance of the Department of the Interior, and upon the official action of the President of the United States in the examination of the work as it progressed, in his sanction of its sufficiency under the law, and in his order for the issue of patents for the land.

After all this the question is, can—and if it can, ought Congress to forfeit the land grant to this assignee company? Your committee think both branches of the question must be answered in the negative.

But, more specifically, your committee answer the first question propounded by the memorial in the affirmative; the second under the case stated in this report in the negative; and the third in the negative; though under the view taken in this report that question is immaterial.

All of which is respectfully submitted, with the resolution of the House hereto annexed, and with the said memorial herewith returned:

[H. Res. 232, Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, April 21, 1874.

Read twice, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELLIS introduced the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution directing the Judiciary Committees of both Houses to inquire into and report upon certain legal questions involved in the proposed forfeiture of the land grant of the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, assigned.

Whereas the Government, by the twenty-second section of the act of March 3, 1871, gave to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company of Louisiana a land grant in the following terms, to wit: "And in aid of its construction from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, thence, by the way of Alexandria, in said State, to connect with the Texas Pacific Railroad Company at its eastern terminus, there is hereby granted to said company, its successors and assigns," &c., the land grant mentioned therein: "Provided, That said company shall complete the whole of said road within five years from the passage of this act;" and

Whereas said grantee did not build said road or any part thereof; and

Whereas said grantee did bargain, sell, convey, and assign all of its right, title, and interest in and to said grant, on the 5th of January, 1881, to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, which company did build and complete said line of railroad "from New Orleans to Baton Rouge, and thence, by way of Alexandria, to the eastern terminus of the Texas Pacific Railroad," at Shreveport, in November, 1882, and said road has been surveyed and accepted by the railroad commissioners appointed by the President as built in accordance with the design of Congress, and patents for said land grant were ordered to issue by the President; and

Whereas bills providing for the forfeiture of said grant have been introduced in both Houses of Congress and referred to the Committees on Public Lands; and

Whereas the Public Lands Committee of the House were and are substantially and equally divided on the question of said forfeiture; and

Whereas there are involved in said question grave and serious principles of law, which should be investigated and settled by the law committees of both Houses, in order to enable Congress to arrive at a just and legal settlement of said principles: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Judiciary Committee of each House be required to consider the legal questions involved in the proposed forfeiture of the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, assigned to the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, and especially to report within ten days their opinion—

First. If under the language of the grant as cited above from the twenty-second section of the act of March 3, 1871 (sixteenth Statutes, page 579), the said grant was a grant in præsenti with the condition subsequent, and did it convey a present estate which was susceptible of being alienated, subject to the condition, either before or after breach of condition, but before forfeiture or re-entry by the Government.

Second. Whether if said grant was earned by construction after the breach of condition, but before forfeiture or re-entry by the grantor, any legal right to forfeit remains to the grantor.

Third. Whether the language of the seventeenth section of the act of March 3, 1871 (sixteenth Statutes, page 578), applies to the grant to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad, and does said language, or any part of it, import a waiver of the right to forfeit on the part of the grantor.

Mr TELLER. As the Department of the Interior has been quite vigorously assailed both as to its law and as to its honesty in this particular, I want to call the attention of the Senate and of the country to the men who passed upon this question in the House, the members of that committee, and I am free to say here that I am willing to stand with them, irrespective of their political affiliations, as men of brain, of legal learning, and of integrity. The minority report is signed by two men and two men only, and the two men who signed the minority report were Nathaniel J. Hammond, of Georgia, and Ezra B. Taylor, of Ohio.

Now I propose to have the benefit in the RECORD of the Committee on the Judiciary of the House, and I think it will be recognized by the Senate that the ablest men of that body were members of that committee. The gentlemen who concurred in the report were J. Randolph Tucker, of Virginia; David B. Culberson, of Texas; Samuel W. Moulton, of Illinois; James O. Broadhead, of Missouri; William Dorsheimer, of New York; Patrick A. Collins, of Massachusetts; George E. Seney, of Ohio; William C. Maybury, of Michigan; Moses A. McCoid, of Iowa; Luke P. Poland, of Vermont; Horatio Bisbee, jr., of Florida; Abraham X. Parker, of New York, and Edward K. Valentine, of Nebraska.

I may say here what I know to be a fact, that the subcommittee that examined this case consisted of Mr. Tucker, Mr. Poland, and Mr. Broadhead, and there were no three other men in the House who were more capable and whose opinion would have been received by the House or by this body or by the country with greater confidence. Against that we have the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. These men knew the difference between a condition subsequent and a condition precedent; these men knew what the law was, and they passed upon every question, and they did so for the benefit of the House, having been instructed by the House to do that for the purpose of enabling the House to act intelligently and properly upon this very question.

Mr. President, another committee reported on the subject in that body, a committee composed of some lawyers and some not lawyers, the Committee on Public Lands; and that committee, as I stated the other day, was divided—five for the grant and six against it. Now I will read the names of the members of that committee who were in favor of the validity of this grant and so reported; and two of them, prominent men in their political party, the party to which I do not belong, discussed the question before the House with an intelligence with which it has not been discussed here, I am free to say: Mr. William C. Oates, of Alabama; Mr. Henry S. Van Eaton, of Mississippi; Mr. James B. Belford, of Colorado; Mr. Horace B. Strait, of Minnesota; and Mr. Lewis E. Payson, of Illinois. Numbers do not always count. It is true they do count when there is a vote; but for influence and for safety for an executive officer he can sometimes take the view of a minority. If the gentlemen who take an interest in this subject will read the speeches made by Mr. Oates, Mr. Van Eaton, and Mr. Payson, I will submit to any fair and intelligent person that the weight of the argument was with those three men, no matter what the rest of the committee may have said or done.

The honorable Senator says that this case is peculiar—sui generis. It is not. I repeat what I said the other day: it has been the unbroken rule of the United States for sixteen years to issue the patents for lands granted to railroads whenever the parties had complied with the conditions subsequent, without reference to time; and that has been done in nine cases out of ten without any inquiry whatever. Since I have been Secretary I have issued title papers in the same identical way that are not called in question, and that, too, without having taken the opinion of a committee of this body or a committee of the other, or without having taken the opinion of the entire House, where by a majority vote of 42 it was declared that this grant should not be forfeited.

It is very easy for a man to address a few people in the galleries and talk about protecting the honest settler. The settler should have been protected when the grant was made. That was the time to raise this question, not now. The Government made a contract. The Government has said, "Here, you build a road within a certain time and we will give you a certain amount of land." A well-known rule of law said—and it did not need the decision of the Supreme Court—until we assert the right to re-enter you can keep right on regardless of the limitation fixed in the act; but in 1874 the Supreme Court of the United States, that all departments of the Government must bow to when it construes a statute, declared that the Government must by some action of Congress declare its intention to re-enter or else the party might continue, and when he had performed the condition the land was his as much as if he had built the road within the period fixed in the act. The court has reiterated this in repeated decisions, and this body and the other House have not been in ignorance of them. They knew what the law was. There are a great many men on this floor who knew what the law was without the decision of the Supreme Court, but they all knew what it was after the decision.

Mr. President, I said that this had been done for sixteen years. I meant to say that roads which had been built many years ago, nearly, if not quite, that much out of time, have been allowed to take their lands. The Land Office held that question in abeyance, and refused for some time to grant any titles to roads built out of time, but when this decision came in they went back to the cases of roads that had been built out of time, and they were allowed to take their titles. I stated the other day that I could call the attention of this body to a road that had been completed thirteen years out of time and nobody raised a question.

In 1874, after the act making the grant had passed, Congress provided that the people who had gone on to these lands prior to that time believing that they had been forfeited might be protected in their rights, and that the railroad company might take other lands in lieu thereof. It will be found in the statute passed on the 22d day of June, 1874. Then the contract that this company entered into with the settlers to give them all the land they occupied at $2 an acre was in accordance with the law as it then existed, and the settlers had the privilege, and have it to-day, of taking at any time previous to the month of October, 1881—had the right to go and take this land, and this company can then call if it chooses for other lands. There is nothing in this case that differs from very many other cases.

It is true that roads may be built long out of time. The late Secretary of the Interior made to this body, in his first annual report, a suggestion, which was all he was allowed to do, that there was a necessity for some legislation upon this subject; that either the Government should declare that the roads built out of time were not to have their lands, so that they could not go on building and claiming, or else a limit should be fixed, so that the settlers and the railroad alike might know it. That was repeated in the two following annual reports made by that Secretary, and it ill becomes any one in this body to complain of the executive department of the Government, that has no opportunity to cancel these grants, that has no power in the premises, but is required by law to issue the patents whenever the parties are entitled thereto. When Mr. Hoar was Attorney-General he was asked as to the right of an executive department to suspend the action of a statute, and he declared that it was the duty of the executive department with diligence to enforce the statutes as it found them without reference to the opinion the executive officer might have as to their propriety when originally passed.

I listened the other day to an attack upon the Attorney-General, an attack upon the Interior Department because the Interior Department had received the opinion of the Attorney-General. Upon just such a question as this, the right of this company to assign and the right of the assignee, one of the brightest Attorneys-General that ever held the office within our memory at least, Mr. Stanberry, of Ohio, passed. He declared that the right of assignment was not to be questioned, and that was in the case of a road that had received from the Government not only lands in quantities greater than were ever allowed before, but received $16,000 a mile in Government bonds. That company having assigned to another company, the assignee was held entitled to and received not only the lands but the bonds as the assignee. I suppose that nobody in this Chamber, certainly no lawyer, will question the ability of Mr. Stanberry to pass upon such a question, or his integrity, or his honesty, any more than any one would question the honesty and the integrity of the committee whose names I have read to the Senate.

If the new administration of which we hear now is to commence to undo what the late administration has done, it should proceed according to the forms of law; it should act in a manner that will comport with the dignity of a great administration presiding over the interests of 55,000,000 people. How shall it be done? By a resolution of this body? By speeches addressed to the public? No; but by its courts. If there is anything wrong in this transaction, go into the courts. Previous to the issuing of these patents it was impossible for either the railroad company or the settlers to be heard in the courts; and it was in the interest of the settlers that the matter should be put in such a shape that they might be heard. If this company is not entitled to the land, there is a court that will settle that, and it will settle it in accordance with law and in accordance with justice and in accordanec with right.

We may say of our courts as the great King of Prussia once heard said about his court. When the great king had built an elegant palace, and when he looked out around him he saw an old mill standing in its way and somewhat marring the view; he went down and said to the man who owned it, "I want to buy your mill." The old man said, "It has been my mill ever since I was a young man, and it was my father's before me, and my grandfather's before him, and I decline to sell." The king said to him impatiently, "If you do not, I will take it." He said, "Sire, I want you to remember that in this country we have courts to settle questions between individuals, and that, too, between the peasant and king." The old king turned around and said the mill might remain. He said, "That is a tribute to my court of which I am proud." We can say the same of our courts. There will be an opportunity to test the whole question. There will be an opportunity to decide whether the road was built, as I say it was, after the assignment, or, as the Senator said the other day, before the assignment. Everything in the Interior Department indicates that it was built after the assignment. If that is not true, the courts will find it out.

Mr. President, I have called the attention of the Senate to the condition of this case once before, and I do not propose to go over it again; I do not propose to continue it. I repeat, that if it is the intention of the new administration to take up this class of cases, they have not only this to take up but a great many others. I think it would be quite as modest when a question of inquiry is before the Senate for our friends on the other side, at least before they boast of what they are going to do, to wait and see if they can determine what ought to have been done by those who preceded them. I do not yield to the Senator from Louisiana in my devotion to the men who go out upon the public lands as settlers. I am as anxious as any man ever was that the lands of the Government should be reserved for actual settlers, and I have said on the floor of the Senate before that if I had been a member of this body when these grants were voted I should never have voted for a grant.

But that is not the question now. The grant has been made; the parties have complied with the conditions; and they are now entitled to their patents certainly in the absence of any legislation, which there has been full and ample opportunity to enact during the four years this case has been before the Interior Department. Four years has this question been discussed back and forth there and in this body. Two years ago last July the Senate declared that this company was entitled to this land. There has never been a declaration from any committee save the one that I mentioned, the Committee on Public Lands of the House, at any time declaring that it was not entitled to the land, and that not until after the company had built its road and the people were having the benefit of it. Whether it was a wise policy to give land for such a purpose or not is not now the question. The question is, the Government having agreed to do the thing, shall the Government do it, or shall an executive officer, in violation of law, simply say: "You are entitled by the law to the land, but I will wait an indefinite period; I will wait to see whether Congress may not forfeit this grant; it has been before two Congresses; it has been before the Senate; it has been before the House; it has been declared by the committees of both bodies that it ought not to be forfeited; it has been so declared by a positive vote; and yet I will wait to see whether the Forty-ninth Congress, that does not assemble until December, may not see fit to forfeit this grant."

Mr. President, I do not believe that that is a very good thing for an executive officer to do. I have not any idea that that will find any favor at least with the three gentlemen who are now executive officers who so recently left this body. It is not a very democratic doctrine, as I recollect it, that an executive officer may decline to execute a law because he thought the law was not wise in its incipiency, or because he thought that Congress ought to repeal it. Such a doctrine would leave an executive officer at liberty to nullify and destroy what the legislative department of the Government may do. All he has to do is simply to say, "I do not like the statute; I think if this Congress will not repeal it the next will;" and when he has waited till that Congress has adjourned and the next is assembled and declares affirmatively that it will not intervene, "I will say, I will wait until the next;" and so he might indefinitely postpone the execution of the law, and thus he might deny to the citizen that justice which the Government is bound to mete out to him. This can not be done in the name of the people; it can not be done under the pretense that you want to save the public lands to the people.

It has been pretty well known in this body and in the other that for many years laws enacted for the benefit of the people have been used to their hurt. It is well understood everywhere—it is here by my report, it is here by the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office—that the pre-emption law, originally a valuable law to the people of the United States, is to-day being used to aggregate large quantities of land in the hands of individuals. Would any land officer or any Secretary of the Interior be justified in suspending the execution of the law? I only need to ask the question and everybody promptly says no. Why not suspend that law as well as suspend any other? Is it because in this case a corporation is concerned? Is it because there is something in a corporation that is especially obnoxious? Corporations are but the aggregation of individual capital and individual energy and individual enterprise; and if the Government sees fit to make a grant to a corporation or to deal with a corporation it must see fit then to execute the law in its behalf as it would in behalf of an individual.

Mr. President, I repeat that every question which has been submitted here to-day has had not only the consideration of the Department charged with the execution of this law, but has been submitted for the advice of the Attorney-General. The other day when the matter came up I was a little bit confused as to the exact time when the Attorney-General was charged with the duty that had been performed by him when he replied to the request of Secretary Kirkwood. I had forgotten just exactly when he was charged with that. It lacked only four years of being one hundred years since that duty was charged upon him. In the very beginning of this form of government he was charged with answering to the heads of Departments as to the law when they required his opinion; and I repeat now what I said then, that every Department from that time to this has felt itself obligated and bound, when the Attorney-General has been consulted as to the law of a case, to regard his opinion as the law of the case and to enforce the law in accordance with his views.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to introduce a resolution.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Very well.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. CULLOM. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of commerce among the several States, with authority to sit during the recess of Congress, and with power to summon witnesses and to do whatever is necessary for a full examination of the subject. Said committee shall have power to appoint a clerk and stenographer, and the expenses of such investigation shall be paid from the appropriation for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). Does the Senator ask for the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be printed and lie over.

CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted this morning by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH], to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coast Defenses be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a clerk, who shall be paid, at the same rate that the other per diem clerks are paid, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada asks for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think that had better lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am also instructed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] on the 13th instant, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and it is hereby, continued and authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, to consider the best means of preserving the forest of the public domain, and to employ a clerk at the regular per diem, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that that lie over, and I simply want to call the attention of our friends in the majority to this fact: I fear these expenditures coming out of the contingent fund of the Senate are getting a little top-heavy; I fear we shall have very great trouble in getting appropriations to meet them, and that the provision for drawing these moneys will exhaust the fund long before the expiration of the fiscal year, and so some matters of the Senate which are really necessary for the transaction of the business of the Senate will be left without any legitimate appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being made, the resolution will be printed and lie over.

BACKBONE AND OTHER RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Senator from California to withdraw his motion for a few moments that I may make some suggestions on the pending resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California withdraw his motion?

Mr. MILLER, of California. If the Senator from Nebraska desires to make some reply to the speeches in the Senate made this morning I withdraw my motion.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution submitted by Mr. VAN WYCK on the 6th instant.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] in his remarks previous to-day regretted that every person who spoke on this subject was not a lawyer—I suppose he meant of railroad proclivities, so there might be full accord; such lawyers as during most of the last sixteen years have filled the Attorney-General's and Interior Departments, making the precedents which the ex-Secretary boasted he had followed; lawyers who have enjoyed the advantages of a large acquaintance with railroad magnates, who have been broad enough to understand and apply the liberal views of corporation attorneys.

The American people probably regret that there were not lawyers who were not seeking to smother plain, honest, common sense under quotations of bad Latin and Norman French. He was right—the Department and Attorney-General for sixteen years have been doing these things. Every reign has exhibited scandalous transactions, or rather transactions giving rise to scandals; Credit Mobilier frequently repeated itself. Locating and conveying lands to Sioux City and Pacific, giving lands from Portland to Puget Sound, is probably no worse, certainly no better, than allowing consolidation of Union Pacific with Kansas and Denver Pacific when the Union Pacific was made practically bankrupt. Gould and his syndicate realized not less than $20,000,000 at the expense of the nation.

Mr. TELLER. Who allowed that?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Some one in the Interior Department; probably the Commissioner of Railroads first did it, and how far it had the approbation of the Secretary of the Interior I do not know. My points are not personal, either to the chief or to his subordinates. I am talking of the system, of the precedents in the last sixteen years. It is not the first time I have taken an opportunity on this floor to say that the Attorney-General's Office and the Interior Department during the last sixteen years have been subjugated to the demands of railroad corporations. [Applause in the galleries.]

Gould and his syndicate realized not less than $20,000,000 by the consolidation to which I have alluded. That was done in 1881; the Secretary will know who then approved it. The people between the Missouri River and the Pacific Ocean in telegraph and railroad charges are subjected to an extortion as outrageous as England inflicts upon her subjects in India and which produces revolt and war among her serfs in the deserts of Africa.

It is usual for the corporation attorneys and defenders to stigmatize the settler, whose only earthly treasure may be a wife and children and the team he is driving, as an interloper, a speculator, seeking to obtain a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres. The ex-Secretary has listened so long to that dialect in the Department it was natural he should repeat it in his speech.

Mr. TELLER. Did I——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator say that I used any such term in reference to settlers?

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator said they go upon this land as settlers, they go upon the Northern Pacific lands as settlers, on that immense tract which the law and the Interior Department has allowed, a black belt one hundred and twenty miles in width and excluded from settlement as far as they may, and the Senator the other day said ettlers go on the Northern Pacific lands. Why, he would not allow those men the right to go on this boundless domain.

Mr. TELLER rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator from Nebraska if he understands that it is in the power of the executive department of the Government to interfere when the legislative department has fixed the status of these lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let me finish my sentence. The Senator rose indignantly and asked whether he had said anything of that kind, and I referred him to his language, and then he turns and asks what can we do. Now let me finish that sentence and then I will answer the suggestion of the Senator. I said that the ex-Secretary has listened so long to that dialect in his Department that it was natural he should repeat it in his speech, and sneering at such men, almost in the language of Tweed, he said, "What are you going to do about it?" and then when the Senator again propounds the inquiry very vehemently if the law gives the land to the companies, what power had he to step in and interfere. I will tell him. By the terms of the grant to this very Backbone road every homestead and pre-emption claim was lawful up to the time of definite location.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly. There was no definite location until the actual building of the road.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly, the Senator says. Now settlers have gone upon these lands; they have been going there from 1871 to the building of the road in 1882, and when I ask him about the protection of those settlers he turns and says, "How could I protect them? How can you protect the settlers on the Northern Pacific when the company was entitled to the land?" Here he could protect them and here we can protect them. This Backbone grant was forfeited by broken conditions. Other rights in the mean time had intervened; legal rights had intervened; and when you come in the end and say there was an absolute grant to these men, was it not the duty of the Department over which the Secretary presided to have protected the settlers in their legal and valid claims to the land which they were occupying? I ask him to-day if he will not feel it his duty as a Senator when the question comes before this body as to forfeiting the lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, if we are to relieve that great corporation from its broken condition, from its violated faith, will it not be his duty and mine to say to this great corporation, "Before you shall be entitled to the lands which you claim to have earned you shall recognize the title of men whose title is superior to your own. During the period of your broken condition the Government substantially encouraged the pioneer and the settler to occupy the lands." When years have gone by and it becomes necessary to realize this grant to this corporation I should like to know if the Senator will not feel it his duty as a member of this body of the American Congress to protect the rights of those men which have accrued during the time the condition was broken, where the law had been violated? I think the Senator will agree with me about that, and I do not think he will be ready, in so discharging his duty as a Senator, to have any one rise and tell him that is all "blood and thunder."

The Senator says the Backbone grant had more equity than the Texas Pacific, which fortunately Congress declared forfeited and rescued it from the tender mercies of the Interior Department and Cabinet.

The Southern Pacific, as did the New Orleans, undertook to build a parallel line to that on which a grant had been made to a rival company, and then to rob the public domain of millions of acres of land. Both adopted the same tactics.

My friend will excuse me from reading Huntington's letters over again. I have had occasion to read them several times by way of encouragement in this body. The proceedings in this case will probably get into history hereafter by the same historian. The Southern Pacific, as did the New Orleans Pacific, antagonized and built in opposition to a rival road; each came to Congress and defeated the schemes of its rival. Huntington said what it cost him to beat Tom Scott and the Texas Pacific, $200,000 I think, and he said there were such demagogues here and those who were not demagogues—he used a very illogical expression probably—asked too much.

Now the Senator says the New Orleans Pacific went to the Legislature of Louisiana to beat the Backbone charter and have it repealed. Then he says the New Orleans Pacific came here to Congress to defeat the Backbone scheme. Exactly what the Southern Pacific did. They came to Congress to beat the Texas Pacific. They were the same men, Gould and Huntington—the same crowd. The Senator says do justice to them. Certainly do justice to them. Nobody asks for anything else. A rich corporation should not be ostracized. Certainly not. No; measure to them the same meed of justice that is measured to the honest settler, but no more. There is no reason why the clerks in the Department of the Interior should be worked at nights and Sundays to get out patents for Jay Gould any more than for some poor fellow who has his homestead at the headwaters of some of the Western rivers. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will suspend a moment. The Chair must say to persons in the galleries that it is in violation of the rules of the Senate to make any demonstration of any kind whatever. If it is repeated the Chair will be obliged to order the galleries to be cleared.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Southern Pacific, as did the New Orleans Pacific, antagonized and built in opposition to the rival road; each came to Congress and defeated the schemes of its rivals. The Southern Pacific completed the road and secured an assignment during the lifetime of the grant, and therefore it had a better claim, while the New Orleans and Pacific took an assignment and completed the road six and eight years after the life of the grant was forfeited by conditions violated.

The ex-Secretary says the Backbone had a right to assign a grant thus forfeited. If so, why not the Texas Pacific in the lifetime of the grant? The Texas Pacific built its road in Texas but not a mile in New Mexico and Arizona, but the Backbone never built a rod of road on the broad earth.

Gould and Huntington were always logical; they intended to make the Backbone the forerunner, and if they captured the Department on that they were confident of securing the other. Only the interposition of Congress prevented it.

Twenty and thirty years ago Congress gave recklessly to any corporation applying; now the executive department and Congress in refusing to restore unearned lands to the public domain will be judged by the people as guilty of a crime against the nation.

The tide of our own and foreign population, which years ago laid the foundations and reared the structure of great States in the West, is now repelled by the desert lands, the arid plains, the sand hills and sage brush, and in its reflex is gathering at the border of the Indian lands impatient to enter, where the Federal bayonets are pointed against the breasts of hardy pioneers, like unto that class which carried the flag of the Union in advance of civilization over mountain peaks and furled it by the waves of the broad Pacific; no bayonets to drive out the cattle syndicates already in Oklahoma; no bayonets to destroy fences illegally inclosing millions of acres of the public domain.

The Senator admits that this road is only entitled to the lands earned after the assignment in 1881. The Senator has conceded that they are only entitled to lands for road constructed after 1881. Now, this road was all completed in 1882, while in fact he gave lands for road built from 1875 to 1881, for the entire line——

Mr. TELLER. That is not correct.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is not correct! Let us see if it is not correct. He has given lands for the whole road except sixty-eight miles built by Morgan & Co.—lands for all else. Now, this road was completed in 1882, while in fact he gave lands for road built from 1875 to 1881, for the entire line, and the only part excluded was the sixty-eight miles.

The Department evidently had not the time to ascertain what work was done before and after 1881, and decided againt the Government by giving land for the entire line. Why this hot haste? Why not have left it to the deliberation of his successor, who could have determined what portion did not properly belong to the road even upon the admissions of the last administration?

Before 1881 no work was done on the faith of this grant. Congress had refused to transfer it to the New Orleans and Pacific, and that road had often proclaimed the Backbone grant worthless. Now I suppose even a lawyer will admit that he who takes with notice of a defective title gets no title; and when the New Orleans Pacific presented itself to this Department asking these lands under a grant which it said was worthless to the Backbone Company, and only showed to the Department an assignment of a worthless grant from a bankrupt corporation, it was notice to them that they ought not at least to be called upon, an Executive Department of this Government, to assist in perpetrating a fraud which had been conceived by these two corporations. It was nothing less.

The president of the New Orleans Pacific in 1878 said: "No arrangement looking to any recognition of the pretended claims of the Backbone Company will be entertained by my company."

In 1879 he said, "We have now ability to complete our road without Government assistance." Just the same as Huntington was saying when he was endeavoring to beat Tom Scott and the Texas Pacific. The New Orleans Pacific, under the control of Gould and Huntington, said the same thing precisely before a committee of the other House, boldly stated that they had now the ability to complete their road without Government aid. They said that in 1879. The Cabinet ought to have known it, and yet with these facts before their eyes they surrendered in this manner 700,000 acres of the Government domain.

In 1876 the same man said about $750,000 in cash has been subscribed and a portion of it has been expended. Now mark, in March, 1880, Mr. Greene was chief engineer of that road before the assignment. Mr. Greene said more than two millions and a half cubic yards of graded road have been constructed, making approximately a continuous line of grading of some one hundred and sixty miles. Will the Secretary of the Interior pretend that this road was charged with those one hundred and sixty miles of graded road? No, sir. They were given this grant the same as if they had been at work since 1875. Their own engineer was presented to a committee of the other House, and said that they had one hundred and sixty miles of continuous graded road, and yet there was no account of this taken in the issue of these patents. Yet the company has been given land as if the entire line had been constructed after the assignment in 1881.

There was time for a Cabinet meeting the last day of the life of the last administration. The Secretary of the Interior was probably the only advocate, feeling as he says that this corporation had been wronged by having this grant withheld ten years, and in the exuberance of his sympathy for Gould and Huntington urged or consented to a free gift for one hundred and sixty miles of continuous graded road.

Faithful public servants indeed! It requires no corporation lawyer or any other lawyer to understand this performance. It is so plain that he who runs may read, and the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err therein.

Another remarkable feature. The ex-Secretary, from many years' practice as attorney for the Union Pacific Road and long experience in the Department of the Interior, must have known that railroads to escape State and local taxation decline to take patents only as they market the lands. Millions of acres are yet unpatented to the Pacific railroads, although entitled thereto since 1869. Everybody knows, none better than the ex-Secretary, that the railroads do not take their patents if they can avoid it, because then the lands are subject to State and local taxation, and the Union Pacific and Central Pacific to-day have millions of acres of land which have been earned in 1869 for which they have not yet received patents.

Now mark! What was the great desire of this company then to obtain patents for all these lands without any regard to whether they could market them or not, so unusual from any other land-grant corporation? Does not the great desire of this company to secure patents for nearly a million acres which would be subject to immediate taxation suggest a strong suspicion that the motive must be a fear that the next Congress or that the incoming administration might not be completely subject to their control? Could it have been anything else?

Now, Mr. President, I have probably said all that is necessary in this case. The Senator alluded to the high standing of the committee of the House, and he seemed to find in that a warrant for the course he was pursuing, and when he referred to the Committee of the Judiciary in the other House, which he relies on to sustain him, why did he not pay some respect to the report of a committee of this body, which was not divided in its bill to forfeit a portion of the land grant of this road? Will not the Senator read the names and find at least some who were of ability as lawyers? Considering that question, even if it threw this matter over to be disposed of by the next administration, a respectful protest was sent to the Department, signed by members of the committee.

The Senator stated that the report of this committee did just what the Department did, precisely what they had done, and yet the report of the committee forfeits a portion, intending to forfeit all for work done before 1881. That is what the committee of this body did, and the committee of this body supplemented their report by a respectful request to the Secretary of the Interior that he and the President should withhold patents, but the Senator parades a divided report from the other House as sufficient justification, while he entirely overlooks the unanimous report of the Senate committee on this subject.

Mr. President, at least this resolution should be passed. I regret that my friend should have considered that there was anything personal in this matter, as he seems to have felt a personal grievance, but the resolution did ask for a suspension of action. I understand the Senator to take the position that that practice must stop. He has served notice on the Senate that the custom must stop which has existed here for years. There must be no more of this thing practiced; there must be no resolutions calling for information on any subject which a Senator may desire. That may be all very well, but I doubt whether even he himself will not find it at times necessary that he should seek and ask information, and he will consider it no reflection on a Department, no reflection on an administration, because he seeks to find or to correct even, if you please, abuses which may exist at one point and another, necessarily so in the Departments.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it was said many years ago by a gentleman who was writing a treatise on oratory that one of the first things an orator should do was to be prudent. I regret that that has not been the rule in some sections where orators have been educated.

I object to the honorable Senator from Nebraska putting into my mouth words that I never uttered and imputing to me sentiments, and then saying that I had put myself on record on those sentiments which I never entertained. I have not been in the habit of making anything except occasional grammatical corrections in the reports of my speeches here, and ordinarily not even do I go to that extent, and the RECORD will bear me out in the remark that I said nothing which can be tortured, nothing which even his vivid imagination can work up into a statement that the interloping settler went on to the lands of the railroad company. I said simply that if there was trouble it was the fault of the law. It is a grievous fault of the law. It is the fault of the law that when the line has not been built and when the settler does not know whether it is to be built or not, he is prevented from going on the public land.

I called the attention of the Senate to that subject in almost these exact words in my report of 1882. I said that the settler could not tell whether the road was to be built or not, and he did not know whether to take his title from the railroad company or to take it from the Government. He could not get it from the Government, and if he got it from the railroad company he might lose all that he had paid. I never intimated that the settlers ought not to be protected, and if the honorable Senator had been posted sufficiently upon the rulings of the Department he would have known that all his anxiety for the settlers who had settled upon these lands in Louisiana previous to the definite location of the road, which was the building of the road, was needless, because they were protected by the very letter of the law. The Interior Department has not the power to take their land and give it to the railroad company, and has not attempted so to do. All his anxiety then about the settlers may be laid aside so far as the Louisiana grant is concerned; and there is not a man who now comes in contact with the grant except the man who came in after the road was built, and all such are provided for in the agreement with this company.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask a question?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. EUSTIS. What agreement does he refer to?

Mr. TELLER. I refer to the agreement made with this company by the two members of Congress, Mr. Blanchard and Mr. Robertson. Mr. Blanchard said in June, 1884, that nine-tenths of all the settlers were in his district and were entirely satisfied with the contract. I have just as much confidence in Mr. Blanchard's statements as I have in those of anybody else.

Mr. EUSTIS rose.

Mr. TELLER. I do not yield to the Senator to make a speech.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado declines to yield further.

Mr. TELLER. I will yield to a question.

Mr. EUSTIS. That is a promise by the company to the world to do such a thing. It is not an agreement.

Mr. TELLER. It is a promise made by the company which can be enforced under the law, and if gentlemen who come here and talk about questions that they do not know anything about would study the statutes they would see that there was power under the law to compel the company to do it, and there has never been any question made by any settler as to the bona fides of that contract.

The honorable Senator from Nebraska talks about the settlers on the Northern Pacific. Whose business is it to protect the settlers on the Northern Pacific? Is it mine? Is it not as much his? Was it the business of any man in the executive department of the Government? It was for the legislative department, and the legislative department alone. The Interior Department was powerless to protect them. The Legislature had provided that the grant should be made to the company. They had provided that they might take an indefinite period, for that is the law, in which to build the road, and then they said to the settler, "If you go on the land after the definite location of the road you shall not be allowed to take title under the Government, but you must deal with the railroad company and not with the Government." Did not the honorable Senator know that?

Why, Mr. President, when I left this body in 1882 I left upon the files a bill to forfeit the grant and protect the settlers. Has the honorable Senator ever been heard in the committee to which it properly belonged? Has he ever been heard in defense of these settlers in the committee where his voice is potent, where he is one out of seven, and where he could have reported a bill to this body? When I left the Senate there was a bill before his committee to forfeit this very identical grant over which he is spending so much time and worrying himself so seriously. What did the honorable Senator do? Did he attempt to bring it before this body? Did he not know that by a law of this body, which is recognized, no such bill would be touched without the approval of his committee? He sat silent in his committee or else he did the other thing, he opposed its presentation to the Senate. At all events he has never attempted to bring it before this body in any shape.

The Senator talks about the taxation of railroad lands. In 1882 the Secretary of the Interior presented to Congress the evil of which he complains, and said then, as I say now, it is a question that the Interior Department can not deal with. It is a question that the legislative department alone has power over. What has the honorable gentleman done? What has he done in committee, what has he done in this body, with reference to that question?

Then he talks about the consolidation of the Union Pacific with the Kansas Pacific, and says that there were twenty millions of steal in that. Mr. President, the Senator intended that the public should understand that it was done under my administration. He knew that that was not correct when he made the statement, but, whether it was or whether it was not, no Secretary of the Interior is charged with an investigation of that matter, and what is more he is powerless to interfere. Who ought to interfere if there is a steal of twenty million dollars? The legislative department of the Government, of which he has been a member the biggest part of the time since the act was passed organizing and creating those great corporations either in the other House or in this.

Jay Gould and Huntington and others are a great bugbear to the honorable Senator. If they have made anything out of the public that they ought not to have made by the consolidation of those roads, whose duty was it to see that they did not do it, that the great public were protected? Certainly not mine; and yet the Senator charges upon the executive department of the Government a dereliction of duty when the dereliction lies at his own door.

I repeat what I said the other day—and I do not repeat it offensively—that since the Senator has been a member for four years of the Committee on Public Lands he never has raised his hand to remedy the wrongs of which he complains; he never has raised his voice when it was potent and when it would do any good; he never has cast a vote that I am aware of except upon the Texas-Pacific, and that bill came from the House, no thanks to him or to any member of this body.

The honorable Senator says there is an analogy between the two cases. Why, Mr. President, the Attorney-General declared when he sent his report that there was no analogy. The Secretary of the Interior recognized the fact by declining to appoint commissioners to examine the road, and that was all that the executive department of the Government could do. I recollect some ignorant demagogues in a newspaper proceeded to arraign the Interior Department because it had not forfeited the grant, and I have no doubt the speeches made in Nebraska by the honorable Senator would have justified the public in the belief that the Secretary of the Interior had it in his power by his fiat to declare that the 15,000,000 acres of public land held by that corporation, to which they were not entitled, should become open to settlement and amenable to the settlement laws. He studiously concealed from his constituents and from the country the fact that he had one seventy-sixth part of the power in this body to declare that grant forfeited and that he had never even introduced a bill, much less had he made an effort in that direction.

The honorable Senator says that he does not intend any personal disrespect. Why, sir, he ought not to have been required to have made that statement. It is not supposed that he did. What does he intend? I do not think that he intended to do anything more than to parade himself before the public, as I said the other day, as the champion of the people who are looking for lands. He spoke about the fencing up of lands and he spoke about the people in the Oklahoma country. What has he done to protect the settler on the public lands against the great corporation fences? When the Secretary of the Interior, in 1882, reported to the Senate and to the other branch of Congress the necessity for legislation, did he move?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Do you want an answer now?

Mr. TELLER. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator desires to know what I have done in regard to this particular matter. The others he has passed I shall not allude to now, but right here he wants to know what I have done in regard to the fencing of the public domain. Now, I will show to the Senator what I did. When the House bill to prevent the illegal fencing of the public domain came to the Senate it was referred to the Public Lands Committee. The Senator seems to be very conversant with what takes place in the Public Lands Committee. The bill was referred to a subcommittee of which the Senator from Nebraska was chairman.

On examining that bill we found the House had not gone far enough. Upon examining still further we found what? I found from his own Department that there was the fencing of millions of acres of the public land by syndicates, some of them partly owned in this country, and some partly and some entirely owned in England. I found from his Department that there had been tolerated the system of fencing millions of acres of the public domain. I then inquired at the Land Office why was not the military power of this Government used to break down these fences? There is no pretense that they had any acknowledged right, and I was told then that the Secretary of the Interior held that the law of 1807 which gave the executive power to use the military to remove such obstructions was not binding at this time. I examined the record of his office, and found that his Land Commissioner had reported that the law was still in existence, and I went further and found that the Secretary had given the opinion that the law was not in existence.

Hence it was that when that bill came into my hands as a subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands I insisted that the bill did not go far enough, and I explained to the committee the position of the Secretary of the Interior, which was supposed to be somewhat strange in view of all the facts of the case—the position of the Secretary of the Interior that a law made in 1807 unrepealed was not binding upon him—and then I insisted that the fencing bill should have some more stringent provision in it. The Secretary has not been correctly informed as to what took place in the Committee on Public Lands. I insisted that that bill should have some power, that the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War should have power to use the civil and military authority of this nation to dislodge the men who were absorbing millions of acres of public domain, and after consultation and conference with the committee it was said it would call two Secretaries into being on one matter.

The Secretary of the Interior, of course, could not use the military force without the consent of the Secretary of War, and we drafted it so as to give them joint authority, the Secretary of the Interior to use the military force under the direction of the Secretary of War. Finally it was thought that was a little bungling, and we had better really reenact the law of 1807. Then it was that we put in the fencing bill which Congress passed the provision of the law of 1807 which the Secretary said did not exist and had no binding power—was inoperative; we re-enacted the law of 1807, directing the Executive to use the marshals and also the military forces of the United States to remove fences from the public domain. Is the Senator now answered?

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the evil of which the Senator has been heard to complain so grievously both here and at home existed in 1882, and it was in 1882 that the Secretary of the Interior sent to Congress his annual report, in which he declared that the power did not exist under the act of 1807, and in that he was fully supported not only by the late Attorney-General, but by several of his predecessors. The honorable Senator now comes out for what he did about two years and a half later. In the mean time, without having taken a step, without having ever drawn a line or uttered a word where it would be of value, he was proclaiming everywhere against the great frauds of allowing the syndicates he speaks of to fence up the public lands. When the House sent us a bill, then the Senator was ready, of course, to take part, because he could not well do otherwise. His well-known industry had not been exhibited in that direction before, but more than two years after Congress had been importuned, and that too after they had been importuned by three different reports, to move in this matter, he moved. And now he takes great credit to himself and finds fault with the executive department that they had not torn down these fences without any authority of law so to do, without any money to pay the men who went out, military or civil, without any right to use the civil arm of the Government by an express provision that prevented it. It was not doubted and was not questioned by anybody who examined into the subject, and Congress received notice that the executive department regarded itself as powerless. The executive department went into the courts, and went into the courts early in 1882, in the summer, immediately after my advent into that office, and we proceeded as zealously as we could, and in every annual report I submitted to Congress that the system of procedure in the courts was entirely inadequate to do justice to the Government and to the settlers in that country. And I repeat now what I said before, that during all that time the honorable Senator did nothing, absolutely nothing except to talk; absolutely nothing except to make speeches abusing the co-ordinate branch of the Government for not doing that which he knew and which everybody knew it was powerless to do, which at least it had declared it was powerless to do, exactly as it had declared it was powerless to compel the railroad companies of which he speaks to take a patent unless they saw fit to do so, because the law had declared that they should not receive a patent until they had paid for the surveys and they declined to pay for the surveys. That was reported to this body in 1882, and although the gentleman when he made his campaign in Nebraska, if the newspaper reports are to be credited, was very loud in his denunciation of railroads that had paid no taxes and did nothing to support the government of the State with the great areas of land that they were holding without a patent, yet he never did anything in this body looking toward compelling those companies to pay taxes.

It is very easy for the honorable Senator to arraign the Secretary of the Interior; it is very easy for him to denounce the statute and the system, and to speak of the giving of land to railroads as a fraud on the public and as a steal, and all that kind of thing; but he can not escape the fact that it has all the time lain within the power of the legislative department of the Government to interfere and to right the wrongs of which he complains, and that they have been appealed to again and again, and a committee of which he is a member has been appealed to by bills offered by members of the committee and by others referred to them, and they have slumbered and slept in the committee, and Congress has adjourned and readjourned without rendering any aid to the people that he says have suffered at the hands of the executive department of the Government, because the legislative department of the Government declined to instruct and empower the executive department to proceed as it ought to have done.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I desire to correct a statement made by the Senator from Colorado. I understood him to base his justification of his official action upon legal grounds. At the close of his remarks I discover that he bases his justification also upon an alleged agreement by which these settlers are to be protected.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator misunderstands me. I think the action of the Department must have been the same without that contract. It was precisely as if it had never been made.

Mr. EUSTIS. There is no question about the fact that the honorable Senator has made the statement that the settlers were protected by an agreement, and that is the statement the correctness of which I desire to challenge. While of course I do not mean to say that the honorable Senator does not believe that the agreement does protect the settlers, yet I desire to correct that statement by showing that the agreement does not in any sense whatsoever afford the slightest protection to the settlers.

The honorable Senator has intimated several times that my friend from Nebraska and myself do not know anything about the law or the facts in this case. I have one advantage over the honorable Senator. I have studied the law in Louisiana. All agreements made with reference to realty in that State are to be construed and governed by the laws of the State of Louisiana. If he is a civilian and I am not, it certainly must be owing to a very singular fact, for I have spent my whole life in studying the law of Louisiana, and I was considered to have been so successful that I was even made a professor of the civil law of Louisiana at the University of Louisiana.

What is the paper which the Senator tells the Senate and wishes to go forth to the country as the agreement under which the settlers are to be protected? It is an agreement, so called, between two members of Congress and the president of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company, by which, without any resolution of the directory whatsoever, merely the statement of the president of the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company to the effect that "I agree and obligate myself and my company that the settlers shall not be required to pay more than $2 an acre, provided that you, Mr. Robertson and Mr. Blanchard, withdraw your protest from the Interior Department."

I asked myself when I heard the honorable Senator make that statement whether he was serious in supposing that a unilateral promise, a mere promise to the world, a mere promise to the air, that the president of a railroad company would sell lands at such a price is anything more than an advertisement. Does it import the slightest mutuality of obligation between the settler (who is the party interested, not Mr. Blanchard or Mr. Robertson) and the railroad corporation? I say that the only protection which these people could derive from a contract would be from a contract made between the settler and the railroad corporation as a corporation with reference to landed estate in the State of Louisiana, and not between a Representative in Congress and the president of the railroad company.

Therefore my statement was correct which I made in the original remarks I had the honor to address to the Senate, that these people were and are utterly at the mercy of this railroad corporation. Whether the company will sell the land to settlers at $2 an acre or not of course is a question in the future which no one can predetermine.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to ask the Senator what settlers he refers to. When did the settlers go on the land?

Mr. EUSTIS. It makes no difference, in my judgment, when they went on the land. You say that of course those who settled on the land up to a certain date will not be molested, but that those who settled after that date will be. I submit that has nothing to do with the question of agreement.

Mr. TELLER. What I did say, if the Senator will allow me, was that all settlers who went on the land before the final location, which was after the building of the road, are protected by the act of June 22, 1874, and they take the land from the Government at Government price; but that those who went on after that time and after the road was built, if they have any redress at all, look to the company to carry out its agreement. So nine-tenths probably of the people who went on will take their title from the Government, and not from the railroad company at all.

Mr. EUSTIS. It makes no difference for the purposes of the argument what proportion of the settlers are in one category or in the other; they have rights and they have interests, and it is in their behalf that I speak. How few or how numerous they may be makes no difference so far as the questions involved are concerned.

I say that agreement was never intended even to be a bona fide agreement, and I think it was a very unfortunate allusion for the honorable Senator to make as a statement of fact upon which he could base any justification for his official action. After this agreement, so called, was made between two Representatives and the president of this road, which did not bind and was not intended to bind the railroad company for an instant of time, the railroad company made a mortgage on the lands and mortgaged the lands without any reference or allusion to the agreement by which the settlers were to be protected, and it was only after a bill was introduced in Congress to forfeit the lands that there was a supplemental mortgage filed by which allusion was then, for the first time, made to the agreement under which the honorable Senator said the settlers were to be protected.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. EUSTIS. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I was about to ask the Senator if he was not aware of the fact that the company first filed a mortgage without reference to the agreement, and on their attention being called to it they withdrew it and filed another mortgage containing the terms of the agreement, and that is now on file?

Mr. EUSTIS. That merely confirms the statement I made.

Mr. TELLER. The statement the Senator has not yet made.

Mr. EUSTIS. But whether that is the case or not, or when that agreement was filed, I say that under the laws of Louisiana it is merely a vague promise, what we call a unilateral obligation, which is no obligation whatsoever. If two parties are to be bound with reference to realty in Louisiana there must be the consent of both parties, and that consent must produce a mutuality of obligation. A party will agree to sell at a certain price and a party will agree to buy at a certain price. That constitutes a contract with reference to landed property in the State of Louisiana; and a mere promise, as this is, made to the world and to everybody and to the air by the president of a railroad company that he will allow persons to purchase property, I say is not a binding promise; and every lawyer in the State of Louisiana knows that to be the fact.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is necessary probably that I should make a few more suggestions in answer to some points made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER]. I take no exception and will not manifest any feeling because the Senator calls in question my acts, either when occupying a seat on this floor or elsewhere. The position is unpleasant only because it renders necessary that I should make some response, and therefore I must ask the pardon of the Senate for alluding to anything pertaining to myself.

I regret that the ex-Secretary has found it to be more in accord with the merits of his case to confine his attention to what my attitude has been. That is not important to this body, neither is it important to the country; but I was surprised that the Senator should state certain matters as having taken place in the committee-room. The Senator said I was silent as the grave in the committee-room. Am I right?

Mr. TELLER. I said you were silent so far as I could hear.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Does the Senator change his reply? I did not know but what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] who is speaking to him had probably interjected something that made it necessary for him to change it. I think it will be found in his printed remarks that he said I was silent as the grave, and now he says I was silent in the committee-room.

Mr. TELLER. So far as I know.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Oh, so far as he knows. I supposed he was speaking from knowledge, that he was arraigning me. I shall not manifest any indignation because he does. That is his privilege, and it may be proper. After stating the fact to go forth to the country—and he never speaks to the country, he says—that I was silent as the grave in the committee-room, now the Senator qualifies it by saying (it may have been an interjection probably by the Senator from Massachusetts) so far as he knows. The question is whether it is important to arraign me, a humble member of his body, because possibly in the pursuit of knowledge under difficulties I am desirous of finding out some facts. I am willing to offer myself to the ordeal; I have no objection; but now the Senator says "so far as he knows." Will he please advise the Senate of the extent of his knowledge? I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. I will say that at least there was no result. As to what may have been done in committee, I accept the amendment; it is a little improbable that the Senator should have been quiet in the committee-room.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I thought the Senator would modify that. There was no result certainly. He was six years in the Senate and four years in the Department of the Interior, and I have no sort of doubt he can sit down frequently and refer to well-directed efforts and say that no results were attained. Certainly there were no results. There was some result on the fencing bill when the Interior Department ignored the law of 1807.

The Senator says he was advised to do it by the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General seemed to be there for that purpose. The Attorneys-General rendered opinions and swept away millions of the public domain, forfeited land grants, and Attorneys-General were there to give an opinion that there was no power in this great Government to prevent the fencing of the public domain by the cattle syndicates, the English and Scottish lords. The Attorney-General rendered an opinion that there was no power in this great Government to prevent the English aristocracy from putting their wire fences around millions of acres of the public domain. That is what you have the Attorney-General there for.

Now the ex-Secretary of the Interior claims to be a very distinguished lawyer, as he is, even for the Western country. He is a very distinguished lawyer, and he sits by and mildly pockets the opinion of the Attorney-General, and he too is as quiet as the grave and the fencing of the public domain goes on; but from the Committee on Public Lands of the Senate came the bill which said the Executive had the power to use the military force of the nation to expel and drive out such an invasion. That is what was the result.

The Senator speaks about the taxation of railroad land. I had not said anything about that. I had not called the Interior Department in question about that. We felt it a hardship in the State of Nebraska, and I suppose the Senator had felt it a hardship in Colorado, that large bodies of land owned by railroad companies are exempt from taxation. The poor man comes with his family. My friend does not like to hear much about the poor man who trundles his family with his team of jaded horses to the far West and gets title to a little plot of land, who is subject to taxation the next year and goes upon the assessment roll, while the huge corporations, the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific, owning millions of acres throughout our country, yours and mine, for the fifteen years they have kept on the statute-book, pay no taxes. The Senator says that noise is made about that. Certainly, and he will excuse me if I tell him that in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses I introduced a bill on that subject and another Senator introduced a bill. In the last Congress my bill was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

One of my colleagues on that committee introduced a bill which was referred to the Judiciary Committee, and of course when that was the state of facts we all held our breath, as we usually do in this body when the Judiciary Committee is questioned. Nobody would ever venture to arraign that committee; and for that committee they proceeded with becoming haste and diligence. They finally reported a bill which would bring these lands under taxation. After the bill was reported I sought an early opportunity to have it placed among the special orders. It was placed on the Special Order Calendar, and I think next after the Texas Pacific forfeiture bill was this bill requiring the huge corporations to have their land subject to taxation as the people in Colorado and Nebraska have their lands.

The Senator said there were no results. Unfortunately we were hoping for them by his assistance. Does he remember the history of the Texas Pacific bill whose land grant we forfeited? Does he remember how much labor and toil and watchfulness were required to keep that bill in its place on the Special Calendar? Does he not know that this body buried it twice in the General Calendar and it had to be resurrected, that it was resurrected and put upon the Special Calendar and they buried it again, and then again we got it on the Special Calendar, and finally the bill came to a vote in this body, and, be it said to its credit, it was found that road had no more justice, no more equity, no more right than the land grant to which your Department gave 700,000 acres of the people's land? The Senator knows my position on that measure.

The Senator spoke about the other House. It is not worth while that I should revive what was done there; it is sufficient to speak of what was done here. I told him my attitude on the bill to tax the railroad lands. He knows it. I told him my attitude on the Texas Pacific forfeiture bill. He knows it. No allusion was made to any settlers on the Northern Pacific lands until he spoke of it himself in his speech a day or two ago. Here is what he said:

> The honorable Senator talks about the settlers. All along the line of the Northern Pacific the settlers have gone in upon the railroad lands, and the railroad company has completed its line since; it has performed the condition attached to the grant.

It performed it after it had violated it; and therefore it was that before they were allowed to have any benefit from the grant they should have been compelled by the Interior Department or by legislation to do justice to other parties who had acquired a title better than their own.

> Does the Senator suppose it is in the power of the Interior Department, does he suppose it is in the power of the executive or all the departments of Government acting together to protect those settlers who have gone upon that land after the rights of the company accrued?

Who is talking about the Northern Pacific settlers? The Senator says in advance there is no power in this Government to protect those men. Is there none, indeed, when this grant has been forfeited time and again? They were given an empire of land in the northern part of the country on condition that they should build the road, and they waited until the hardy pioneer in advance of the engineer and the locomotive developed that country. The pioneers go there and they know not what land to occupy. You have withdrawn land one hundred and twenty miles in width in the Territory of Washington, and every settler who goes to make a location does it at the peril of a contest with this great railroad company, which always has been, but I trust will not always be, backed, sustained, and supported by the executive department of this Government. That is the encouragement which you give to pioneers to go and settle your country.

More than one hundred and twenty miles in width have been withdrawn in Washington Territory for a road which has no legal and no equitable claim upon the Government. The land was comparatively worthless when the charter was granted. It has been increased in value not by any effort on the part of the railroad company or the expenditures of any of their own personal fortune, but by men going in advance and developing it whose claim to recognition you spurn by saying that not even the Executive has any power to protect them.

I say to the Senator that when this corporation comes to your Departments asking title and that you rehabilitate them and clothe them, you fold your hands and at the same time insist that you have no power to protect the men who went there after the conditions had been broken and the lands forfeited to the Government. No, the Executive Departments have as much right to protect the settler as they had to legalize the dead grants. That has been the trouble in this matter.

It has been this usurpation—it can be called by no other name—on the part of the executive department which has brought us face to face with this question with which we are contending to-day. Had the executive department obeyed the law when they found the time designated in the grant had expired, when they found the condition there expressed had been broken, then it would have accorded with the duty of the executive department to have modestly folded their hands and said: Congress has fixed the limit, Congress has annexed the condition, the grant is dead, and before it can be vitalized it must done by action of Congress.

The Senator spoke about what took place in committee and I will be excused for saying a few words in regard to that matter. He speaks about the Northern Pacific grant and he asks what became of that, who ever raised their voice in regard to that? Yet that case was before the Committee on Public Lands; they directed Mr. Slater to report the bill to this body for forfeiture and he did so. The bill was placed upon the Calendar and there it is, "A bill to forfeit the unearned lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes," acted upon and received the concurrence of the committee, was favorably reported and placed upon the Calendar, and Mr. Slater, a faithful, diligent, honest Senator, sought, but could not get the opportunity, to have the bill put upon its passage.

I will say further that the reason why the bill did not emerge sooner from the doors of the committee was on account of the continued importunity of the railroad corporations that their counsel should be heard. We listened day after day, week after week, month after month to a repetition of the same arguments, the committee seeking undoubtedly to reach final action as was desired, but yet so great is the power of the railroad companies that they can knock at either door of this Chamber and get admission, they can knock at the Interior Department, they can knock at the executive chamber, they can knock at the door of the committee-room and get admission there, and occupy the time and make all the delay that happens to suit their purpose.

No man knows better than the Senator from Colorado the vigilance, the persistence, and the power which these men exercise. If a reporter had correctly reported the proceedings which took place in the committee-room the Senator would have found that time and again I insisted that there should be voting upon these measures, and I declined to sit hour after hour listening to corporation attorneys repeat the same story and the same argument, but I insisted that there should be action in the committee.

The Senate will excuse me for saying so much. It has nothing to do with the pending matter, and there is no occasion for it only as the Senator saw fit, without any necessity or reason, to feel aggrieved and offended at this resolution.

The issue of these patents was strange, it was suspicious, to say the least. It was suspicious that it should be rushed through with such hot haste. The ex-Secretary says they must not suspend the execution of the law. Who suspended it after 1875? The condition was broken in 1875, when not a foot of this road was built. In 1881, five years after, who suspended it then? For eleven years the speculators have been gambling and endeavoring to make fortunes upon the strength of the grant. The ex-Secretary himself says they have done nothing except to issue bonds. The only thing they ought not to have done was the thing they did do. They issued millions of bonds, but never built a mile of road, and now when it comes down to this last point, when there comes a great question with the law-making power of this Government, when here stands the Senate with a bill upon its Calendar forfeiting a portion of the road, what does the Interior Department——

Mr. TELLER. Not an acre that has been given to this company is included in the forfeiture clause of that bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The Senator says that the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands confirmed the grant just as they had issued it. The records of his own Department will show when they come here that they have been given land for all that road except the sixty-eight miles built by the Morgan Company, to which neither of these companies has a claim. They have issued land for every other mile of the road. The bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands unanimously and placed on the Calendar forfeits more than the sixty-eight miles. It forfeits all on the east side of the Mississippi River and the one hundred and sixty miles of graded road. Such is the attitude. When we receive all the papers here we shall be better able to judge, but I say to my friend it was a suspicious circumstance and was necessary to be inquired into.

The Senator from Louisiana spoke of the repeal of the Backbone charter. The Senator from Colorado antagonizes that by saying it was declared unconstitutional by the court. That is what I understood the Senator to say. Did I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. TELLER. The court decided that the charter could not be repealed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, the court decided it could not be repealed. Now mark! I presume the Secretary and the President were informed what the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company itself said about it. If you look at the record you will see that it was a remarkable suit. On the 9th day of June a petition or a complaint was made in the United States court. On the 9th it was served; on the 11th, two days afterward, there was an answer from the defendant, and then on the 11th, the same day, there was consent that counsel should argue it in writing, and on the 13th, two days after, there was a judgment rendered by the court declaring that the act of the Legislature of Louisiana was unconstitutional. That is expedition about equal to that of the Interior Department. They were just as diligent as the Department. On the 9th proceedings were commenced in the United States court, and on the 13th the decree was rendered. That was suspicious on its face; but here is a paper which was in the Interior Department. Now let us see what Mr. Wheelock, the president of the New Orleans and Pacific Railroad Company, says about this judgment or what the railroad company itself says about it:

The repeal, so far as competent for the Legislature to make it, is an accomplished fact, and whether constitutionally done or not, it has placed Mr. Flanagan's company—under such disability that no sane capitalist will venture his money in any such enterprise until the court of final resort shall have decided this case favorably.

Upon the best showing, the inconsistency, and the hardships and misfortunes of this company have led to the settled belief that they never intend to build this road, could not do so if they would—

Speaking of the Backbone road—

and with the embarrassment of a repealed charter to contend with, tedious and damaging delay in the work would necessarily result, and the company, long before the litigation is closed, will have descended to a point from which even a perpetual land grant can not resurrect them.

He quotes and cites a decision of a district judge of Louisiana—

That is the case to which the Senator from Colorado referred—which declares the unconstitutionality of the act, and seeks to make the impression that a real issue, a valid case was before the court when the decision was made, and that the decision is a decisive one.

The facts, as they appear in the transcript, from which I will read, will show the character of the men who were engaged in this litigation. The suspicious circumstances under which the suit was instituted and prosecuted, and other facts taken in connection with the record, will prove that the case was a fictitious one—

There Mr. Wheelock, in behalf of the New Orleans Pacific, says the case was a fictitious one, and yet the Secretary of the Interior seriously says that that decision was a declaration of the unconstitutionality of the repeal by the State of Louisiana—

The case was a fictitious one; that the suit was a sham.

This whole thing has been a sham. It is a fraud, it was born of fraud, it has progressed thirteen years as a fraud, and, though consummated by the high authority of an Executive Department of the Government, the transaction was a fraud in its ending.

And other facts taken in connection with this record will prove that the case was a fictitious one; that the suit was a sham, and that the decision of the court will amount to nothing in the determination of the constitutionality of this act. More than this, the facts that I will bring out will create a strong presumption that Mr. Flanagan and his associates—have connived at, and been parties to, the trickery by which this manufactured, prepared case came before the United States district court.

They were the Backbone Railroad men—

In this connection I call attention to the statement made by Mr. Flanagan, but not appearing in his printed brief, and which I deem significant as a test of the trustworthiness of the management of the Backbone Company.

The courts were prostituted to aid in the consummation of this, one of the greatest villainies ever connected with land grants. It is here boldly stated, uncontradicted, by the New Orleans Pacific Railroad Company that this was a sham, a pretended fictitious case and a fraud, and yet the Secretary of the Interior feels called upon to throw himself back upon the decision that the repeal made by the Legislature of Louisiana was unconstitutional, and yet the suit was commenced on the 9th of June and ended upon the 13th. There was fraud upon its face, and the New Orleans Pacific, through its president, characterized it as a fraud and showed the character of the transaction.

Mr. President, what more need be said except that the necessity is apparent that the Senate should have the information called for by the resolution? The country will desire to know why the transaction was closed in such haste. It is just as the suit in the district court of the United States, which was commenced on the 9th day of June and closed on the 13th, to declare unconstitutional the act of one of the sovereign States of this Union. Yet, after all, will that seem any more suspicious than the fact that this was done in the dying hours of the last administration by unusual means, by the working of clerks nights and Sundays, by great haste? Forced through in that way, under the whip and spur, it seems a fit ending of a corporation which was sustained by the fraudulent pretense and sham of an adjudication in the United States district court.

The nation will ask why an administration just going out of power should feel it necessary to act in such haste.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw my objection to the resolution of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for the consideration of the resolution.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coast Defenses be, and it is hereby, authorized to employ a clerk, who shall be paid, at the same rate that the other per diem clerks are paid, out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

TUESDAY, March 17, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

RELATIONS BETWEEN LABOR AND CAPITAL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be directed to continue, with a view to its completion during the ensuing vacation, the investigation of the relations between labor and capital, authorized and directed by Senate resolutions of August 7, 1882, and February 26, 1883, with the same rights and powers conferred by previous resolutions of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that there ought to be some investigation as to the contingent fund. I see by papers on my desk that there are three such propositions for the continuance of committees during the recess, and I understand that the contingent fund of the Senate is hardly large enough. I do not know what the facts may be, but I make the suggestion that the state of the fund ought to be investigated before any further burdens are put upon it.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no occasion for an investigation of the contingent fund so far as this resolution is concerned. There can be but very slight expense attending it. It was contemplated that this investigation would be completed during the last vacation, but as I stated or designed to state yesterday, I was unable to attend to it as chairman of the committee, and no expense whatever was incurred.

It has been a very cheap investigation so far as the expenditure of money is concerned. It is one of those investigations which, while it seems to have attracted the attention of everybody as one that must be absorbing the funds of the nation overwhelmingly, has yet cost the very least to the public of any that have ever been instituted by the Senate. Some $25,000 or $30,000 covers the whole expense, while $80,000 is within the limits of at least some investigations which have not covered anything like the ground or which have not involved anything like the amount of labor expended in this case.

Four volumes of testimony have been taken and are published. A little more testimony has been taken which has not yet been published; some half-dozen witnesses or so remain to be examined. Provision has been made by resolution of the Senate and House; a joint resolution, which passed both Houses, for the publication of the whole in five volumes, four of which, as I have stated, are already issued, and the remaining volume, comprising some evidence and the report of the committee, remains to be put in shape for the use of the Printer.

As I stated, a very small amount of the testimony remains to be taken, which was to have been taken during the last vacation, but, for reasons which I have given, failed to be taken. It is not contemplated to expend any considerable amount of money. A thousand or two thousand dollars will undoubtedly cover the whole expense.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] yesterday. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of commerce among the several States, with authority to sit during the recess of Congress, and with power to summon witnesses and to do whatever is necessary for a full examination of the subject. Said committee shall have power to appoint a clerk and stenographer, and the expenses of such investigation shall be paid from the appropriation for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. MORRILL. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois the amount of expense which probably will be incurred under the resolution?

Mr. CULLOM. Of course I am not able to state exactly how much expense might be incurred under the resolution. I will say to the Senator, however, that there is no purpose to get a committee for the sake of having one for a play-spell or anything of that sort.

The Senator from Vermont knows that during the consideration of this subject at the last session of Congress there was a universal expression, wherever anything was said on the subject, that the Congress of the United States was without that full information which was necessary to enable Senators to vote as intelligently as they desired to do upon this very important question. There are several points of difference between Senators on the question of the regulation of interstate commerce. I felt myself during the consideration of the subject, having charge of the bill which was before the Senate, that there was a lack of that definite information which would enable us to do with certainty what we thought we ought to do.

The sole object of the resolution is to get a committee to make specific inquiries, so that the points of difference between Senators can be investigated and considered, testimony taken, &c., so that when Congress comes together again the committee will be able to lay before Congress that information which will satisfy Senators as to their duty in the premises. It will involve considerable work, and I introduced the resolution believing that it was necessary in the interest of the public.

Every man, I think, understands or believes that the subject of the regulation of commerce among the States is one of the most important now before the country, and so far as I am concerned, having had something to do with it, I want to satisfy myself exactly what kind of regulation is necessary in the public interest, and to do that I believe that this sort of committee should be raised.

I do not apprehend that it is going to be a very expensive affair, but still there is going to be some work to do if it does any good, and I ask for the committee for the purpose of getting one that will do the work in the interest of the people of the United States so that when we come to legislate upon this subject again we shall know what we ought to do.

Mr. HOAR. I think that the members of the Senate who have attended to the subject would agree generally that the most valuable state paper of modern times published by this country is the report made by the late Senator and Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Windom, from the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard on the general question of the relation of the railroads to the commerce of the country and the means of controlling the railroads in the interest of commerce. That most instructive, valuable, and profound report brings the subject down to the year 1873. A year or two ago, having occasion to make a careful inquiry in this direction, I found very much the great want of a continuation of the work of that committee, the compilation of the matter which is found in State railroad reports and the reports of the great railroads of the country to their stockholders, with the additional instruction which the experience of the last ten or twelve years has furnished.

The country has been alive to this subject, and I believe there is no single committee of the Senate, either general or special, which can render a service which is more needed by all of us in dealing with the great duties which are before us for next winter than will be done by the committee proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to suggest that I think the Senate has already passed a resolution directing the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard to do the very work which he has suggested?

Mr. HOAR. This is a kindred work. It is a different branch of the subject.

Mr. HARRISON. I refer to a resolution to continue the report of Secretary Windom from that time to the present date. I think on motion of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] such a resolution has already been passed.

Mr. CULLOM. If the Senator from Indiana will allow me, I will state that a resolution was passed continuing the investigation, bringing the work of the committee that the Senator from Massachusetts referred to down to the present time or nearly so, but the purpose I have in view is not covered by that resolution. Under the former resolution the committee referred to by the Senator from Indiana and the Senator from Massachusetts has not its attention directed to specific lines of investigation. Every Senator knows that during the discussion of the question of the regulation of interstate commerce at the last session there were particular lines of ideas upon which Senators on this floor as well as members in the other House of Congress differed, and there was not that specific information which enabled any of us to feel absolutely certain as to which line of action was the best in the interest of the country.

It has been my purpose, if this investigation is ordered, to direct the attention of the committee generally to the whole subject, but specifically to the investigation of those points upon which honorable Senators and the people of the country have differed. I suppose that while the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard might take that into consideration, yet their work as charged by the former resolution does not specifically comprehend the questions which are involved in the regulation of interstate commerce such as we had before us during the last session of Congress. I hope, therefore, that the resolution will be adopted.

Mr. CONGER. My attention has just been called to this resolution. The Senate has always had a very efficient Committee on Commerce, and I presume I may say the Senate has at the present time an efficient Committee on Commerce. I do not know any particular reason why a special committee should be appointed to take charge of a subject-matter which, by the rules and by all custom and all precedent, has been referred to the Committee on Commerce from time immemorial, unless it may be thought that that committee is not capable of performing the duties and functions which have belonged to it and which do belong to it under the rules. Until that be made apparent to the Senate in some manner I venture to presume that the Senate will not desire to take away the duties and functions of an old standing committee and give them to a select committee.

From the remarks of the Senator from Illinois I would conclude that he meant to call attention more particularly to the question of railroad transportation and restrictions upon railroads and upon freights and upon such kindred subjects as might be implied in a law regulating transportation; but if he means simply to embrace the general subject under the clause of the Constitution for the regulation of commerce between the States and with foreign countries and with Indian tribes, I think it would be well enough to discharge the committee which has had and now has charge of that subject and have another appointed.

Mr. CULLOM. If the honorable Senator will allow me, so far as the mover of the resolution is concerned, I have had no purpose whatever to interfere with what has been understood to be the province of the Committee on Commerce, and I do not suppose that the investigation would result in any such arrogation of authority.

Mr. HOAR. The interstate-commerce bill of the last session did not come from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. The bill that had for its object the regulation of interstate commerce during the last Congress did not come from the Committee on Commerce, but came from the Committee on Railroads. But whatever may be the fact as to that, I have had no purpose whatever in seeking to reach out and get possession of subjects that have been regarded as belonging to the Committee on Commerce.

It is true, as the Senator says, that the great work of such a committee as is proposed to be raised would be the investigation of the question of the control of the transportation companies, ordinarily known as railroad companies, and I do not know that it would go beyond that. But

I have felt, as I said before, that further information ought to be obtained if we are going to pass any law by which the internal commerce of the country shall be regulated under the provision of the Constitution, and it is not with any idea of trying to get possession of the special work that has been in the hands of the Committee on Commerce heretofore.

Mr. CONGER. The resolution is very unadvisedly worded, then. Under our rules a Committee on Commerce has been appointed, and all matters relating to that subject by the rules are referred to that committee. Now, it is true that at the last Congress, contrary to all the precedents and contrary to the precedent in the other House, the Railroad Committee did report a bill which subsequently worked its way into and was connected with the bill for the regulation of interstate commerce. As introduced that was a bill to limit and control and regulate railroads. Before it got through it came to be a bill to control all interstate navigation, and endeavored to apply what was supposed to be a rule for transportation and control of railroads to the general regulation of commerce. After it had assumed that form, and for that particular occasion, although the bill that came from the House came from the Committee on Commerce there, and although all bills heretofore on that subject had come into the Senate from the Committee on Commerce or the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, this was allowed to go on in that way, but at the same time with a protest that it was not to be taken as a surrender of the rights of the Committee on Commerce or to be taken as a precedent.

As I said before, if this be a special committee to examine into railroad transportation it should be so worded in the resolution, and if any such resolution is to be passed as this it should be confined to the subject of inquiries as to railroad transportation, and not extend to general navigation and transportation by rail and water.

I think the resolution had better go over until another day.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan proposes that the resolution shall lie over one day.

Mr. CONGER. I will withdraw that suggestion if the Senator from New York wishes to speak.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I think the criticism of the Senator from Michigan upon the objects of the resolution is hardly well founded. For some years back the Committee on Commerce, of which I have the honor of being a member, has not assumed control of measures or investigations relating to commerce by railroads or what might be properly termed interstate commerce. Undoubtedly the scope of the Committee on Commerce is broad enough to cover all those subjects, but by common consent other committees have been established upon railroads and upon interstate commerce, and investigations of that kind have gone to those committees.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It was perhaps before the Senator from New York was a member of the Committee on Commerce that this entire subject was referred to the Committees on Commerce in both Houses.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Of course I am not speaking of the distant past.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It has not been in the very distant past. It was the last time the subject was before Congress except the last occasion.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Of course I have no desire to——

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. CULLOM. By the consent of the Senate, I believe I shall have no objection to inserting the words "by railroads," after "States;" so as to read:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of commerce among the several States by railroads, with authority to sit during the recess, &c.

If that will remove the objection of the Senator from Michigan I will so modify the resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I object to taking the only phrase which can control the powers and duties of the Committee on Commerce as the guide of this proposed committee. If the Senator desires simply to make this an investigation as to some particular restraint upon railroads in regard to freights and things of that kind, that is one thing.

Mr. CULLOM. Those words inserted would relieve the resolution, I think, of any objection which the Senator desired to make.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, after the word "States," insert "by railroads," so as to read:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of commerce among the several States by railroads, with authority to sit during the recess, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified.

Mr. CONGER. I hope there will be no action on the resolution. I made the objection to its being considered to-day and withdrew it simply to hear the Senator from New York.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I yielded to the Senator from Illinois. The Senator from Michigan can make his objection after I finish; he can not do it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. CONGER. If the resolution is not subject to an objection to carry it over, I shall at the proper time make a motion that it go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution was introduced yesterday and was postponed, and it is now before the Senate for adoption.

Mr. CONGER. Then after the Senator from New York has concluded I shall make the motion.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Senator from Michigan always so closely follows parliamentary usage here that it is unnecessary for me to remind him that he can not make his objection while I have the floor.

The subject-matter contained in the resolution, when properly understood, has not, in my judgment, been lately considered by the Committee on Commerce, but it has, either by a vote of the Senate or by unanimous consent, been given to other committees.

I fully agree with the Senator from Illinois and the Senator from Massachusetts in the statement that a proper and full investigation should be had and a report made to the Senate. There are a number of matters deserving of the attention and investigation of the Committee on Commerce, and I shall hope that the chairman of the committee will move in that direction. I refer particularly to an investigation which I think should be made in regard to the workings of the shipping act which was passed a year ago, and which has now been in operation nearly a year. I believe the interests of foreign commerce require that a very thorough investigation of that matter should be made. If that is made by the Committee on Commerce during the recess between now and December, it will have all the work which it can well do.

I for one do not think that the rights of the Committee on Commerce are to be at all invaded or permanently destroyed by the investigation which it is proposed to make under this resolution. I think it very proper, and with the limitation which the Senator from Illinois has suggested I hope that it will pass and that the committee will be raised.

Mr. SAULSBURY. If I read the resolution aright, it asserts the power of the regulation of commerce by the railroads of the country.

Mr. CULLOM. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? The amendment which I made in the third line I think would seem to require that the word "commerce" should be stricken out and the word "transportation" used in its place, so as to read, "to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of transportation among the several States by railroads."

Mr. SAULSBURY. That perhaps might obviate the objection which I was going to state to the resolution, which is that as the resolution had been amended by the Senator from Illinois it presupposed that there were regulations of commerce by the railroads of the country. If I understand the Constitution, the power to regulate commerce belongs to Congress and not to railroads, so that if we should adopt the resolution as amended by the Senator it would be the assertion that there were regulations of commerce by the railroads of the country.

I wish to take this occasion to say that I do not think this committee is necessary. We have had a great many committees of investigation, one of which was referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts. I do not know that any good whatever resulted from that except an expenditure of some $200,000. There were recommendations made by the committee of which Senator Windom was chairman, but I do not know that any practical good has resulted from that investigation, which cost, I believe, somewhere in the neighborhood of $200,000; at least that amount was appropriated to be expended by the committee.

I hold in my hand three resolutions to continue investigations, and if any good has resulted from those investigations except furnishing some general information, if anything has resulted which has shaped the legislation of the country, I do not know what it is.

The fact is, I think that we have too many investigations of this character, and in my opinion it would be well for Congress to put itself in harmony with the present disposition of the executive department of the Government to economize expenditures. The country seems very much pleased with the first steps of the present administration in cutting down the expenditures of the executive department, and I am very sure that if the legislative department of the Government would put itself in harmony with the spirit and purposes of the executive department it also would receive commendation from the country.

All these investigations are attended with enormous expense. Witnesses are summoned and are paid, and large mileage is paid to witnesses. Various expenses are incurred, and it takes a large amount of money from the Treasury of the United States to pay the expenses of these investigations.

Here is a resolution which I hold in my hand to continue investigations in reference to the forestry of the country. We all know something of that subject. I do not know why we want to summon witnesses to testify in regard to that. We know that there have been depredations upon the public lands; we have had investigations of that kind and reports of that character, and I do not see that any practical good can result from that resolution or any of the rest of the resolutions which I hold in my hand. I shall therefore vote against all of them.

Mr. MORRILL. I did not call attention to the resolution of the Senator from Illinois from any hostility to an investigation which would give the Senate further information that might be needed, but from the fact that a resolution was passed by the Senate directing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to look into the question of changing the gaslights to the Edison lights for use in the Senate Chamber; and if anything should be done in that direction it might involve some expenditure from the contingent fund, and observing that there were several propositions of this kind pending, I was not certain that they might not absorb the whole of the contingent fund. I do not wish to have it understood that I object to any of these investigations, but I only referred to the matter for the consideration of the question as to whether we had sufficient funds or not.

Mr. HARRISON. I called attention to the fact, and have sent for the resolution which was adopted by the Senate a few days before the final adjournment of Congress, directing the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard to make this very investigation. It seems to me nothing can be clearer than that the resolution of the Senator from Illinois if adopted will duplicate the work. If it shall be ordered to be done by a special committee, then I hope the other resolution, which was a resolution of the Senate and is still in our power, may be recalled. Certainly the contingent fund of the Senate is not in such a condition that we can now, if we could properly at any time, set two committees of this body, one regular and the other special, to doing precisely the same work; yet it can not be denied that if this resolution passes the work will be duplicated.

I was going to ask the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] what the present condition of the Senate contingent fund is. We have already ordered several investigations which will involve a good deal of expense. The Committee on Indian Affairs has been directed to investigate the subject of leases of Indian lands for grazing purposes. It will be necessary that a subcommittee shall go to the Indian Territory to complete the taking of testimony which was begun here during the session in Washington. Then it will probably be necessary, as papers have been presented here calling the attention of the Senate to some abuses in connection with the leases of the lands of the Crow reservation in Montana, to have a subcommittee go there. I can not recall all the orders which have been made for special examinations.

I am advised further that the contingent fund of the Senate was drawn upon very heavily for the purpose of paying some residuum of the expenses of the late inauguration which were not otherwise provided for. I think an inquiry will develop the fact that that fund is already in some condition of dilapidation; and if all these committees are ordered the result will be that the contingent fund will be exhausted.

At the last Congress the Committee on Territories was directed to make an investigation as to some legislation in the Territory of New Mexico which was thought to be improvident. We made it simply by sending for certain documents; we refused to call witnesses; and yet the few hundred dollars of expense which was incurred in that investigation lay over from last year until this, and as chairman of the committee I have constantly in the interval been dunned by the people to whom the money was due, and it was not until a deficiency bill was recently passed that they were able to get their money. We ought not to lay out a plan of work here by these committees which will involve a deficiency that will compel those who are managing them to advance the money themselves or compel those who are witnesses, those who attend, or others, to remain without their compensation.

I hope, therefore, the Senator from Iowa will make some statement, if he can, as to the condition of the contingent fund, the amount of it, and that the chairman of the Committee on Contingent Expenses will add such information as is in his possession.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I can not give the Senate the information required with absolute accuracy, though it is easily attainable by inquiry at the office of the Secretary, in reference to the contingent fund for the present fiscal year. There is an appropriation for this class of service for the next year of $25,000, the appropriation for this year having been only $15,000. I can furnish, however, some information as to the investigations ordered.

The Committee on Privileges and Elections are authorized to sit during the recess; but I understand for one purpose only, namely, to compile the record of contested cases in the Senate, which of course can not involve any great expense, and probably only involves the expense of the per diem of a clerk during the vacation, which will be a very small sum.

The Committee on Indian Affairs have a number of matters that they are required to investigate during the vacation. I do not know what that expense will be.

The Committee on Naval Affairs, I believe, is authorized to sit during the vacation, for what precise purpose I do not know.

The Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River is also authorized to sit during the recess. I can not think that will be a very expensive investigation.

The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as has already been stated by the Senator from Vermont, are required to investigate during the vacation whether it would be wise or unwise to substitute electric lights for gaslight in this Chamber. I can not think that that will be a very expensive investigation.

Mr. MORRILL. That matter is to be reported upon during this session.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Rules are authorized to sit during the vacation; but I think that in the nature of things will not be a very expensive investigation.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will pardon me for saying that the Committee on Rules is continued ex necessitate. The Senate wing has been transferred to their charge. The committee will not sit at all.

Mr. ALLISON. That authority to sit during the vacation, then, does not involve any expense.

Mr. HARRISON. Except the expense of a clerk.

Mr. ALLISON. Except the expense of a clerk. The committee alluded to by the Senator from Indiana, the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, I believe is authorized to sit during the vacation. I do not know what the scope of that investigation will be.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will allow me I will read the resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard be authorized to sit during the recess of Congress by a subcommittee or otherwise, to employ a stenographer, and with the same authority given the committee under the resolution of July 6, 1884—

Which was to continue the investigation made in the Windom report.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator—he is familiar with that, I believe——

Mr. HARRISON. I am not on the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I will ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether that is likely to be an expensive investigation?

Mr. ALDRICH. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. ALLISON. Then having gone over these several committees that are to sit during the recess I do not think the expense will amount to a very great sum. Now, coming to the question of the resolution of the Senator from Illinois, I think that investigation ought to be made, and I know of no better way of making it than that proposed by the Senator from Illinois, to select five Senators, who shall be charged with the duty of undertaking that work and reporting to us at the beginning of the next session.

I know of no more important question pending in this country today than the question of the relation of our transportation companies to the people of the United States. I know that that has been a subject of investigation in the House of Representatives and it was also debated at considerable length here during the last session and gave rise to differences of opinion with reference to the situation of the railroads with regard to the question of transportation; and I supposed on reading the resolution of the Senator from Illinois that it was his purpose and intention to really continue the investigation of the subject that was debated here during the last session. If that is his purpose and the purpose of the committee which he proposes to raise, I can think of no more important question to be investigated during the vacation of eight or nine months than the question which he proposes to investigate here; and, for one, I shall vote for this investigation in the belief that there is a sufficient sum of money already appropriated to cover the purpose; but if there is not, I think the matter is of such magnitude and of such interest to all the people that it is important that we should have full and complete information upon it. That is a question which we all know was not disposed of at the last session. The House of Representatives passed a bill and sent it to the Senate at a very late day. The Senate of the United States, after such deliberation as it could have on the subject in the brief time allowed, returned a bill to the House of Representatives, and that bill was permitted to sleep without the usual committee of conference being ordered on this important question. So the matter hangs between the two Houses without any solution of it. For one, I desire that the Senate shall be placed in possession of such information as will enable us to deal with the question when we meet here in December next and deal with it with an intelligence that we ought to have in dealing with great subjects of this character. Therefore I hope the Senator from Illinois will be authorized to have a committee of five Senators, and that that committee will use the time intervening between the close of this executive session and the beginning of the next regular session to furnish us such information as they can procure for the purpose of legislation at the next session.

Mr. HARRISON. Does not the Senator from Iowa know that the resolution already passed directs the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard to make this very investigation?

Mr. ALLISON. I did not know that.

Mr. HARRISON. It does.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Indiana is mistaken in the statement he has just made. The Committee on Transportation Routes were directed to continue practically the Windom report of 1873 and to furnish certain statistics in regard to the prices of articles, the rates of transportation, and the amount and extent of the internal commerce of the United States. That investigation is not directed particularly to the legislation of the various States or to legislation by Congress, but merely to furnish facts in continuation of those contained in the report made by Mr. Windom in 1873.

There seems to be, in my mind at least, a distinction between the two committees. The function of one is to furnish facts in relation to the direction of trade and questions collateral to that; and of the other to investigate the proper legislation required at the hands of Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not suppose that the Committee on Transportation Routes would be authorized or would take cognizance of the questions involved in the resolution of the Senator from Illinois, because that committee does not have control of those subjects. Its function is merely with reference to transportation routes to the seaboard. The question involved here is the general question of interstate commerce, and it seems to me that that is of sufficient magnitude to require the attention of five Senators who are willing to give their time and attention to the subject during the vacation.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the subject of interstate commerce and its regulation is the leading or at least among the leading measures which were considered by the Forty-eighth Congress with that degree of care and attention demanded by their importance and which have attracted the attention of the country, and I am willing to have any sort of investigation made in that respect which will throw light upon the question, especially of the competitive effect of railroad and river transportation and how far one acts as a competitor of the other. The present condition of railroad affairs in the United States, it occurs to me, makes it unusually important that this question should be investigated. But I have to say to the Senator from Iowa that what I regard as somewhat a thrust at the House in what he has said was in my opinion not called for. I can now speak of that because the Forty-eighth Congress has no existence now.

The House of Representatives sent a measure to us which pointed out a theory for interstate-commerce legislation. The House had had under consideration the commission system. It had distinctly voted down the commission system. The Senate was fully advised of that fact when the House bill came to us, and the Senate deliberately adopted the commission system notwithstanding that system had been voted down by the House; and the House did, and properly in my judgment, let the Senate bill sleep, because it was directly antagonistic to the bill which they had presented to us in every essential particular, and no conference could have led to any conclusion unless one or the other House had squarely backed down, which was not at all probable. There could be no compromise, because the theory of the House bill was in direct antagonism to that of the Senate.

That accounts for the action of the House. It was a deliberate action on the part of the House, because they had deliberately acted on both plans and had adopted the system of settling the question between the shipper and the railroad by due process of law in the courts of justice, while the Senate, disregarding that, struck out the entire House bill and put in, as a so-called amendment, a substitute adopting the commission system, which had been rejected by the House by a deliberate vote on the yeas and nays. I desire that to go on record with the statement of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. Would it disturb the Senator if I asked a question?

Mr. MAXEY. Not in the slightest degree.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it not usual when the two Houses disagree with reference to the detail of a measure which both desire to pass that a conference is had upon the differences?

Mr. MAXEY. I think the question was as clearly presented during the discussion as it could possibly be. The Senator from Kentucky not now in his seat [Mr. BECK] in his usual manner stated that the very course which was pursued by the Senate in deliberately setting aside and holding for naught the action of the House and adopting a different system meant and was designed to mean that there should be no legislation at all. That was his view of the matter. I do not say that I go to that extent, but I do say that the course which the House pursued in my judgment was the dignified course to pursue under the circumstances. Whatever may be the usual course in ordinary cases where there is mere difference of opinion as to details that is not this case. This was not a case like those usually submitted where differences in detail may be adjusted in conference. The difference was in distinct and conflicting theories.

Here were two systems antagonistic to each other. Both those plans had been discussed in the House of Representatives and deliberately acted upon; one had been voted down by a yea-and-nay vote, and the other by an overwhelming majority had been adopted. The Senate, disregarding the action of the House, set it aside and held it for naught and took the plan rejected by the House and adopted that and sent it back to the House, and the House sent it to the tomb of the Capulets, where it justly, rightfully, and properly sleeps the sleep that knows no waking.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say that so far as the little expense connected with this matter is concerned, with me it is as a drop in the bucket as compared with the magnitude of the question involved. I care not where the information comes from, whether from the Railroad Committee, the Commerce Committee, or a special committee. That information which is sought is of the utmost importance to the well-being of this country. All must admit that no greater question can be presented for the material interests of the people than this very question of transportation. The whole country to-day is suffering from a derangement of the transportation system resulting from a conflict between the owners of the railroads and their employés. That the people will suffer still more than they have done is, I think, pretty sure, from the fact that the only remedy which is left in the way of competition with railroad transportation is river transportation, and we have neglected to make any appropriation whatever to keep our rivers in good condition.

Sir, this is a great question, and it makes no difference to me where the information comes from so that it is fairly obtained and all sides of the question are presented. The plan of the Reagan bill as it is known, the plan of the commission bill as it is known, and every plan that has been presented have been discussed in Congress and by the country. I want a committee to look into the question honestly, squarely, and fairly, and let us have an honest bill that men who really desire the best interests of the country can unite upon. So much for that.

I say in behalf of the resolution proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs that I helped at a former Congress to procure the passage of the resolution, and I speak from personal knowledge when I say that I think the Committee on Indian Affairs ought to sit during the recess of the Senate. We have pending three or four different propositions of grave magnitude concerning our Indian relations. There is a question as to whether or not a new and novel court bill shall be adopted creating a court in the Indian Territory, creating a class of jurymen never before known to the law. That is a question which should be looked into and investigated, and we should look into the condition of the country as to whether or not they are sufficiently conversant with our system of laws to sit upon juries and to hold court. That is a question which that committee ought to investigate. The question of leases, about which so much has been said all over the country, should be looked into; and the great question which is looming up now, the Oklahoma question, should be looked fairly and squarely in the face by the Committee on Indian Affairs. As one of the members of that committee I feel it to be my duty to say that that committee in my judgment ought to sit and look patiently into all these questions.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, so far as the remarks of the Senator from Texas in reference to the attitude of the House of Representatives in refusing to confer with the Senate on differences between the two Houses is concerned, I have only to say that his remarks are as unusual as they are strange, and in my opinion——

Mr. MAXEY. I do not hear the Senator.

Mr. DAWES. I say that so far as the Senator undertakes to justify the House of Representatives in refusing to confer with the Senate on differences between them on a pending bill, his remarks are quite unusual in any quarter, and in my opinion more than unusual in this body. The House of Representatives discussed a measure in two aspects and decided in favor of one of them. The Senate discussed the same measure in both aspects, and came to a different conclusion. The Senator announces that because the Senate dared to differ in its conclusion upon that measure from the form in which it came to us from the other branch, in his opinion the House of Representatives consulted its own dignity and the proprieties of the situation in refusing to confer with the Senate upon their differences. So far as I can see, it involves the question whether there shall be any conferences between the two Houses upon their differing votes. It does not involve the merit of the difference so much as it does the propriety of conferring with each other upon their differences. If the idea suggested by the Senator from Texas in vindication of the position of the House be sound, there is an end to all conferences between the two Houses. There would be no occasion for conferences if there were not differences, and it is quite begging the question to say because a Senator differs from a majority of the body and agrees with a majority of the other branch, therefore it did not become the other branch to confer at all with the Senate upon the questions of difference.

Sir, the doctrine undertaken to be sustained in that manner puts an end to deliberations between the two Houses. Agreement can only come of full and free conference, such alone as is the custom and the parliamentary law of these two bodies; and there can be no shifting of responsibility before the country for an utter failure of any legislation upon this important question from that House which refused to confer with the Senate because the Senate took upon itself to venture a difference of opinion, and yet asked the House to confer with them to see if there were not some common ground upon which they could agree, some measure upon which they could agree that would be beneficent and remedy acknowledged and existing evils. That House which has refused to confer with the other upon a pending measure goes to the country with the declaration that the existing evils are not grievous and serious enough to demand its deliberation with its co-ordinate branch of the legislative assembly. That is the question before the country. Are the evils acknowledged and existing and calling for legislation so grievous as to justify conference between the two branches of the Legislature? And that branch which says it does not and will not confer may go to the country upon that issue and answer to its constituents.

Sir, so far as the investigations are concerned, let me say that I agree with the Senator from Iowa in the importance of these investigations and in the propriety of the method suggested by the Senator from Illinois, and I hope that his resolution will prevail. I know that drafts to a great extent have been made upon the contingent fund of the Senate in pursuing various investigations, but up to this time I think that the country will see that the benefit arising from the investigations—I say it with great confidence as to all of them except those in which I have had a part—has been more than to compensate for all the expense. It has been my lot to have had considerable of that work devolved upon me by the Senate, never by my own asking. The last year the Committee on Indian Affairs was charged with a very extensive investigation, which took its members very many miles—thousands of miles—from their homes when their fellow-Senators were enjoying that ease to which we were all entitled after our laborious service here.

I ought to say in vindication of the contingent fund this much: The money which was set apart from that fund and placed in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms to be expended in the discharge of the duties devolving upon the Committee on Indian Affairs, though they devoted themselves nearly the entire vacation to that work, was but partially expended. More than half of it is still in the hands of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and enough, in my opinion, to defray all the expenses of the investigations by the Indian Committee that have been devolved upon it for the next vacation. I hope so at least. Certainly if these investigations can be carried on as economically as they were the last session there will be more than enough in the Sergeant-at-Arms's hands now withdrawn from the contingent fund to defray all the expenses of the investigations which the Indian Committee will be compelled in vacation to pursue. Their importance the Senator from Texas has well called the attention of the Senate to.

The perplexing questions which are pressing upon the Executive and upon Congress growing out of the new conditions of things among the Indians will call upon those who undertake these investigations to spend very much time and labor and pains and work in the investigations. Still I think they will not be compelled to draw anew upon the contingent fund; at least I hope they will not; and therefore in all the calculations of the Senate in reference to new investigations or the drafts upon the contingent fund I think it is safe for them to lay out of consideration the expenses that the Indian Committee will incur in pursuing their investigations.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts has seen proper to reply to my remarks, as he had a right to do. I have listened very patiently to all he has said, and I am exactly of the opinion I held before. The country has seen the course pursued by the Senate and the course pursued by the House on the great interstate-commerce bill. It has passed out of Congress; it has gone into the hands of the people, and there if the Senator sees proper to throw down the gauntlet it will be taken up, and the question determined which was right, the Senate or the House. Unusual, says the Senator, was the course of the House. Is it more unusual than was the course of the Senate when upon a mere little internal-revenue bill of half a dozen lines the Senate, in opposition to the spirit if not the letter of the Constitution, ingrafted an entire tariff bill from beginning to end under the pretext of an amendment? Was the course of the House on that measure more unusual that the course of the Senate on this? During the existence of this country since it was first organized down to that good hour there was no precedent for that action of the Senate. That is all I wish to say on that point.

The House acted as I believe they had a right to act. The country understands the question and the country believes that the men who passed that House bill meant to regulate interstate commerce. It believes they meant that, and there is a belief that whether the Senate meant to regulate interstate commerce or not, the plan which was adopted has no effective force or power whatever. The Senate undertook to create a commission absolutely without power to correct a single evil, and the country understands that, and the House was not willing to pass it. That is all.

The Reagan bill as passed by the House had been discussed by the country for years. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] stated in the course of his argument that in his great State, which he in part represents with such distinction, the general spirit of the people as evidenced in their petitions was in favor of that bill. So it was everywhere all over the country; but that bill was rejected here, and although I was in a minority, I have not yielded my judgment to the majority on that question, and I am willing to place that before the people and let them determine whether the Senator from Massachusetts who has seen proper to arraign me for disagreeing with the majority, as I do very often with the majority in this Chamber, is wrong or whether I am wrong. The whole question between the two Houses in respect to interstate commerce is before the country. I am willing to abide its decision.

Mr. DAWES. My good friend from Texas seems to have failed entirely to understand what I said. It was not a question whether the House was right or the Senate right upon the amendment to the bill. That was not the question. Upon that question Senators and Representatives may well differ. It was upon the question whether the House should say, "We will not confer with the Senate upon these differences." That was my criticism of the remark of the Senator. He justified the House in refusing to confer with the Senate because the Senate took the liberty to differ with the House. That was the criticism which I made, and that was the length and the breadth of it.

I do not discuss here and I am not sure that I should quite agree with the position which the majority of the Senate ultimately took upon that bill or with the bill which came from the House; but I had faith when I voted that a conference, a free and full conference in the language of the parliamentary law, would have brought out just such a bill as the mischief and the exigency required. But the Senator says he justifies the House in refusing to confer, and I say that justifying the House is declaring to the country that the continuance of the evil and the mischief is not so great as would be the danger of the House conferring with the Senate upon their differences of opinion.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I believe I have not spoken a word in opposition to the suggestion that it would be wise at this time to make the investigation called for by the resolution of the Senator from Illinois. I did, early in the discussion, suggest that the Senate was duplicating this work; that it had already directed the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard to make this very inquiry. I find by looking at the report of that committee, as made by Mr. Windom, which has been referred to by several Senators, and the value of which is not overestimated by them, that it covered the whole subject, that it was intended to be the basis of legislation directly in the line suggested by the Senator from Illinois, that all the questions of the publication of rates and of reasonable profits and of the limitation of dividends and of the powers of the General Government were discussed; and the evidence taken by that committee was intended to furnish Congress with a full magazine of information to be the basis of legislation regulating interstate commerce by railroad. That committee is still continued in force. Last summer the Senate passed this resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard be, and they are hereby, authorized to sit at any place within the United States during the recess of Congress, by subcommittee or otherwise, to take testimony for the purpose of preparing statistical data relative to freights, commodities, and prices for the period from 1873—

Which was the date of the Windom report—to the present time; the committee to report by bill or otherwise.

What sort of bill were they to report and on what subject, if it was not the subject of the regulation of transportation by railroad?

And that the necessary expense thereof, including the services of a clerk, be paid out of the expenses for special and select committees, &c., of the contingent fund of the Senate.

I have already read the resolution adopted at the last session referring to the resolution which I have just read and continuing to that committee the powers given to it by that resolution. Now I undertake to say, whatever may be the plan of the Senator from Rhoad Island who is the chairman of that committee, that the Senate has authorized and directed just such an investigation as by that committee is thought to be important here. It may be that the Senator from Rhode Island does not contemplate doing this work. It may be that he will not sit at the great commercial centers with his committee and take this testimony. Perhaps he does not contemplate that. I supposed that the committee contemplated doing the work which had been suggested to the Senate as proper and necessary to be done and which the Senate had authorized and directed to be done. I resented the suggestion which has been made as to some of these resolutions, that it was simply the question of a clerk or anything of that kind, and supposed that the intention of the committee in proposing these resolutions was to do thoroughly and well the work which the Senate directed them to do. If they do intend to do it, it covers the whole ground proposed by the Senator from Illinois. If they do not, it is a self-imposed limitation, and not because the resolution is not broad enough to cover it all. My point was simply that we ought not to have two committees doing this thing, and I think it must be apparent to every Senator that if the resolution of the Senator from Illinois proposing a special committee to do this work is to be adopted—and I say to him frankly I think it ought to be adopted—it is probably the better way to do the work, especially as we are advised by the Senator from Rhode Island that he does not intend to undertake it with his committee, then we shall want some excuse offered, I think, for continuing in force the resolutions as to the other committee.

Mr. President, the Senator from Iowa went over the divers committees that had been directed to do something, and he said it simply involved the expense of having a clerk, which probably would not involve much, if any, expense; but in many of these cases provision is also made for a stenographer. The simple expense of continuing one of these committee clerks at $6 a day during the vacation would be $1,500 or $1,800, and the aggregate of them all would probably be $9,000 or $10,000, even if the committee did not sit and take testimony, as they are authorized to do.

I have made the point I intended to make. Perhaps the Senator from Rhode Island, as chairman of the Committee on Transportation Routes, has the power to limit the work, though the Senate has given it at his suggestion a pretty wide range. If he does so limit it and applies himself simply to the collection of some published statistics on the subject now accessible but not aggregated, probably he will not involve us in much more expense than the payment of his clerk during the vacation.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr. President, the resolution which has been read by the Senator from Indiana directs the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard to collect certain statistical data for the period from 1873 to the present time. Neither the chairman of that committee nor any member of it proposes to impose any limitation upon that inquiry. They propose in good faith, so far as I know, to do exactly what the Senate asked them to do.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator propose to sit in the great commercial centers and take the testimony contemplated?

Mr. ALDRICH. There is no testimony in great commercial centers contemplated by the resolution. Whatever the Senator from Indiana may have in his own mind was not known to the members of that committee before.

Mr. HARRISON. Why, then, the authority for which the Senator asked to sit at any place within the United States during the recess of Congress by subcommittee or otherwise and to take testimony?

Mr. ALDRICH. Those are the usual words of resolutions of this kind authorizing committees to sit during the recess. The form used there is the form used always. If the Senator had listened to the preliminary report made by the committee, or if he would do the committee the honor to take it now and read it, he would find that they state in their report that they have not found it necessary to take any testimony. They have with considerable diligence, I believe, as I think the Senator when he sees the report will admit, proceeded to carry out the instruction of the Senate in collecting statistical data.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator do me the favor to yield to another question?

Mr. ALDRICH. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask how many meetings of the committee were held during the recess?

Mr. ALDRICH. Two, I think.

Mr. HARRISON. Where? Here?

Mr. ALDRICH. One in New York and one here. They involved no considerable expense to the United States. The Senator, if he thinks that committee have been expending the money of the Government improvidently, is very much mistaken. He can find by an investigation at the office of the Secretary of the Senate or elsewhere that we have expended no money improvidently in meeting at the great commercial centers of the United States. We have employed certain statistical experts to assist the committee in procuring information which we then believed and which I now believe is extremely valuable in the discussion of the questions involved in the interstate-commerce problem.

The committee never have considered themselves intrusted with the duty of investigating the interstate-commerce question, merely for the reason that this committee never had jurisdiction of that subject. The Committee on Railroads reported the bill which was discussed so ably in the Senate by the Senator from Illinois and others, and the Committee on Commerce believed that they had some jurisdiction over the question of interstate commerce. The question of interstate commerce as such has never been considered by the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

Mr. HARRISON. That was the very object of the constitution of the original committee, and to that committee was referred a part of the President's message; and the resolutions of the Senate expressly continued to that committee the very question; and the only reason why it is continued to-day is because it is supposed to succeed to the duties and that the original exigency still requires them, which were to look into this very question and propose legislation.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the Senator from Indiana himself was chairman of this committee when this question of interstate commerce was referred to the Committee on Railroads and when it was reported from that committee to the Senate; and if he has allowed the duties and prerogatives of that committee to lapse, it is his fault and not the fault of the present chairman of the committee. I never have understood, and I think no member of the committee has understood, that the broad question of interstate commerce was submitted to us for investigation. We had a certain line of investigation which we have been trying to follow. The work is now in progress, and I believe that we shall have some results which will be satisfactory to the Senate to show for any expenditure which we may make.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I did not expect when this resolution was introduced by me that it would call forth quite that extensive discussion which has seemed to occur to-day. I introduced it feeling, as I have felt ever since I came into the Senate, that there was a lack of specific information upon this great subject of the regulation of commerce between the several States. When I came into the Senate I believed that some legislation by Congress ought to be had, and in pursuance of that conviction I introduced a bill, which was referred to the Committee on Railroads on my motion simply because I happened to be on the committee, not with any desire to take jurisdiction from any other committee of that subject or any other. A bill was reported from the committee to the Senate. It was before the Senate a portion of the first session of the last Congress and during the last session of Congress until the Senate passed a bill. As every Senator upon this floor knows, every gentleman who spoke upon the subject in the Senate, I believe, gave utterance to the expression that there was not that definite information furnished to the Senate by anybody which was sufficient to entitle us to be certain as to what line of policy we should pursue in the attempt to regulate commerce by Congress.

So far as I was concerned and so far as the Committee on Railroads were concerned we reported the best bill that we could, and the Senate passed a bill the best that it thought it could. There was no purpose on my part or on the part of anybody else, so far as I know, in the Senate, to run a policy against the idea pursued by the House of Representatives. The House of Representatives under the lead of the distinguished gentleman from Texas passed a bill after very considerable discussion. It came to the Senate. The Senate considered that bill. The Senate considered a substitute for it, and after amending the substitute the Senate passed the substitute by as overwhelming a majority, I may be allowed to say, as was the House bill passed by the House of Representatives.

But that is neither here nor there. So far as I am concerned I have no special desire to cling to one idea or to one policy or theory upon this question. I am willing, if investigation convinces me it is right, to adopt the policy pursued by the House. If investigation convinces me that the Senate bill was not right in all particulars or in any particular, then I shall vote against that bill. But I do insist that the Senate of the United States is disposed to quibble over an important question when it lets trifling things be passed through here that are not of very much consequence to this country. There is no question before the country to-day in which the great body of the American people are more interested than they are in this question of regulating commerce between the several States; and I say that it comes with ill grace from anybody to insist that there shall not be that thorough, close, impartial, fair investigation which is necessary in order to enable the Senate to do the right thing.

I do not care what becomes of the bill that passed the Senate or that which passed the House so far as those measures are concerned, but I do care to know when I vote for a bill during the next session, which I hope to have the opportunity of doing, that the bill which the Senate and Congress shall pass will be the bill most in the interest of the great body of the people of this country.

Now I want to suggest another thing. There has been more or less testimony taken by the committee in charge of this subject in the other House of Congress at different sessions, and there has scarcely been anybody before that committee who was not a railroad president, or a railroad solicitor, or some magnate of that sort giving testimony before the committee. I want to go to the people upon this question and find out what they want as well as what the railroads want, and when the honorable Senator from Texas says that he is for any fair investigation, so far as I am concerned if I have anything to do with it there shall be no other kind of an investigation by any committee with which I am connected.

With these remarks I desire that this resolution shall be acted upon. If the Senate does not want the information, does not want the investigation upon the specific points which are in controversy among the people and in the Congress of the United States, let it vote the resolution down. That is all I have to say about it.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I move to amend the resolution by striking out the words "commerce among," in the second and third lines, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "transportation by railroad of freights and passengers between;" so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of the transportation by railroad of freights and passengers between the several States, &c.

My amendment directs the object of this select committee, if it is to be raised, in the channel in which I understand the Senator from Illinois desires to direct its inquiries. The resolution as it is now offered by the Senator from Illinois takes the whole subject of the regulation of commerce among the several States. That question is the entire jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. The Senator from Illinois at the last Congress introduced a bill, which was referred properly, I think, at the time it was introduced, to the Committee on Railroads, and the result of that was the report of a bill regulating the transportation of freights by railroads between the several States. The Senator having had charge of that subject, it is perhaps well that he should continue it; and whatever course he desires to take in regard to that, so far as I am concerned, I am willing that that course should be taken; but to interfere with the general——

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. McMILLAN. I will.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota why he confines this investigation to transportation by railroads alone. When a railroad runs upon the bank of a river for two hundred miles, and transportation is conducted on the railroad and on the river in competition, why should he investigate the one and refuse to investigate the other?

Mr. McMILLAN. So far as the question of transportation by water routes is concerned we have a very enlarged report on that subject from the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

Mr. BROWN. But as the competition is between the two, and the proposed committee is to have charge of the railroads, why not investigate the river transportation at the same time?

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the only competition railroads have in the transportation of freights is perhaps with water routes, and we have heard no complaint——

Mr. BROWN. They often compete with each other.

Mr. MCMILLAN. We have heard no complaint of overcharges on the water routes.

Mr. BROWN. They very often compete with each other; and many a time a water route and a railroad route are the same, or, in other words, it takes both to form the one route—part of the route is by railroad and part is by water. Sometimes there is a link in the middle that is water and the balance rail at each end.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The water routes are always open to competition. Any person may put a boat upon the waters of this country and carry freight, but every person can not build a railroad. If the Senator from Georgia desires a modification of that kind, and the Senator from Illinois desires it, I have no objection to that. My object was to confine the investigation of this special committee to the particular subject of the regulation of transportation by rail, and not the regulation of commerce between the States.

Mr. BROWN. I would move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota after the word "railroad," as I recollect it, by inserting:

And water routes in connection therewith, or in competition with the railroad.

Mr. CULLOM. All right.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BROWN. I would say "water routes in connection or competition with railroad routes."

Mr. MCMILLAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota as amended.

Mr. BROWN. That is the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota as amended by my amendment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. As modified.

Mr. BROWN. By the amendment offered by myself?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the modification to be accepted. The resolution as proposed to be amended will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of transportation by railroad and water routes in connection therewith as in competition with railroads, of freights and passengers between the several States, with authority to sit during the recess of Congress, and with power to summon witnesses, &c.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I do not rise, Mr. President, for the purpose of opposing the resolution of the honorable Senator from Illinois or the amendment, but simply to make a suggestion to the Senate.

It will be remembered that some ten or twelve years ago this question of interstate commerce was under discussion by the people of the country and it reached Congress. The result was that a committee of investigation, known as the Committee to Investigate Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, was appointed. At great expense, lasting through a year or two, the members of that committee proceeded to investigate the whole subject, and I suppose no more able report was ever submitted to Congress than that made by that committee. They took a long time, they traveled over a large section of the country, they investigated every single thing that could be investigated touching the whole question of transportation both as to water routes and rail transportation, and submitted their report to Congress.

At that time complaints were made of discrimination, complaints were made as to the unreasonableness of freight charges. The same allegations have existed from that time to this, and complaints are coming to us to-day of unreasonable freight charges and of discrimination between different points and different individuals. For ten long years the House of Representatives also has been considering this question, and the records of the House to-day will show more intelligent testimony printed upon this question than upon any subject that was ever presented to Congress. Not only the shippers of freights but the transporters of freights and passengers have been examined; both sides of the question have been discussed; and if this committee were raised by this resolution the proper place for them to get information would be to go to the committee of the House of Representatives and sit down and read its records, for certainly the information can not be obtained in any other way so useful for the committee as it could be obtained there.

Now, sir, it is proposed to raise a committee to investigate a subject which the Congress that has just expired has investigated and the House of Representatives has considered by its committee and passed a bill through the House providing for a settlement of the question in a certain way. It proposed to fix the rates of transportation; it first proposed that as between two points the rates should be reasonable; it then proposed that as between points of lesser distance the freights should be less. In the first place it made a rate and then said that to points of shorter distance the rate should be a less rate than that charged for a longer distance.

The Senate on the other hand considered also the same subject. The committee of the Senate, charged with the consideration of the question, also reported a bill. It did not agree with the House bill, and the Senate bill received the votes of a large majority of the members of the Senate. That bill proceeded upon the idea that there was no way to settle this question except by conferring upon a commission to be appointed by the President power to determine in every case of complaint the reasonableness of the charges and all questions of discrimination.

Now I submit to the Senator from Illinois that after his committee with their roving commission run all over this country, in the end he will settle right down exactly to the principle found in the Senate bill, that a commission must be raised upon whom will be conferred the power and all power necessary to treat and to deal as between the lines of transportation and those using them. That commission, it was supposed, would be one of experts, of intelligent men, and after you have roamed the country all over you will come down simply to that proposition and report a like bill to that reported before, that a commission shall be clothed with power to determine the rights of the shipper as against the interests of the transportation company. After you have expended your money, spent your time, and traveled all over the land, you will then have no more information than can now be found in the records of the House and the Senate.

The expenditure of money is called for to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, not only for this purpose but for several other purposes as I have heard expressed on the other side of the Chamber, and I ask Senators, what has been the experience of the Senate touching these matters? What benefit have these junketing tours over the country been in respect of information necessary to be had, as the Senator from Illinois says, with respect to these subjects? I do not know that we are much better informed than we could have been informed by having gentlemen visit Washington and give their testimony on these subjects and having their testimony appear in our printed reports. We may raise a special committee here for every purpose and for every bill that is likely to come before the consideration of the Senate or the House of Representatives, but with what result in making legislation?

A few years ago we employed a tariff commission. They traveled all over the country; they took any amount of testimony; that testimony was printed at great expense to the people of the country; and with what result? It resulted in nothing. No more information could be obtained from that report than almost any Senator who was at all conversant with the subject had before. A bill was presented as being the very best thing that the Congress of the United States could do touching the question of a tariff on imported merchandise and the relations of labor and capital in this country. What was done with it? The House simply emasculated the bill. It was sent to the Senate Committee on Finance, and when it left that committee even its originators and friends could scarcely know it. Therefore I say that no practical good comes from these special committees and commissions; and upon this particular question certainly there is no necessity for a committee of investigation, because we have more information upon it than upon any question to-day before Congress.

There is one thing for Congress to do with respect to this matter: either confer power upon somebody to keep the railroads of the country in check or pass the bill that was sent here from the House of Representatives by which the Senate and House of Representatives proceeded themselves to say how freight and passenger traffic should be conducted in this country. There are two distinct ideas and two distinct separate modes of action. One of them must and should be adopted. I think the Senator from Illinois will scarcely give us more information, even if he spends six months in making the investigation, than we now have.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask for a vote, Mr. President.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment. After the word "subject" I move to insert:

And report to the Senate on or before the first Monday of December next.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that. I do not see the use of the word "before." We can not very well report to Congress before the first Monday of December.

Mr. TELLER. "On or before the first Monday," that is the assembling of Congress.

Mr. CULLOM. We can not report before.

Mr. TELLER. No. Well, say "on the first Monday."

Mr. DAWES. I would not make it the first day of the session. I agree with the Senator from Colorado that the committee ought to be required to report very early, but I would not say the first day of the session.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to saying "the second Monday of December." That gives a week after Congress meets.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to saying "on or before the second Monday."

Mr. TELLER. I will say "on or before the second Monday of December."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois accept the proposed amendment?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes, sir; I accept it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN], which will be read.

The SECRETARY. In lines 2 and 3 it is proposed to strike out the words "commerce among the States" and insert "the ransportation by railroad and water routes, in connection or in competition with said railroads, of freights and passengers between the several States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution as amended, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed to investigate and report upon the subject of the regulation of the transportation by railroad and water routes in connection or in competition with said railroads of freights and passengers between the several States, with authority to sit during the recess of Congress, and with power to summon witnesses and to do whatever is necessary for a full examination of the subject, and report to the Senate on or before the second Monday of December next. Said committee shall have power to appoint a clerk and stenographer, and the expenses of such investigation shall be paid from the appropriation for expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate.

The resolution was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, it was Ordered, That George W. Kingsbury have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

After two hours and fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, March 18, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE AND FORESTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] on the 13th instant, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be, and it is hereby, continued, and authorized to sit during the recess of Congress to consider the best means of preserving the forests of the public domain, and to employ a clerk at the regular per diem, who shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know some reasons why all the committees of the Senate shall be continued during the recess and made peripatetic, with authority to visit different parts of the country, to employ a clerk, which is equivalent to an annual clerk, to employ a stenographer, and I suppose a messenger.

As I intimated the other day when I objected to the present consideration of one of these resolutions, I simply desire to say that if this thing is continued, in due time the Senate will hear something that may be interesting upon this question, and that something will be the extraordinary expenditures of the Senate beyond anything they have ever been in the history of the Senate. I submit this to my friends who are in the majority and who have the right to control the expenditures of the Senate in whatever manner they choose. The responsibility rests entirely with them.

I merely enter my protest now against these unnecessary and improper expenditures of the public money, and say that in my humble opinion they are not justified by the business interests of the Senate or of the country; and our friends can take the responsibility.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. There is no expenditure provided for in the resolution except the payment of a clerk. The meetings of the committee, no matter where they may be held throughout the country, will be paid for, if held at all, by the members of the committee themselves. I have been on investigating committees before, and thus far in my short period of service in the Senate I have been able to pay my own expenses and have not called upon the Government to do it. There is nothing of the kind in this resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator yield for a question in that respect? I have never been on an investigating committee, and therefore can not speak from experience, but my understanding has been that all the special and select committees that sit during the recess of the Senate have their hotel bills, their railroad fare, their sleeping-berths, and such things paid for at public expense. That is my understanding. I may be mistaken about it, but I think the record shows it.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I suppose that where a committee is ordered to make an investigation, and where the resolution provides for the expenses of the committee so ordered, the expenses are so paid. I have no doubt that is true, but there is nothing of the kind in this resolution.

The subject of forestry has been committed to the Committee on Agriculture, and I have desired to make a study of it, and to present it to the Senate. There is no expenditure provided for in the resolution except the payment of a clerk to do that work. I believe it to be important; I believe it to be valuable. Certainly the committee can not do it during the sessions of the Senate.

If the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry had been given an annual clerk, as I think should have been given by the Senate, there would be no occasion for the resolution, because then the committee could go on and do its work and keep the clerk employed without a resolution of the Senate. The Senate did at one time a few weeks ago during the past session of Congress, by a majority vote, provide that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry should be made an annual committee and should have an annual clerk, but that came as an amendment to another amendment which finally failed, and so it went down.

The object is to put the committee in shape so that this work can be continued and carried on. There will be no expense attending it except the payment of the clerk. I believe the work to be done will be of sufficient value to more than repay the expenditure which will be put upon it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The very difficulty to which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] refers arises from the fact of the unjust assignment, if it may be proper to use that word, or the unequal assignment, of the duties of the clerks of the different committees. If the Senate would either confine the employment of annual clerks to committees who need them, or provide that each standing committee shall be entitled to an annual clerk, then this difficulty would be solved, and there would be much less expense to the Government. There would be much less apparent unfairness in legislation on these matters if we should prescribe that all clerks of standing committees should be annual.

It is remarkable, I think, that every clerk who has been assigned by a resolution to duty so that he shall be entitled to compensation during the recess is attached to a committee which hardly ever sits during the session of Congress, and the committees to whom are assigned annual clerks are not asking to be continued in this way, because there is no necessity for it. That is just the attitude. The rule is unjust as I say. We should either confine the annual clerks to committees who have duties to do and need such clerks, or secure equality by making them all annual. Day after day a resolution like this is resorted to as a mere subterfuge on the part of committees which have had per diem clerks assigned them for the purpose of getting a committee clerk payable annually. To secure that, the suggestion is made to have the committees meet during the recess when it hardly ever meets during the session.

I did not rise for the purpose of antagonizing the resolution of the Senator from New York. I presume the object is, as he states, to provide for the payment of a clerk during the recess.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. That is all there is of it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. We seek to do that because it becomes a necessity. It becomes a necessity to put this thing on an even platform. Certainly all such committees will do it. Every such committee will come in this way. Why not? The precedent has been established, and every standing committee which has not anything to do during the recess of the Senate, but feels that it is entitled to an annual clerk, which I suppose it is, will come in and do this. Therefore we had better throw the door wide open, and provide that all the standing committees shall have annual clerks.

Mr. HARRISON. I commend the entire frankness of the Senator from New York. He has not sought to put this resolution upon any false basis or even to conceal his purpose in asking the Senate to adopt it. He does not contemplate assembling his committee during the vacation. He has frankly said that he does not expect to call them together at any time. Of course, if he should do so, the expenses of travel and other expenses to which the members of the committee should be subjected would be a charge upon the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Not under the resolution.

Mr. HARRISON. Undoubtedly under any resolution which authorizes a committee to sit during the recess of Congress the expenses of the members of the committee are to be paid. So we have the question frankly and fairly presented.

At the last session the Senator from New York asked, as I did, that his clerk might be made an annual clerk. I thought in the case of my committee there were public reasons why it should be done. The committee passed such a resolution and proposed it as an amendment to one of the appropriation bills, which went to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee refused to incorporate the amendment in the bill. When the bill came back to the Senate I offered the amendment, and it was adopted. The Senator from New York proposed to make the clerk of his committee annual, and I believe the Senate adopted that, and then every one else similarly situated made a proposition to make his committee clerk annual, but instead of proposing them as independent amendments to the bill they were all tied upon my amendment. It reminded me of the method by which the monkeys are said to cross a stream, by fastening the tail of one to the tail of the first, who hangs upon a tree, and swinging across; but in this case there were too many monkeys and the whole file fell into the stream.

Since that time a number of the chairmen of those committees have by independent resolutions of this kind, which have passed the Senate, made provision for paying their clerks during the vacation. For one, I have declined to make such a proposition or to introduce such a resolution. If the clerk of my committee can not be made annual in the regular way, I do not propose by any resolution to have the committee assigned work in the vacation so that the clerk may get pay for the vacation days; and having taken that course with reference to my own committee clerk, I feel free to say to the Senator from New York that I can not vote for his proposition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. I am quite willing myself to vote for an annual clerk for the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, but I am not willing to vote for this roundabout method of securing that which the Senate declines to grant in a direct method.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. If the Senator had been a member of the Senate a few weeks ago he would know that the Senate by a majority vote did agree to make the clerk of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry an annual clerk, but that, together with some other amendments, failed finally to be attached to the appropriation bill.

To go back in history, this proposition, like many others, was sent originally to the Committee on Appropriations; but the Committee on Appropriations in its wisdom and power failed to report in any of those cases, as has been stated, and there was no other course left then for Senators who felt aggrieved in this matter than to put in a resolution similar to this; and I have not attempted in any way to disguise the object of the resolution.

I believe, and I said upon the occasion when this matter formerly came before the Senate, that the position of Senators on this floor demands that there should be clerkships for committees and that they should be made annual in order to do their proper work. The Committee on Appropriations failed to take that view of the matter. After having made all the clerks of committees of which the members of that committee were chairmen annual they saw fit to leave out a number of the other standing committees.

It may be desirable, it may be best, that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry should be made of no account and that it should be expected to do little or no work in this body, but I have believed that much valuable work could be done. I believe that it can be done through the chairman and clerk in making a report on the subject of forestry at the next session of Congress. A large number of bills were introduced during the last session of the Senate upon that question which came to the committee, but we were without sufficient information to enable us to properly report to this body and to prepare proper bills, and the subject went over with very little consideration.

I believe that by the vote of this body which prevailed a few weeks ago in making this committee an annual committee, and providing for it an annual clerk, the proposition should have been finally attached to one of the appropriation bills at that time. It was not. A large number of other committees, I think of no greater importance than this, have been provided for in the way specified in the resolution. If the Senate sees fit to make any exception in this case, of course it has it in its power to do so.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from New York a question if he will allow me to do so.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. Is it not in the power of the Senate to make this clerk an annual clerk?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It is not in the power of the Senate at this time, at this session, to make the clerk an annual clerk, because to be made an annual clerk the provision should go into an appropiation bill. There is no other way now of paying the clerk during the recess except by a resolution paying him out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I am inclined to think the Senate may make it an annual clerkship and pay the clerk out of the contingent fund. I may be mistaken; if I am I can be corrected. The office exists already.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Perhaps a resolution might be prepared and drawn making it an annual clerkship and then providing that the salary shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, but that has not been the customary way of doing it. The annual clerkships have been provided for in the regular appropriation bill which passes both Houses of Congress, but all other investigations have been paid for out of the contingent fund, which is entirely under the control of the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope my friend will recall a remark he made to the effect that the Senate may create an office or change the character of an office by converting a per diem clerk into a permanent clerk. The Senate has no legislative power whatever, and it ought not to be attempted. I do not know that I shall object to the proposition of the Senator from New York if he desires to press it.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. The Senator from Colorado suggested that it might be done in that way. On reflection, I do not think it can at this session.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that this committee has a clerk already?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. It has.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the clerk is by law a per diem clerk.

Mr. TELLER. Of course if I am wrong about the power of the Senate the objection I made is not a good one, and on that statement I shall perhaps vote for the resolution.

Mr. CALL. I desire to inquire of the Senator from New York if as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry he certifies to the Senate that the services of the clerk during the vacation are necessary or highly advantageous to the public service. Am I to understand him to make that statement?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I made that statement. I made the statement that I proposed as chairman of the committee to prepare and make at the next session of Congress a report upon the subject of forestry on the public domain, to make it full and at my own expense, only asking the Senate that it shall pay a clerk to do the clerical work. There is to be no other expense attending it, no expense for myself or any member of the committee. That is the statement I made.

Mr. CALL. Then I am of the opinion, so far as I am concerned, that when a Senator, worthy to be the chairman of an important committee of this body, speaking by the authority of that committee, asks for a clerk for the committee during the vacation he ought to be accredited by the Senate to have it. I shall vote for the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Nevada].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 27, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Blair,	Dawes,	Miller of Cal.,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Dolph,	Miller of N. Y.,	Spooner,
Call,	Edmunds,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Palmer,	Teller,
Chace,	Frye,	Pike,	Van Wyck,
Conger,	Hawley,	Sabin,	Wilson.
Cullom,	Hoar,	Sawyer,

NAYS—25.

Beck,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Saulsbury,
Blackburn,	George,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Brown,	Gorman,	Maxey,	Vest,
Camden,	Harris,	Morgan,	Walthall.
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Payne,
Coke,	Jackson,	Pugh,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,

ABSENT—19.

Aldrich,	Hale,	McMillan,	Plumb,
Allison,	Hampton,	Mahone,	Ransom,
Butler,	Ingalls,	Manderson,	Vance,
Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Mitchell,	Voorhees.
Gibson,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,

So the resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, March 19, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM DELAWARE.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I send to the desk the certificate of election of Hon. George Gray as Senator from the State of Delaware, which I ask may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the credentials of George Gray, chosen by the Legislature of Delaware to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Thomas F. Bayard for the term ending March 3, 1887.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The credentials will be placed on file.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Senator-elect from Delaware is present and ready to take the oath prescribed by the Constitution and laws.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the gentleman be admitted to his seat and take the oath at this time? If there be no objection it will be so ordered.

Mr. GRAY advanced to the Vice-President's desk, escorted by Mr. SAULSBURY, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Committee on Printing, by reason of a statute, is required to approve certain contracts for printing-paper to be presented during the recess of Congress and is also charged with the superintendence of much of the printing matter ordered by Congress. In view of that fact, I present the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing have leave to sit during the recess of the Senate.

I ask leave to say that this resolution is the same that is usually passed at the close of a session of Congress. It entails no expense to the contingent fund of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the question will be on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOHN C. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. CHACE. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report back a resolution and recommend its adoption. I wish to say that the resolution, having been before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, was reported favorably by that committee. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate have not examined the merits of the case, but simply report the resolution back, saying that there is a fund applicable to the payment as proposed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. HOAR on the 10th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That there be allowed and paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to Alice C. Underwood, executrix of the last will and testament of Maria G. Underwood, administratrix of John C. Underwood, deceased, the sum of $5,000, in full compensation for the time and expenses of the said John C. Underwood in prosecuting his claim to a seat in the Senate as a Senator from the State of Virginia.

Mr. COCKRELL. Where does that come from? I should like to know. It is a very familiar old face. Is that from a committee?

Mr. CHACE. Yes; it is reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will not hurt if it lies over until to-morrow.

Mr. CHACE. It should probably in due course go to the Calendar. It will be called up by the Committee on Privileges and Elections undoubtedly.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution will lie over and be placed upon the Calendar.

COMMITTEE ON FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. PALMER. I offer the following resolutions, and ask their reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Fish and Fisheries of the Senate be authorized to investigate the reported decrease of the food-fishes of the great lakes, with a view of recommending legislation for their protection.

Also, to examine such other branches of fish industry of the United States as the committee may deem advisable.

Resolved, That the said committee have power to send for persons and papers and to employ a stenographer, and that it be allowed to sit during the recess of the Senate.

Resolved, That the expenses incurred in the execution of the foregoing resolutions be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on the certificate of the chairman of the Committee on Fish and Fisheries.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be referred, as the Senator from Michigan proposes, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. Let them lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. The mover of the resolutions has asked that they be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa object to the reference of the resolutions?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. PIKE. I send a resolution to the desk, which I ask may be read and lie over until to-morrow.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to compile the laws relating to the allowance of private claims, and to digest the judicial decisions and the reports to Congress relating thereto, and to continue and extend the list of private claims which have been presented to Congress so that the said list shall cover the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses; the necessary expense to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate under the direction of the said committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

COMMITTEE ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. DOLPH. I am directed by the Committee on Coast Defenses to report a resolution giving authority to that committee to sit during the recess of Congress at such places as the committee shall determine to be proper, for the purpose of investigating and inquiring into the present condition of the coast defenses and as to the location, character, and extent of coast fortifications necessary for the national defense.

The necessity for such authority was called to my attention by several members of the committee, but not feeling willing to assume the responsibility of offering the resolution without formal authority of the committee, I called the committee together. The committee were unanimous as to the importance of the subject which has been intrusted to them. They also considered that so far as it related to Congressional investigation it was a new subject; and they were also unanimously of the opinion that it was the duty of the committee to at once commence an investigation of the subject, and to make it so thorough and to continue it in such a manner as to be able at an early day to report to Congress not only as to the present condition of the national defenses, but what is required for the protection of our coast and our commercial interests.

The committee were not unaware that there are sources of information independent of personal examination by the committee. Much valuable information may be obtained from the War Department and from the reports of the Coast Survey, but they were of the opinion also that the committee ought to supplement this information with their own personal inspection and investigation and with such information as they could obtain by personal inquiry from independent sources upon the ground.

They therefore unanimously, there being but one absentee from the meeting of the committee, directed me to offer for the consideration of the Senate the resolution which I now send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. From the Committee on Coast Defenses the Senator from Oregon reports a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Coast Defenses be, and they are hereby, authorized to sit, by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess of Congress, at such places in the United States as they may deem proper; and that they be, and they are hereby, authorized to inquire into all matters connected with the subject of seacoast fortifications and other works of defense, with power to administer oaths and take testimony, to employ a stenographer and a clerk, and to appoint a sergeant-at-arms from the messengers of the Senate; and that the actual necessary expenses of the said committee, properly incurred in the execution of this resolution, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate in the usual manner, upon the order of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MAXEY. As a member of that committee I beg to add one word to what has been said by the chairman. The committee met, and after a very careful investigation of its duty, the condition of our Navy, and the defenseless condition of all our seaboard, on the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Gulf, it was the conclusion of the committee unanimously that such an investigation as is contemplated by the resolution offered by the Senator from Oregon would be of great service to the country; and that the comparatively trifling expense of that investigation should not weigh in the balance against the importance of the subject.

We took into consideration the further fact that in the last few years, as is well known to every one who has investigated the question, there has been a complete revolution not only in gunnery, but in the science of fortifications; and that the proper character of fortifications is determined by the character of the ground. While strategic positions never change, the method of defense does change.

As was stated by the chairman of the committee, a great deal of valuable information may be gained from the War Department, but a personal inspection of some of the leading forts of the United States on the seaboard is considered important in the discharge of the duty of the committee. That the Senate on both sides regarded this as important is evidenced by the fact that this is a new committee raised for the special purpose of investigating seacoast defenses.

I hope that the resolution will pass.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It goes over until to-morrow, I presume.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it lie over.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let it go over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over and be placed on the Calendar.

RAILROAD LANDS IN FLORIDA.

Mr. VAN WYCK. For the purpose of moving a reference to the Committee on Public Lands, I ask to take from the table the resolution heretofore considered in regard to railroad lands in Florida.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior and the Attorney-General of the United States be, and they hereby are, directed, respectively, to take such action as each may deem necessary to prevent any sale by the Atlantic and Gulf West India Transit Company, or by any company or person claiming under them, of the lands described in the act approved May 17, 1856, and entitled "An act granting public lands in alternate sections to the States of Florida and Alabama, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said States," so far as the same lie within the line of said railroads between Waldo and Tampa Bay, Florida, until Congress shall have authorized the same.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks that the resolution be taken from the table with a view to its reference. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I present the petition of Sidney I. Wailes concerning this matter. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, to be considered in connection with the resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

OCCUPATION OF OKLAHOMA LANDS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] on the 13th instant in relation to the occupation of lands in the Indian Territory, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate such information as may be in his possession concerning the occupation of the Oklahoma lands in the Indian Territory by settlers, and also what action has been taken by the Executive thereon.

Mr. INGALLS. That resolution was offered by me on Friday, I think, of last week. On Saturday, the Senate not being in session, it was practically answered by the proclamation of the President. That the resolution may not longer interfere with the business of the Senate or obstruct its Calendar, I move that it lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE TO VISIT ALASKA.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That a committee not exceeding five Senators, to be selected by the Committee on Territories, be authorized to proceed to Alaska during the recess of Congress, and inquire into and investigate the operation of the act of May 17, 1884, "providing a civil government for Alaska;" whether the system of government established by said act is adequate for the maintenance of order and the protection of the rights of persons and property; whether the said act is being properly executed by the officers appointed under the same; the condition of the natives or Indians of said Territory; their relations to the Government of the United States, and what legislation is required for their proper management; the condition and character of mines, mining claims, and mining titles; the character of land tenures, or possessions, or other titles to lands; the present condition and value of the public buildings belonging to the United States in said Territory; the manner in which the laws relating to customs and other laws and regulations have been and are now being executed.

Also to inquire into and investigate the past and present condition of the seal fisheries of the Pribylov Islands; whether the Alaska Commercial Company has heretofore complied, and is now complying, with the terms of its lease from, and its agreement with, the United States, and the laws relating to said seal fisheries, or whether the said company has heretofore violated, or is now violating the same in any manner; whether the officers of the Government appointed to see that said laws and the conditions of said lease are executed have been and are faithfully performing their duties, and whether the system in operation is adequate and proper for guarding and protecting the interests of the Government and the rights of said company in relation to said seal fisheries.

Also to inquire into the natural resources of said Territory, the character and value of its present and probable products; whether the general land laws or laws relating to timber or mining lands should be extended over said Territory, and to examine, generally, into all matters relating to the development of the said Territory and to the prosperity and welfare of its people. Said committee shall have power to sit in the vacation of the Senate at any place in the United States, to send for persons and papers, to examine witnesses, to appoint a clerk and a stenographer, and shall make report, with their recommendations in respect to future legislation, to the Senate at the next regular session of Congress.

The expenses of said committee, of the clerk, stenographer, witnesses, &c., shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, to be certified by the chairman of the committee, and audited and allowed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the resolution may be printed and lie on the table until to-morrow.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. MANDERSON. I have no objection to that course being pursued if the Senator desires it.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. COCKRELL. I object to its present consideration.

Mr. HARRISON. My suggestion, to which the Senator from Nebraska has given his assent, is that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know whether that can be done on the first introduction of it. I hope the resolution will not be referred, as I desire to offer a substitute for it.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not had time yet to write out the substitute, but the substitute will be in substance that any standing or select committee of the Senate, or any two or more Senators who may desire to constitute themselves into a select committee upon any particular subject which they deem worthy of investigation, shall have authority during the recess of the Senate to appoint a clerk and a stenographer and to have a sergeant-at-arms to accompany them, and to go to such places as they may deem necessary for the purpose of prosecuting their respective investigations. I think that would be broad enough to save us from the special resolutions we are passing. I desire that the present resolution shall lie upon the table until I have an opportunity of writing out the substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being objection to the present consideration of the resolution, it lies over and will be printed.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make a remark before the resolution goes over. I merely wish to say that the Senator from Missouri has heretofore been somewhat prominent in restricting the appointment of special committees and the appointment of clerks and stenographers, but it is now apparent that with his enlarged view of the interests of the nation and of the people of the United States he has come to a different conclusion, and I am glad he has made the announcement so early and so publicly.

Mr. HARRISON. May I be allowed to say before the resolution is disposed of that in suggesting its reference to the Committee on Territories I did not mean at all to indicate any purpose to ask an early disposition of it? I thought the resolution was one which should be considered by that committee before it was acted upon. I have no other connection with the matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

SENATOR FROM MARYLAND.

Mr. GORMAN. My colleague, Mr. Ephraim K. Wilson, chosen by the Legislature of Maryland a Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1885, and whose credentials have been heretofore presented, is present in the Chamber, and I ask that he be sworn in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator-elect will come forward and be sworn.

Mr. WILSON was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. GORMAN, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON, it was Ordered, That David G. Porter have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate, a copy thereof being left on file.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed by the Chair to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, unless he may have some further communication to make, the Senate is ready to adjourn without day.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, March 20, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory, remonstrating against the repeal of the so-called desert-land act; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair also presents a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory, favoring the enlargement of the United States penitentiary in that Territory; which will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. I think, it being a memorial of the Legislature of a Territory, it is entitled to a reading at the desk. I should like to have it read so that it may go in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it has not been the custom to have read memorials of Legislative Assemblies of Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I ask that the memorial be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be read at the request of the Senator from Indiana if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Council joint memorial concerning the United States penitentiary in Montana.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the council and house of representatives, composing the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, respectfully represent to your honorable bodies that the United States penitentiary at Deer Lodge, Montana Territory, in which are confined the convicts sentenced by the courts in this Territory, has but twenty-eight cells, suitable for one prisoner each, and that confined in said penitentiary are nearly one hundred convicts; that the original plan of said penitentiary contemplated the erection of another wing, which has not been built and which is now very necessary to the proper care and safe-keeping of the prisoners confined therein; that the wing of said penitentiary already constructed was paid for from the revenues received by the Government in this Territory; that the health of the prisoners is greatly impaired by the crowded condition of the penitentiary, and the rapidly increasing number of long-term convicts, many of whom are desperate characters, and who are necessarily in constant communication with each other, endangers the safety of the guards and of the community in which the penitentiary is located. Your memorialists therefore earnestly pray your honorable bodies to make an adequate appropriation to complete said penitentiary according to the original plans, and would suggest the setting off of a portion of the internal-revenue receipts collected in Montana for that purpose. And your memorialists will, as in duty bound, ever pray.

JAMES ED. CALLAWAY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
F. K. ARMSTRONG,
President of the Council.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the memorial, if it has not already been done, may be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been so referred. Does the Senator desire to have the other memorial read?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not ask to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of Maine; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE.

Resolves in favor of arbitration and peace.

Whereas it is the duty of all nations to avoid by every honorable means the burden and curse of war, and to establish peace upon the broadest and most permanent basis possible; and

Whereas it seems to be the settled policy of the United States Government to insist on the insertion in its treaties with foreign governments a stipulation that controversies arising under the terms of such treaties on the failure of negotiations shall be referred to umpires, mutually satisfactory, whose decision shall be final and authoritative, a policy which has been already adopted by several foreign governments:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States should refuse to ratify any treaty which omits such a stipulation.

Resolved, That in order to render the principle of arbitration permanently practical a standing high court of arbitration, composed of persons chosen by each covenanting nation, on account of their peculiar fitness, ought to be constituted, to which should be referred for consideration and settlement those questions which have hitherto too often been left to the arbitrament of war.

Resolved, That a convention or congress of representatives, from the nations, to adjust differences of international laws and usage, ought by mutual agreement to be called at some place most suitable and convenient, which might also agree upon the general character and powers of the aforesaid court of arbitration.

Resolved, That the bill introduced into the national House of Representatives March 3, 1884, by Hon. I. Newton Evans, of Tennessee, which provided for the calling of such a convention at Washington by the United States Government, meets with our approval, and we would hereby respectfully memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass said bill, so that it may speedily become a law.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, properly prepared and signed, be forwarded to each of the two Houses of Congress, and also to each Senator and Representative now in Congress from the State of Maine.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1885.

Read and passed finally.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of Maine; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE.

Resolves relative to the sale of Kennebec arsenal at Augusta.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives in Legislature assembled, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are hereby requested to use all honorable means to discourage and prevent the sale of the Kennebec arsenal at Augusta, Me.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolves be forwarded by the secretary of state to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of Maine; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE.

Resolves relating to United States appropriations for Indians.

Whereas believing that the education of Indians and their voluntary citizenship in the United States will most justly, quickly, and economically solve the Indian problem: Therefore,

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they hereby are, requested to aid in the passage of resolutions solemnly pledging the faith of the nation to the Indian policy embodied in the following principles:

First. That the unpaid sum pledged for educational purposes by the Government, as part payment for the cessions of lands by Indians, be appropriated for the purchase of stock, farming implements, and tools for Indian manual labor schools.

Second. That so much of the net proceeds of the sale of public lands as may be necessary shall be set apart for the purpose of creating a permament fund for the education of Indians.

Third. That lands in severalty, making their titles inalienable for twenty-five years, and United States citizenship may be granted at once to all Indians who so desire.

Fourth. That the legal personality of all Indians may be granted, and that protection of law may be given them, as it is to all other races, within these United States.

Fifth. That the civilization of Indians may be hastened, by providing for and rewarding their civilized industries.

Sixth. That the salaries of Indian agents be sufficiently increased to secure good men of large capacity and business experience, and to retain them in service.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing resolutions to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

COMMITTEE TO VISIT ALASKA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], which will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest that, as the resolution was read at length yesterday and has been printed, it be referred without reading to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If it is the pleasure of the Senate, it will be so ordered.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Before that is done, I understood that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] had an amendment to offer to the resolution. I do not know whether he desires to offer it now.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment of which I gave notice I think was to be proposed to the Coast Defenses Committee resolution. I did not notice the business laid before the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I take it that this resolution is offered in all seriousness and with the intention that it shall be passed by this body, and if so it ought to receive at least a moment's consideration. I notice what seems to be a change in the form. It reads:

That a committee not exceeding five Senators, to be selected by the Committee on Territories, be authorized, &c.

I should like to inquire why it is suggested in this resolution that the committee to visit Alaska shall be appointed by the Committee on Territories. I fail to recollect the appointment of any other committee of this body in that way, and why this innovation is made I am at a loss to know. Probably the chairman of the Committee on Territories can explain.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know why the Senator from Nebraska should call upon the chairman of the Committee on Territories to give him any information about a resolution with the preparation of which that chairman had nothing to do and about which he was not consulted. The mover of the resolution would probably be able to give the Senator some information. But as the proposition is to refer the resolution to the Committee on Territories, I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that if it comes back from that committee in a form subject to criticism that will be the time to make it. I suppose the intention of the mover of the resolution, if I may guess at what it was, or if I may judge from the terms used, was that it should be a committee of five from the Committee on Territories, and that is a very usual and common way of framing a resolution for a special investigation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If it said "a committee of five to be selected from the Committee on Territories" I could understand that; but that is not the phraseology of the resolution, and I supposed this violent departure from the long-established usage of this body in the appointment of committees meant something. That is what I desired an explanation about. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I presumed this matter relating to Territories came from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. No, the resolution was introduced by the Senator's colleague [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. MANDERSON. If my colleague is really in search of information on this subject, I think perhaps if he would apply to his colleague who introduced the resolution he might be informed upon the subject-matter of his inquiry.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will transfer the inquiry to my colleague.

Mr. MANDERSON. I thank my colleague for his courtesy. Not having had the experience in this body that it has been the good fortune of my colleague to have, I do not know whether the resolution is in the line of precedent or not. The resolution was introduced by me in conformance with the request of a number of gentlemen, some of them members of this body, who have seemed to think that an investigation into the subject-matter of Alaska and its interests was important.

My colleague was a member of this body at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress when the act of May 17, 1884, to provide a civil government for Alaska, was passed. I think he must have observed, as most persons who watched the debate upon that bill observed, the deplorable degree of ignorance which existed in this body upon the subject of Alaska and its interests. It seemed well to the gentlemen to whom I have adverted, by whom the resolution was prepared, that this inquiry should be made during the vacation of the Senate, for the reason that Alaska occupies quite a different position from any other of the territorial possessions of the United States, having no representative here and no representative in the other branch of Congress, and there being vast interests there in which the Government is interested pecuniarily, particularly the income derived from the so-called seal islands, or the seal fisheries of Alaska.

The reason for the language of the resolution as I understand it, that the committee should be selected by the Committee on Territories, was the fact that it would be extremely difficult, and from some inquiry that I have made upon the subject I do not know but that I may say it would be impossible, to obtain from any one committee, and probably impossible to obtain from the Senate, five Senators willing to give the six or eight weeks of time necessary and essential for the purposes of this inquiry. Therefore it was, as I understand it, that the Committee on Territories, if possible from their own number, and if not possible then from the membership of other committees, should select the names of those who would make this inquiry.

As I suggested yesterday, it seemed to me that the proper action to be taken on this resolution was that it should go to the Committee on Territories for their consideration and report. If that committee should see fit to change the language of the resolution and present it thus changed to the Senate, it would then come properly before the Senate for deliberation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I realize the force of the suggestions made by my colleague, but I do not understand that there is any satisfactory reason, or that any reason has been given, why this committee should be appointed differently from any other committee of this body. The point on which I was seeking information was as to why this innovation was made. It seems from the suggestion of my colleague that the membership is not to be confined to the Committee on Territories because it may be difficult to obtain five Senators from that committee who are willing to spend six or eight weeks in visiting Alaska, and therefore it may be proper to take them from the body of the Senate. But the point is still unanswered as to why the selection of this committee shall be given to the Committee on Territories.

My colleague speaks of the lamentable ignorance which was discovered in this body on the occasion of the passage of the Alaska act. That is likely to be confessed on the passage of nearly every bill.

The act of 1884 provided officers for the Territory of Alaska. Before that time we had only a customs officer who supervised the interests of the Government in the Territory to which my colleague refers; but less than a year ago we appointed a full corps, a governor, judges, and marshals, and now this resolution requires us to send a committee there to learn whether those officers are discharging their duties and whether they understand anything about that country.

What interest is sought to be protected or looked after in this matter? Not the Indians, because the best Indians who live to-day under the American flag are the Indians in Alaska. They are very respectable Indians. At present they seem to be honest, moral, and virtuous. Such a committee as is proposed here might be useful if it was suggested to go up into Alaska and undertake to trade powder and shot and shotguns and bad whisky for the Indian lands. That would be a sort of precursor of civilized and Christian legislation, but I do not understand that is proposed.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest to my colleague that if such were the object of this inquiry, it might be well to refer the resolution to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That would be a good place to refer it, but even the Public Lands Committee can not save the plunder of the lands that belong to the American citizen. The Public Lands Committee have been trying to stop the plunder of the public domain, but they have been unable to do it. The Public Lands Committee of this Senate is only a slight barrier; the public domain is taken from the white men of this nation and your Public Lands Committee and an enlarged public sentiment can not check it.

I do not know how far this proposed investigation is to go; neither do I know whether the Committee on Territories or the gentlemen having charge of this resolution understand about what it will probably cost the Government. I know the question of expense is a very small matter to suggest in so dignified a body. I do not know whether any calculation has been made of the expense to the Government.

We have been practicing sharp, shrewd devices to secure annual pay for clerks of committees that have little to do. Committees which have little to do during the session are very anxious to be clothed with authority to work during the recess, and those committees which labor very hard during the session and have annual clerks very seldom ask for the privilege to sit during the recess. We are going further and creating special committees, as we did a day or two ago on interstate commerce, when there are two or three committees already having charge of that subject.

Now, the proposition is to raise a special committee to go to Alaska, the furthermost boundary of this Republic. We have no interest beyond it that we know of except in the North Pole, and that would be an elegant place to send a committee if it would probably fare as Greely's expedition did. The North Pole would do, because there we should not be vexed with the Monroe doctrine. About the only spot on the earth where nations show a little civilized Christian deportment toward each other is the interest in the North Pole. But Alaska is just a few miles this side of the North Pole.

If the Senate will excuse me, I suppose they will agree that probably this expedition to Alaska would not be any less expensive than the commission to Central and South America. At the last Congress there was dovetailed into an appropriation bill a clause for the creation of a commission to the Central and South American countries. The salary of each commissioner was $7,500, and the compensation of the clerk $3,000, and the item for expenditures was so liberal that it would include even the buying of the country when they reached there, so generous is Congress in its beneficence.

I merely refer to this so that we may not have the lamentable ignorance which my colleague speaks about after we are through. To be forewarned is to be forearmed, and if we know what it costs to send a commission to the Central and South American states, we may have approximately some idea as to what it would cost to send this expedition toward the North Pole.

On the 7th of July, 1884, the act was approved by the President appointing the three commissioners, and they were duly appointed. The first thing done by this commission which was to visit the Central and South American states was to gallopade across the continent to San Francisco, and from San Francisco to Mexico, and from Mexico to New Orleans to witness the exposition and the carnival which was held there. Then, in January, they started for the Central and South American states, against which we partially declared war the other day.

I should like to ask my colleague if he has any idea how much it cost to get the commission started? The act was liberal and generous, and provided $7,500 for each of those gentlemen as salary. It did not say whether it was to be pay for four months or one year. They went, it seems, to Mexico. We talk about our plain democratic notions in this country, and yet, would you believe it, this commission, which never had but two men and a boy with it, started for San Francisco and Mexico, and the first thing they did was to hire a palace car at $35 a day. That was only for the car; they paid for their transportation besides; their provisions were furnished besides. A Pullman palace car for forty-one and one-half days, at $35 per day, cost $1,447.

There was lamentable ignorance in this body, I agree with my friend. Two men and a boy were carried across this continent in a Pullman palace car, and then when you look over the list which I had the opportunity of seeing this morning at the State Department it will be seen that there were supplies laid in at Kansas City, supplies laid in at San Francisco, supplies at New York. Besides, there was a cook on the Pullman palace car. Talk about plain democracy! Where does royalty go beyond this? Did the Prince of Wales do any better?

We have those who think that the highest privilege and the greatest enjoyment of an American citizen is to pay his last dollar in taxes to this Government. We are shrewd in devising ways to get the last dollar, and we are shrewd in devising ways how to spend it. We are just as shrewd in one as the other. They now charge "supplies." That includes liquids and solids. If this special committee must go to Alaska it of course will include a good deal of bay rum and Florida water.

I ask my friends on this side of the Chamber if we had not better stop? All we have left is just this little family circle here. The Democracy have the other end of the Capitol and they have the Administration. All we have left is here. Let us husband our honesty and our reputation. My friend would not have believed it, but we had acted in lamentable ignorance.

I need to say no more except that the commission appointed for South and Central America gallopaded all through the country, first to Boston; I think the boy only went to Boston. Would you believe it, from the 1st of October to the 1st of January the expenses of that commission were $6,000 besides salaries? But is there no check? We have your sworn officers to protect the Treasury and to protect the people. This money is taken from the pockets of men who have hardly money sufficient to pay $2 for a night's sleep on a Pullman car. Those are the men from whom you wring and extract the money which is given to pay the expenses to sustain the Government.

Thirty-five dollars a day for a palace car for forty-one and a half days, and the car fare besides, and the cook and "supplies." Since reaching Central America we have no report of expenses. Of course they will be enormous there.

I trust some gentleman on the other side will visit the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury and call their attention to the matter, so that they may not from this time be participes criminis to these transactions.

The president of that commission did not go to San Francisco, or Mexico, or New Orleans; yet on the 25th of February he received and took nearly $5,000 out of the Treasury—$4,679.16. The 16 cents were put on to show that the account was honest, of course.

Senators will excuse me from giving a further bill of particulars in this matter. I refer them to the State and Treasury Departments for the items. Here is this commission which cost us in salaries and expenses about $20,000 before they were ready to leave New Orleans. I refer to this incidentally, desiring the Senate to understand about what it will cost to get this special committee of five to Alaska. They probably can not charter a Pullman car all the way, but when they get to San Francisco they can charter a steamer.

If it is right for the commission to bear this expense it may be thought right for a committee of this body. Of course I do not say it would, but I desire to say this much to show the reckless, improvident waste of the money wrung from the people in the shape of taxes. I wish to call the attention of the Senate at this time in advance to what probably and naturally would be an approximation of the expense of any committee of this kind to be appointed.

Mr. MANDERSON. Before asking for action on my motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Territories I wish to make one or two suggestions in reply to my colleague, not so much perhaps in reply as supplemental to his remarks.

I congratulate myself that the introduction of this resolution has afforded a text on which we have secured the discourse we have heard this morning. I certainly would be the last man in this body to pretend to defend any raid on the public Treasury such as my colleague has characterized as having been perpetrated by the commission of exploration to Central America; and I do not understand from my colleague that the action of that commission was in any way of such a character that any committee of this body or the Senate of the United States is responsible for it. This resolution that I have introduced is of the character that I have already stated. It is not the general resolution providing that a committee of this body may sit during the recess and employ a clerk and have its expenses paid, being privileged to sit anywhere within the United States for the purposes of its deliberations, but it has specific objects and purposes; and I submit to my colleague that if he had read the resolution (as I presume he has) he would admit that the labor devolved upon the proposed committee would be of such a character that they certainly would have no sinecure, but that active and vigorous efforts would be required at their hands to comply with its provisions.

I am not one of those who stand ready to condemn everything of this kind, and I do not stand here even to condemn the action of my colleague when he followed a few days ago in the line of precedent and, after effort made by him had failed to procure an annual clerk for the committee of which he is the chairman, he introduced a resolution that the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River be permitted to sit during the recess of Congress. I fear that my colleague has forgotten the fact that within a very few weeks a resolution was introduced by him and considered by the Senate and adopted by the Senate in face of the fact avowed on the floor of the Senate that the purpose of the resolution was that the session clerk of my colleague's committee might be made an annual clerk through the means of the introduction and passage of this resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My colleague will allow me a moment?

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have not forgotten; I remember it perfectly. As I stated here several times, the rule of this body should be to confine annual clerks to committees needing them, and not go beyond that, or to give them to all the standing committees. That was my position, that the future rule should be that only the committees whose duties required an annual clerk should be allowed one; but this body had gone beyond that. The Committee on the Census, with nothing to do during the recess, the Committee on Private Land Claims, and some others had already been provided for, as my colleague knows, by reason of positions of important members, and then followed the other race, in which we all engaged.

If the Senate made it a rule to confine annual clerks to the committees having duties during recess, that would be one theory. If they went beyond that and gave to a half-dozen as a matter of favor an annual clerk when the duties of the committee did not require it, then it should extend to all the standing committees. That was my position, and I desire to stand there. I would prefer that we should do it in a manly way, by resolution making them all annual, and not seek to do it in the way of subterfuge. When we reached that point and included nearly all those, then we went beyond by the appointment of special committees, not only giving them clerks, but stenographers and messengers, and the privilege to go where they please in the United States and entail as much expense as they choose on the Treasury.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to call the attention of my colleague and the Senate to the peculiar character of this resolution. If it was for the purpose that my colleague states, it seems to me it would have been very easy for a gentleman with his knowledge of the English language and expert, as he is, in the use of words, to have drafted a resolution that would have reached the purpose that he designed; but this is the resolution presented by my colleague on the 2d of March, 1885, in the expiring hours of the administration that he says fortunately is just going out of power:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River be directed to prepare a detailed statement of the expenses of the improvements of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, with a view to ascertain the amounts expended for purpose of commerce, the amount expended to protect the lands adjoining from the ravages of the rivers, to report the same to the Senate at the December session of Congress, and be authorized for that purpose to employ a clerk at the usual compensation until December 1, 1885, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

At the request of my colleague this resolution upon that day was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was reported back favorably by that committee and favorably acted upon by the Senate, and I can imagine that under it my colleague, with his clerk and perhaps two men and a boy in addition thereto, may be able to make a junketing expedition from the source to the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My colleague knows very well that that does not make any expense to the Government except the pay of the clerk.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, it does.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir; no expense except the pay of the clerk.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I do not understand the force of the English language.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then the gentleman will have to confess to the lamentable ignorance he spoke of a while ago.

Mr. MANDERSON. The expenses of this committee for the purposes of this inquiry are to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. I do not wish it to be understood that I would suppose for an instant that my colleague would make this the pretense of a pleasure excursion or the excuse for a junketing trip; I do not think he is much given to excursions of that character; but I submit to him that if he does not desire to be so judged he should not judge; and I submit to him further that it is at least discourteous in him to his colleagues in this body, to the Senators of the United States, to suppose that because they introduce resolutions of this character they propose to make them the pretense for a raid on the public Treasury. I do not believe that he would be guilty of such action, and it seems to me it is rather unbecoming in him to charge that his associates in this body would do it. Does my friend now understand the purport of my language?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do.

Mr. MANDERSON. So I submit, Mr. President, that in paying attention to the demands of gentlemen interested in this subject and introducing the resolution now before the Senate I have simply been following in the line of precedent set very largely by my colleague the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That sometimes is the case. If I had refrained from placing the Committee on the Mississippi River Improvement, which is a standing committee of this body, on the same basis with other committees probably not so important, if I had refrained from taking what was said to be the sense of the Senate, I doubt very much whether it would have held my colleague in check.

I endeavored to explain, and at the expense of repetition I will say again that we have standing committees of this body that have duties to perform which require diligent labor during all the session and the work of some of them probably continues into the recess. Those committees have annual clerks. Besides them we have other committees that have but little to do, which have grown up from the necessity of finding as many chairmanships as possible, and therefore it is there is but little for these committees to do.

I have always insisted that the proper way was that the employment of annual clerks should be confined to committees having duties to discharge which made it necessary; but the Senate saw fit to do differently, and in several cases, as was stated when the matter was discussed, clerks were appointed annually to committees who had few duties to discharge substantially, and then it was proposed and the struggle was made here that all the standing committees should be entitled to annual clerks.

Mr. MANDERSON. My colleague will yield to me?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. Does he mean to say that the resolution presented by him and acted upon by the Senate was a mere subterfuge, that it was not intended to carry out the purpose for which it was apparently introduced?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It was intended to carry out that purpose undoubtedly; but it was done as the mode, the means whereby the clerk of a standing committee of this body should be made an annual clerk. That my colleague understands. The Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River has a duty to discharge far more than some committees whose clerks are made annual. I think my colleague understands that precisely as well as I do.

That was the purpose of this system. It was to fasten the clerks of all the standing committees as annual clerks upon the pay-roll of the Senate.

My friend says my remarks were discourteous. Certainly not. Are we not to be allowed to criticise ourselves? Are we not to be allowed to criticise any department of this Government because by so doing we are liable to the charge of discourtesy?

Mr. MANDERSON. Will my colleague allow an interruption?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish simply to state the fact that appears by the RECORD, that this resolution of mine was introduced during the closing hours of the Forty-eighth Congress when it was supposed there would be yet another day for its consideration, but owing to the continuance of the session during the last legislative day of the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress the resolution was not acted upon, and therefore it was again introduced at this special session. So it was not, as my friend suggests, that this resolution was an afterthought because of a desire to procure the services of a clerk or of a stenographer.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not allege that this was intended solely for the purpose of having a clerk. I was drawn into that part of the discussion from allusion made to the standing committees who had only per diem clerks during the session being allowed to sit during the recess. The fact is, as my colleague states, that the resolution was introduced in the last hours of the last session; but I was remarking that then we commenced to introduce resolutions for special committees when there were standing committees of this body delegated to that duty; and now it is asked that there be a special committee to go to the Territory of Alaska, when every Territorial officer of the Territory of Alaska is in the city of Washington to-day, or most of them are. The governor of Alaska is here and has been from the commencement of the last session.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the question I was going to ask, if he had not been performing his Territorial duties as governor of that Territory in the city of Washington the whole of last winter?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand the governor of Alaska was here during all of the last session; this is not the seat of his government, I suppose; but this special committee is to transfer the seat of its operations to Alaska and the United States officers in Alaska desire to visit Washington. All information can be gathered from them as to the condition of the Indian tribes, as to the condition of the seal fisheries, as to the condition of the Territory.

My friend was suggesting that my objection was discourteous. We are met with that everywhere. If we make an inquiry of an Executive Department, that is a discourtesy; and if we undertake to speak in the interest of fair play and make a suggestion even in regard to ourselves, that is a discourtesy.

I undertook to illustrate, as I think I had a right to illustrate, the enormous expense of the commission to South and Central America. I had no right to presume that this would be as costly, but I think the Senator does know, if he has had occasion to examine the list of traveling committees, the enormous amount that is drawn from the Treasury. It may be necessarily so. That, of course, I do not pretend to say. My objection is to the appointment of a specal committee which will entail expense on this Government.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not rise for the purpose of prolonging this debate, but for the purpose of bringing it to an issue and carrying it to its legitimate end, after what the Senate has listened to from the Senator from Nebraska, his earnest appeal in the interest of economy, with which I fully sympathize, and upon which I think I have preserved a better record than he has; for whereas he intimates that there was a general agreement among the chairmen of standing committees that, having failed those of them who asked of the Appropriations Committee to have their clerks made annual, they should seek to accomplish the same end by this method which he has himself characterized as a subterfuge, I want to say for one that I was not a party to any such agreement, that the Committee on Territories has never resorted to that subterfuge with a view of getting pay for its clerk during the vacation.

Let me add that this resolution was introduced without any consultation with me in the regular session of the Senate. As originally introduced it had no relation to the Committee on Territories whatever, but provided for the constituting of a special committee. I can only say for one that if a committee be sent, whether it be a special committee or whether it be constituted out of the Committee on Territories, I shall not be a member of it, that I shall not have the appointing power of any clerk or any usufruct from any clerk or any stenographer who may be appointed for it. Let me add further that I have not given the consent of my mind to the adoption of this resolution. I am not persuaded that it is essential. This simply by way of preface.

Now, Mr. President, if it be true, as the Senator from Nebraska has admitted, that he does not mean to call the Committee on the Mississippi River Improvement together during this coming vacation; that notwithstanding he has introduced and the Senate has passed a resolution committing to that committee the work of a certain investigation he does not contemplate undertaking that investigation, that he does not propose to do that work or any part of it——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did not say that. I said that no expense would be entailed by this committee except the appointment of a clerk; it has no power to meet anywhere in the United States that it may please.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator said more; he said it was a subterfuge with a view of getting a clerk. He so characterized his own resolution. Now, I want to say to the Senator who has appealed so justly in behalf of the people against any extravagant expenditure here that even that clerkship involves fifteen hundred or eighteen hundred dollars of the people's money, and by his own confession it has been accomplished here by a subterfuge. I am sure if he has been overpersuaded by others to going into any scheme of this kind he will be glad to be helped now to consummate this plea of his for economy by saving some money to the Treasury, because notwithstanding all he has said about the South American Commission the Senate can do nothing about that. That commission went in pursuance of a law passed by both Houses. We have no power to audit their accounts. We may perhaps in the future be able to bring them to book if there has been an extravagant expenditure of the public money. But there is an opportunity here to take the Senator from Nebraska at his word and to save the Government the cost of a clerk to his committee during the vacation. I therefore offer and ask to have read for information a resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana propose an amendment to the pending resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. No; it is a resolution that I ask may be read for information at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate passed on the 4th day of March, 1885, authorizing the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River to sit during the vacation of the Senate and to make certain investigations therein named, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the reference——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the reference of the pending resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not propose to ask action on my resolution now; I simply wanted to say that when it can be reached I shall ask its reference to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, of which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is chairman, and let him deal with it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed I made myself plain to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARRISON. Allow me to add one thing more.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Two or three days ago, when the debate was on upon the resolution of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] giving the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry leave to sit during the vacation and make certain inquiries and have a clerk, the Senator will recollect that I spoke against it and voted against it. I see he was recorded in favor of that proposition also.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was. Any other? No other resolution of that kind?

Mr. HARRISON. No. I suggest that when the Senator comes to consider my resolution in committee he can enlarge it so as to take in these others.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed my friend from Indiana understood distinctly the history of what took place in the expiring hours of the Forty-eighth Congress, and also the attitude of the question. The Senator from Indiana the chairman of the Committee on Territories was engaged in this same attempt to secure a clerk for his Committee on Territories. Am I right?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is right in that the Committee on Territories introduced an amendment to an appropriation bill and referred it to the Committee on Appropriations asking for an annual clerk, but the Committee on Appropriations did not allow it, and the Senate on the final vote did not allow it, and there the Committee on Territories stopped.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then the Committee on Territories started in this race, with the other committees of this body which had not an annual clerk, for the purpose of obtaining one. That was the attitude of all the standing committees. They felt, and the Senator from Indiana felt, that he was unjustly dealt by, and so he was. He was chairman of an important committee, far more important than some of those which were allowed annual clerks. There was far more necessity that his committee should have an annual clerk than many committees who were allowed one; and he was engaged in that race. So the gentleman from New York the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was also in that race, and so they all were. Then the chairman of the Committee on the Mississippi River Improvements modestly dropped in behind.

I stated before I had always insisted that the clerks of this body should be made annual clerks to committees only that had work to do or else all should be annual clerks. That is a plain proposition easily understood. When we examined we found the Committee on the Census, that never met, had an annual clerk; the Committee on Private Land Claims, that had but little to do, had an annual clerk; and was there any reason for that, and that the Committee on Territories should have none? There should have been some honesty in this matter. So we insisted on making them all annual or restricting them to those actually necessary. That did not suit the views of the Senate. Their action was that they would not assume that attitude to make these committee clerks all annual; but it was suggested and acted upon that each committee should report a resolution for its committee and have it referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses and that committee report it back to the Senate; and the Senate adopted many of them unanimously. That was the mode suggested, carried out, and acted upon; and when the Senator from New York the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture at this session adopted the same tactics, in saying a word upon that resolution, I said, as I say now, that one or the other course should be adopted in a straightforward, manly way.

Whatever rule the Senate might adopt it should apply equally to all.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to become a participant in the very interesting domestic discussion which has been going on upon the other side of this Chamber, and of which I have been an interested auditor; but I must be permitted to observe that it seems to me the Senator from Nebraska who has last spoken is very much in the condition of that dutiful young gentleman who was found to have participated in the murder of his own father, and who gave as an excuse that he saw that the old man was about to be beaten to death, and as he could not help it he thought he would hit him a lick himself to put him out of his misery. The Senator from Nebraska it seems is chairman of a committee that never meets, that we all know is utterly unnecessary, and he thinks that its arduous duties demand the services of an annual clerk. I leave him to settle that question with the principal of reform which he upholds so often on this floor.

But I rose, sir, for a different purpose. The Senator from Nebraska, in his general raid upon the subject of reform, has seen proper to make an attack personal in its character upon the gentlemen composing the South American and Central American Commission. Mr. President, for twenty-five years I have been the intimate personal friend of one of the gentlemen upon that commission. I know him as well as I know any human being in this world. He has filled nearly every important position in the State of Missouri. His record, public and private, is as stainless and without reproach as that of any public man could possibly be. The man who charges in my presence that Thomas C. Reynolds has ever been extravagant or otherwise taken one cent of the people's money makes a statement which I contradict absolutely, positively, and unequivocally.

Sir, I have not been to the Secretary of State or to the Treasury Department to examine the accounts of the commission; but I undertake to say in advance (and I challenge the Senator from Nebraska to the issue) that those accounts will not put one stigma upon the character of Governor Reynolds. If he went to the City of Mexico in a palace car, he went as he thought a representative of this Government should go, and as a gentleman occupying that position should go. He did not go in a palace car with any idea of putting on any token of royalty, or of squandering the people's money, wrung, as the Senator says, from them by taxation. He went to the City of Mexico, as I know, under the orders of the Secretary of State. He came back to the city of New Orleans under the orders of the State Department for the purpose of interviewing the representatives from the Central American and South American states who were attending the great exposition. He has performed his duties honestly and faithfully, as he has performed every other duty public and private during his long and successful career. His report is before the Senate. It is the report of a statesman, of a gentleman, of a scholar, of a man who is worthy to fill any position in this Republic. I received from him only two days ago a letter from San José, in Costa Rica, where in the midst of a foreign people, confronted by disease, he was traveling over the mountains on mules for the purpose of discharging this mission. He is there to-day discharging the delicate functions imposed upon him in a manner so satisfactory that the new Secretary of State told me not forty-eight hours ago that he regarded him as one of the best officers in the service of the Government. And I desire to say now that when those accounts are examined it will be found that not one cent has been appropriated to any selfish purpose on the part of Governor Reynolds. He is one of that commission.

The Senator speaks of two men and a boy. The "boy" is nearly fifty years old, and has been the editor of one of the leading Republican papers in the city of Chicago and is the secretary of that commission, a gentleman who has rendered distinguished service, political and otherwise, in this country. The imagination of the Senator from Nebraska changes him into a "boy."

Governor Reynolds was a lawyer in full practice in the city of Saint Louis. He received at the hands of the Secretary of State or the President this appointment with a salary of $7,500 a year. The money which he receives could have been no inducement. He took with him upon this trip when he started out a member of his family, very dear to him, whose health was impaired, and who is now in the city of Baltimore in a condition which will necessitate his immediate return to the United States. I challenge the Senator from Nebraska to go into these accounts after Governor Reynolds returns here and place before the people of the United States the truth or the falsity of the statements he has made here to-day. All I desire to say in advance in defense of this gentleman, my friend, my constituent, is that he seeks no concealment and asks the fullest investigation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I regret that anything further is necessary, but it would seem so from the earnest remarks made by the Senator from Missouri. I presume he is the only member of this body who could have supposed that there was any intention of making any reflection personally upon the gentleman of whom the Senator speaks.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to do the Senator any injustice. I did speak earnestly. I ask the Senate now to decide this issue between us.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have not a word to say against his friend from Missouri. I do not know anything about him. That was not the matter with me. I was talking about the commission. He knows it, and he believes as an honest reform Democrat that any individual who discharges his trust and performs his duty, who makes an expenditure beyond what he would do in his own pursuits in life is not administering his trust faithfully, to say the least.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is a curious subject. I should like to know whether the Senator has, I was going to say groveled, I will say examined, so far into these accounts as to know whether this may not cover the subsistence and the railway transportation. Does he know all about the details of this transaction? Does he know so much as to justify him in attacking the honor of these gentlemen, saying that here is an "infamous outrage," in addition to the other language repeated by the Senator from Missouri? If he is going on in this way exposing to the whole public of the United States, making present to the whole public of the United States the bitterest, fiercest attacks on the common integrity and honor of gentlemen who have always stood as high as he can ever hope to stand, I hope that he will be able to show that he does it on decent evidence.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have groveled through this, I will say to my friend——

Mr. HAWLEY. Likely.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suppose he understands the force of words when I say I have groveled far enough to understand the suggestions he has made. Here was this palace car—I was replying to my friend from Missouri—forty-one and a half days, at $35 a day, for three men, if you please, $1,447. I will say to my friend from Connecticut that the accounts still further show charges for supplies laid in at Kansas City, at San Francisco, pay to the cook on the palace car, pay for the tickets, he will find included in these accounts—they are all there and they foot up $6,000 and upward for one quarter's expenses merely—$6,000 for three men from October to January, and at that time they had not left this country!

Is a man to be arraigned and all sorts of threats and denunciations made against him for making a statement of figures which appear in the Treasury Department and in the State Department in regard to this matter? These facts are there, these statements are true; and will Senators undertake to justify and defend them? On what pretense?

Now, Mr. President, I have answered the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut that these figures show just as I have stated, and I have answered the Senator from Missouri, who seems to regard the charge against this commission as a personal statement against his friend upon it. I stated the facts and characterized them strongly perhaps, as I thought the facts would abundantly justify.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not wish to speak on that question. I wanted to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I will not make it just now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator from California makes his motion I wish to offer a resolution which I have submitted to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator excuse the Chair for calling attention to a resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is to be referred.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask that that resolution be referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution of the Senator from Indiana will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. It can come up to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it lie on the table to-day.

Mr. VEST. Let the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution of Mr. HARRISON, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate passed on the 4th of March, 1885, authorizing the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River to sit during the vacation of the Senate and to make certain investigations therein named be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that had better lie on the table. The Senator from Indiana is not present.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Indiana asked that it be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

The motion was agreed to.

DIGEST OF ELECTION CASES.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I ask for the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the Committee on Privileges and Elections eighteen copies of the digest of the contested-election cases of the Senate, ordered to be prepared under a resolution which passed the Senate February 26, 1885.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of that.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], chairman of the committee, when he left supposed that the Committee on Privileges and Elections had the power in its own right to order the printing of these copies, the Senate having already ordered the preparation of this digest, and he went away with that impression; but I hold in my hand a letter of the Public Printer, who says that the Committee on Privileges and Elections has not that right, although some other committees, like the Committee on Finance, have. He asks, therefore, to protect him in the execution of the order given by the chairman, that the Senate pass this resolution allowing eighteen copies for the committee, two for each member.

Mr. DAWES. Is that a digest to be prepared or the old digest?

Mr. SHERMAN. The digest the committee are ordered to prepare. I has to be revised, and it is supposed each member of the committee should have a chance of suggesting revisions. These are to be mere proof copies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution the question is on its adoption.

The resolution was agreed to.

TELEGRAPH CONTRACTS.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed, in addition to the information furnished for the Senate on the 3d of March instant, to furnish the Senate with copies of the contract entered into between the Union Pacific Railroad Company and other railroad companies affected by the act approved July 1, 1862, and the Western Union Telegraph Company, together with all statements now on file in his Department touching the same.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE] yesterday, which will be read.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I do not think we can dispose of that resolution this morning; it will lead to discussion; and I insist on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator from California will give way long enough to let the resolution which I offered yesterday by direction of the Committee on Coast Defenses be considered. I think it will take less time to consider it to-day than it will to-morrow, for we have already had an hour and a half's discussion on the general subject, and I apprehend we can dispose of the resolution in a few minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California withdraw his motion?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not like to be discourteous, but there is some executive business which it was agreed by Senators should be taken up to-day, and it will require some time to dispose of it. I do not think this is a good time for the Senator from Oregon to bring forward his resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CLERKS TO STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That so much of the several resolutions of the Senate passed since the 1st day of March instant as provides for a clerk for any standing committee of the Senate during the recess of Congress be, and is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

SATURDAY, March 21, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRIVATE CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE] on the 19th instant, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to compile the laws relating to the allowance of private claims, and to digest the judicial decisions and the reports to Congress relating thereto, and to continue and extend the list of private claims which have been presented to Congress so that the said list shall cover the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses, the necessary expense to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate under the direction of the said committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does that come from a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, so that they can see how much it will cost and the extent of it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to refer the resolution to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PIKE. I was requested by a majority of the Committee on Claims to report the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the resolution was reported from the Committee on Claims it is hardly worth while to refer it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I made the inquiry and was told it had not been reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Upon its face the resolution was offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Am I to understand the Senator from New Hampshire to say that the resolution is reported by direction of the Committee on Claims?

Mr. PIKE. It was offered by me at the request of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I withdraw the motion to refer it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to refer is withdrawn, and the question now is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. The committee will probably ascertain this fact for themselves when they come to have this work done and supervise it, but I understand from the clerks that the work referred to in the latter part of the resolution, bringing up to date the record of claims, is always done in the Secretary's office as a matter of course.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Claims whether the resolution contemplates a revision of the three large volumes of private claims which have been before Congress, or whether it contemplates simply the compiling in a little pamphlet by itself of the claims which have been introduced since those volumes were published?

Mr. PIKE. It was not in the contemplation of the committee to revise the two large volumes, but only to make a compilation for the last two Congresses in a separate pamphlet.

Mr. DAWES. Do the last volumes come down to those two Congresses?

Mr. PIKE. They do.

Mr. DAWES. So it is a continuation?

Mr. PIKE. That is all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see on looking at the resolution that it is much wider than I supposed when I heard it read. It not only provides for continuing from the last print the list of private claims, which is necessary and valuable, the claims presented since the last print down to the present time, but what I do not remember to have seen or heard of before it is proposed to direct the committee "to compile the laws relating to the allowance of private claims," which would cover every private claims law from the beginning of the Government to this time, by its letter, "and to digest the judicial decisions and the reports to Congress relating thereto," which covers the whole period of the Government. There is no such thing now that I know of; perhaps I am mistaken. Then it provides what I supposed was all the resolution at first, "to continue and extend the list of private claims which have been presented to Congress" since the last print.

The last part of the resolution is perfectly correct, and it ought to be done. The first part of it I should very much doubt the wisdom of as compared to the very great expense of labor and of printing involved in it, and a great deal of it calls for an entirely unnecessary expense, going away back to the foundation of the Government.

I move to amend the resolution by striking out after the words "directed to" down to and including the word "to," where it first occurs in the fourth line, so that it will contain simply a provision for printing the list of private claims since the last print, which is quite a different thing from compiling all the laws and decisions on the subject of private claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2, after the words "directed to," it is proposed to strike out down to and including the word "to," in line 4, as follows:

Compile the laws relating to the allowance of private claims, and to digest the judicial decisions and the reports to Congress relating thereto, and to.

So that the resolution will read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to continue and extend the list of private claims which have been presented to Congress so that the said list shall cover the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses, the necessary expense to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, under the direction of the said committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PIKE. I will state for the information of the Senator from Vermont and the Senate that it was not contemplated by the committee to compile anything more than the laws now in force relating to private claims—not to go back to the beginning of the Government—but only those laws now actually in existence. They are in different volumes, considerably scattered, and some of them attached to appropriation bills; and to a person unacquainted with the examination of the statutes it is very difficult to find them. The compilation can not be very expensive, or the book when compiled very large. I hope for that reason that the amendment will not be adopted.

The committee deemed this compilation very necessary and very important, not only for the members of the committee, but for members of the Senate and all interested in private claims. It was discussed very much at the last session of Congress by the committee, and it was then deemed necessary, but in the hurry of business the resolution was not then offered.

I hope that the Senator from Vermont will not insist upon his amendment, or if he does that it will not be adopted. We have no objection to the resolution being amended so as to apply only to such laws as are now in force relating to private claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have a division.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays. That is just as well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; that is better yet.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask that the amendment be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be read again.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the resolution be first read and then the proposed amendment, if the Chair please.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution of Mr. PIKE and the resolution as proposed to be amended by Mr. EDMUNDS.

Mr. PIKE. If there be no objection I will move to amend by adding after the words "compile the laws" the words "now in force;" so as to read:

To compile the laws now in force relating to the allowance of private claims, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator propose that as an amendment to the original resolution or as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. PIKE. Perhaps it would be better to propose it as an amendment to the original resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2, after the word "laws," it is proposed to insert the words "now in force;" so as to read:

That the Committee on Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to compile the laws now in force relating to the allowance of private claims, and to digest the judicial decisions and the reports to Congress relating thereto, &c.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the amendment? The Chair hears none.

Mr. PIKE. I will move further to amend the resolution by adding, after the words "judicial decisions," the words "relating to the laws now in force" or "explanatory of the laws now in force."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire,

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 3, after the word "decisions," it is proposed to insert the words "relating to the laws now in force;" so as to read:

That the Committee on Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to compile the laws now in force relating to the allowance of private claims, and to digest the judicial decisions relating to the laws now in force, and the reports to Congress relating thereto, &c.

Mr. HARRIS. I suggest the striking out where they last occur of the words "now in force," and inserting the words "such laws."

Mr. PIKE. I will accept that modification.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to state, so that so far as I am concerned there shall not be any mistake about it, that since this debate began I have studied the Revised Statutes in the index, and my recollection is confirmed that there is not any such thing as a system of laws or even a part of a system of laws relating to private claims—private land claims even, or any other private claims. There are two or three provisions of the Revised Statutes of the United States that any Senator can turn to, or anybody else, any claimant, at any time, which provide first, that no claim shall be allowed in favor of a person who took up arms against the Government under certain circumstances and without certain relief, and so on. There is another provision that a certain class of claims shall be settled by the Quartermaster's Department, and that a certain other class of claims shall be settled by the Commissary Department, and so on, in the military laws of the United States, which need no compilation, which everybody engaged in dealing with the Government perfectly well understands, and which all the officers of the Government understand. Then in respect of the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims, there is a short section which provides that the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction of all claims arising on contract, express or implied, against the United States; and there is a statute of limitations that suit must be brought in that court within a certain time, and there is the end of it.

It appears to me it is a totally useless labor and expense to undertake to codify and put into one book the laws respecting these various matters that I have named, and I believe I have named them about all. If you say that a claim for a refund of duties or a claim for an excess of duties paid under protest is a private claim, then you go into a revision of all the laws in respect of the collection of customs, which would swell the volume to be sure, but would not be of the slightest use to anybody when you had got it.

When you come to the digest of the judicial decisions relating to the laws on private claims now in force, you have got the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States on appeals from the Court of Claims, of which decisions together with their other decisions there are perfect digests, not only of the names of cases but of the subjects decided, already provided, that anybody can buy for $2, and that every committee-room is furnished with and every Department furnished with at public expense, in which you can turn in an instant, if you know the name of any private claim or the name of any question that has arisen about any private claim, to any subject that you care to know about that has been decided—in a minute you can turn to a perfect index both of the subject and of the names of the parties concerned in the question; and there it is before you.

Now, what is the use of going to this expense? I do not see it. I hope therefore that the whole of this part of the resolution, however amended, will be stricken out, for to my mind it is an entirely unnecessary labor and an entirely unnecessary expense.

Mr. PIKE. I am very sorry to differ with the distinguished Senator, who is regarded almost as authority here, but it seems to me he never could have been a member of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL. We can not hear the Senator from New Hampshire on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. PIKE. I was saying that it seems to me the Senator who has criticised the resolution and has offered an amendment to it which deprives it of almost all its value never could have been a member of the Committee on Claims. It has been my misfortune, or rather my fortune, since I have been a member of this body to be a member of that committee, and my experience is entirely different from his statement.

There are very many statutes which can not be easily found, and to a person unacquainted with them it will take a very long time to find them. There is the captured and abandoned property act, which is not in the general statutes, as I understand, or but very little of it; then there is the so-called Bowman act, which passed a little while ago, on which there are opinions of the Court of Claims; and there are very many other acts which I could mention that can not be found in the statutes.

It is said that the judicial decisions giving interpretations of these acts are easily found. They are found in a hundred volumes of reports, more or less—perhaps not a hundred, but very many, and there is no good index to all those reports.

I submit that the Committee on Claims and that the Senate ought to have these laws in a compact, accessible form. If the investigation of the Committee on Claims or of the Senate when the question of a claim comes here was like that in an ordinary suit at law the matter might be entirely different. In an ordinary suit at law in a court where there are plaintiff and defendant, where both sides are represented and all the evidence on both sides is presented, where the law is examined by counsel and presented to the tribunal to decide it, it is all or nearly all before them and they have the means to examine it; but it is entirely different with the Committee on Claims. Only one side is represented; the Government is not represented; and if the side of the Government, the law pertaining to the Government side of the case, is to be examined at all, it must be done by the committee hunting up whatever there may be and acting as counsel in the case. Really the duty of the Committee on Claims is not only to try the case as jurors and as judge, but also to act as counsel for the General Government. More than that; all the evidence produced is ex parte. It is a burden upon the committee which is not only onerous, but it is almost impossible of proper performance.

One-fourth of all the bills introduced in this body are sent to the Committee on Claims, involving questions running back to the beginning of the Government. The Committee on Claims of the Forty-eighth Congress examined claims for building the old part of the Capitol away back in George Washington's time, which in one form or other have been in Congress from that time to this. The claim of Mr. Meade relating to affairs occurring in the beginning of this century has been in Congress thirty years nearly, with any number of reports upon it. I do not propose to take the time of the Senate to any great extent, but it seems to me it would be a great saving of time to have such a compilation, vastly beyond any expense that will be incurred, which will not be large.

There is another consideration which it seems to me ought to weigh in this body. There ought to be uniformity in our decisions. A question considered, discussed, passed upon, and decided here ought to be regarded as a precedent. If there has been a decision of the Supreme Court or of the Court of Claims upon a question it ought to be accessible to every Senator, so that he may not be obliged to go to the library and look over a hundred volumes or search the legislation of the last dozen years to find what ought to be at hand. We can not now have uniformity in our decisions; they will be one way at one Congress and another way at the next Congress, as has been the case, and it seems to me there is no way to get uniformity unless the law and decisions pertaining to these cases can be reasonably accessible.

Mr. PLATT. I should like the Senator from New Hampshire to explain exactly what is meant by the resolution. I wish to know just what I am voting on. As originally drawn it reads:

That the Committee on Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to compile the laws relative to the allowance of private claims, and to digest the judicial decisions and the reports to Congress relating thereto.

There have been a great many private claims and a great many reports to Congress upon them. If we are to have all the reports which have been made to Congress relating to private claims digested, it seems to me that the resolution lays out a work which will have to be published in a good many volumes. I do not know that the mover of the resolution intended it should go to that extent, and yet I can not see what else is meant by the reports to Congress relating to private claims which are to be digested. Of course they must all be digested if any of them are, and it is an immense work which is laid out here, and an expensive work, as I read the resolution.

The truth about the matter is that it has been customary to order the Secretary of the Senate once in about four years to continue the list of private claims. The work has to be done in the Secretary's office, and the Secretary is the proper person to do it. But here the Committee on Claims has an annual clerk who is paid now $2,200 a year. I suppose the Committee on Claims would like to have the clerk employed and get something more than his regular salary during the recess of the Senate. It seems to me, without reference to the amendment of the resolution, the Senate had better pursue the usual and customary course, and let the list be compiled as it has been in the past by the Secretary of the Senate. I think it has never been compiled by the Committee on Claims. The Secretary of the Senate is the proper person to compile it. At any rate there should be struck from the resolution, if not all that the Senator from Vermont proposes—and I think all that should be stricken from it—at least that portion of it which relates to compiling a digest of all the reports which have been made on private claims to Congress since the foundation of the Government.

Mr. PIKE. If the resolution will thereby be more acceptable to the Senator from Connecticut, I do not know that I shall object to those words being stricken out. The contemplation of the committee was nothing more than that reference should be made to reports. There is a question to be presented to the coming Congress, for instance. It has been in the House of Representatives and reported upon; it has been here and reported upon. There may be a dozen reports upon it and they may be all one way or they may be different. The idea was to have a reference made to those reports so they could be readily found.

Perhaps the resolution is susceptible of the criticism that the Senator makes upon it, that it will make a large book, but it was not contemplated. The contemplation was to have nothing more than a topical index or a statement at large of the statutes and a brief reference to the decisions of the Supreme Court; and it was thought wise and best that reference should be made to the action which had been had in Congress upon private claims.

Now, one word about the Committee on Claims having an annual clerk. They have an annual clerk and a good one. It was the purpose of the committee to utilize the labor of that clerk so far as they could; but this work does not properly belong to his duties; that is, it would be adding to his duties more than was originally contemplated.

I wish to say one word further on this subject. In the House of Representatives there is a Committee on Claims and there is also a Committee on War Claims. The Committee on Claims of the House has not only a clerk but an assistant clerk. The Committee on War Claims has not only a clerk but an assistant clerk. I believe both the clerk and assistant clerk are annual, and the clerks are paid as much as the clerk of the Committee on Claims of this body is paid. Yet the clerk of the Committee on Claims of this body does all that is done by the clerks of the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims in the House; that is, one man does as much work here as four there.

Whatever the clerk of the committee can do the committee expect to have him do; but if he can not accomplish it all and some one has to help him, the resolution provides that that may be done. That is all the committee contemplated, and it is just what it did contemplate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that my friend from New Hampshire must have forgotten in respect of that part of the subject to which attention was called by my friend from Connecticut a part of the words I have moved to strike out, making a digest of reports on private claims, going over the whole period of the Government or any part of the whole period of the Government—he must have forgotten that three or four years ago Congress by law provided for a perfect index being made of every document in the archives of the Senate and House of Representatives from the beginning of the Government to this day, a most useful work undoubtedly, for the very purposes that my friend speaks of in respect of reference. That index has been prepared and is now in press. I have seen the proof sheets of it and it will be on our tables before next December, if we happen to be here to have it laid on our tables. It is all set up and probably will be ready for binding in a month or two. That index, prepared with the care it has been, with double references, by name and by nature and in every way that a perfect index can be made, will furnish to any committee and to any Senator the means of finding out instantly whether a claim now pending has ever been presented before, what the report in either House on it was, what the action in each House was, when it was presented if ever again, and so on.

Now we have all this information ready to be laid before us. Wherefore then should we go to the expense of making a digest of what we have a complete index of? We can turn to the documents instantly when we have the index; and to make a digest of reports to be of any value in most instances would require setting out the whole report at large, because they are usually so condensed and terse, as they ought to be, that they can not be digested. They are brought down to the smallest point, they are really a syllabus themselves in general. Some are very long, but in general they are merely a condensed statement of what the case is, just what a digest would be. To require that is a double and an unnecessary expense.

As I think, with great respect to my friend from New Hampshire, this attempt to compile the laws about private claims will be an unnecessary and great expense, and when we have got it, according to my experience and observation as to a compilation of the land laws which was made some years ago, it will be more misleading and more confusing than any other kind of book which can be gotten up. The moment you turn to it, if you find what you wish, you immediately turn to the statute. It operates then only as an index. You turn to the statute as it stood originally, with all its context and parts, in order to find out what the law means. Every sort of digest of that kind of law or compilation of laws, unless it be a code all together and on one subject so that you know you have got everything about it, is really more injury and trouble to a committee or to a court or to a Senator than it is to just go to the indices of your statutes and turn to the whole statute at once.

Mr. PIKE. I do not propose to pursue the discussion, but after the word "decisions," in the third line, I will consent to strike out the words "and the reports to Congress."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire proposes a modification of his amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not propose to interfere with the management of the chairman of the committee in regard to the resolution he has offered, but I wish to say that I think the amendment now proposed strikes out the most important and valuable part of it.

Mr. PIKE. So I think, but that modification seems to be desired.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE], upon which the yeas and nays have not been called.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. PIKE. Members of the Committee on Claims do not agree with me in consenting to strike out the words "and the reports to Congress," but think that had better not be done. I will withdraw that amendment if I may be permitted to do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the matter be recommitted to the Committee on Claims. I desire to follow their lead, but there is some confusion about it. I therefore move that the resolution be recommitted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the resolution and the proposed amendment be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. Heretofore the list of claims pending in the Senate has been prepared ever since 1840 in the office of the Secretary of the Senate. There are several volumes. The last volume comes up to the end of the Forty-sixth Congress, I believe. There are two Congresses now the list of claims presented during which has not been prepared. The work to which the Senator from Vermont refers is being made in pursuance of a law of Congress. The original bill I had the honor of preparing and introducing. It provided for the preparation of an analytical and critical index of all publications of the Government from 1776 to the present time. The index is being prepared and will soon be completed. As a matter of course it will contain a great deal of information, and will enable persons to find anything that has been published by the Government on any subject-matter that has been treated of.

I sympathize with the Senator who has introduced this resolution. Having been a member of the Committee on Claims for six years, I have some knowledge of the difficulties under which the members of that committee labor. I do not think it would be wise, even if this list of private claims presented to the Senate should be compiled now, that it should be taken out of the office of the Secretary of the Senate. It was placed there in 1840. It has been continued there every time a compilation has been made.

There could be a publication prepared by the Committee on Claims, which I think would be very useful not only to the committee, to new members coming upon it, but also to the Senate, and that would be a compilation of the existing laws in regard to claims not only pending in Congress but in the Court of Claims under the various acts and in the Departments and the regulations in regard to them, questions of limitation and all such things, because almost every variety of claim will come before the Committee on Claims. There are a large number of claims that have already been barred by limitation. Very often a Senator does not know where to find the particular law imposing the limitation. It may be in an appropriation act. For example in the Quartermaster-General's Department there are the 4th of July claims, as they are called. Over 52,000 of those claims have been filed before the Quartermaster-General. On an appropriation act providing for the payment of some of those claims a limitation was placed upon them so that all claims not presented prior to the 1st of January, 1881—I believe that was the date—are barred and can not be considered by the Department. So with other claims.

But I do not think it would be wise or proper for the Committee on Claims now to take away from the Secretary of the Senate the preparation of this list of private claims; but if the committee would confine itself to a preparation or compilation of the laws relating to claims under the United States, I think it would be an important work. I do not think the resolution covers that class of publications. Therefore I think it is best that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Claims, so that they may report such a resolution as will meet with the approbation of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] that the resolution and amendments be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. INGALLS. On the 24th of June, 1884, the Senate adopted a resolution requiring the commissioners of the District of Columbia to transmit certain information regarding the collection of taxes and the receipts and disbursements in various departments of the government of this District from 1875 to 1884. On the 3d of March, 1885, the commissioners responded by a letter of transmission, accompanied by certain papers, which was a partial compliance with the order of the Senate. This letter of transmission was printed as Executive Document No. 104, of the Forty-eighth Congress, second session, and was referred or ordered to be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The statements which the commissioners forwarded included a statement of expenditures for streets and roads from 1876 to 1884; a statement of receipts and disbursements on account of the water department from 1875 to 1884; a statement prepared by the collector of taxes, showing tax collections from 1875 to 1884, inclusive, in Washington, Georgetown, and the county; and a statement of special assessments charged against street railroads. These papers were prepared with great labor, and it is necessary in order to the proper information of the committee that they should be printed. I presume that the order for printing them was improvidently or inadvertently omitted. I ask an order that the papers accompanying Executive Document No. 104 may be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the order will be made. The order is made.

TRADE-DOLLARS.

Mr. MITCHELL submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas Congress on the 12th of February, 1873, authorized the coinage of trade-dollars weighing 420 grains each of standard silver, which dollars by the same act were made coins of the United States and a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment; and

Whereas by the joint resolution of July 22, 1876, Congress declared that the trade-dollars should not thereafter be a legal tender, and authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to limit from time to time the coinage thereof to such an amount as he might deem sufficient to meet the export demand for the same; and

Whereas prior to the passage of the said resolution nearly 15,600,000 trade-dollars were coined at and issued from the mints of the United States; and

Whereas subsequently to the passage of the said resolution over 20,300,000 of these pieces were coined at and issued from said mints; and

Whereas a former Secretary of the Treasury, now a Senator from Ohio, did on the 26th of February, 1885, in the Senate of the United States declare that the Secretary of the Treasury, in October, 1877, stopped the coinage of trade-dollars, and that the Government of the United States had no part or lot in this matter after the 15th of October, 1877; and

Whereas in truth and fact, as appears by the report for 1879 of the Director of the Mint, 5,248,960 were coined and issued after October, 1877, of which number 4,259,900, bearing date of 1878, were coined in 1878; and

Whereas millions of the said coins, as is believed, were put in circulation and circulated at their face value as coin of the United States in the channels of trade and business; and

Whereas the House of Representatives, on the 19th of June, 1882, passed a bill for the retirement of trade-dollars from circulation and their recoinage into standard silver dollars, which bill provided that the trade-dollar so received should be regarded as silver bullion, and should be deemed a part of the monthly purchase of bullion, as required by the act of February 28, 1878; and

Whereas, notwithstanding the appeals of merchants, business men, and the people at large by petitions presented while the said bill was pending in the Senate, the Senate failed to pass the bill, which fell finally on the expiration of the Forty-seventh Congress, March 4, 1883; and

Whereas some of the aforesaid merchants and business men in New York city thereupon organized opposition to the continued circulation of the said coins, agreed to refuse them, and in July, 1883, declined longer to receive them, whereupon these pieces were generally tabooed and ceased to circulate as theretofore; and

Whereas it is believed from five to seven millions of the said coins issued both before and after the legal-tender quality was taken from them are held by citizens who took them in due course of business at their face value, which coins are still uncurrent and at a great discount, by reason whereof the holders have already been deprived of the use of the same as money for nearly two years; and

Whereas the House of Representatives on the 1st of April, 1884, did again pass a bill for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar, which bill also failed to pass the Senate and fell with the expiration of the Forty-eighth Congress on the 4th of March, 1885; and

Whereas in fixing the value of foreign coin as estimated by the Director of the Mint and proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury on the 1st of January, 1875, 1876, 1877, and 1878, the valuation of silver was for those four years at the trade-dollar rate, namely, 420 grains, 900 fine, to the dollar, thereby recognizing the said coins as dollars of the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That a special committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to inquire and report to the Senate not later than the second Monday of December next—

First. How many trade-dollars were put in circulation in the United States prior to the passage of the resolution repealing their legal-tender quality?

Second. How, when, where, and in what quantities the said coins came into circulation subsequently in this country?

Third. How many of the said coins are still held in this country, in what States, and the amount in each; and at what rates the same were taken?

Fourth. How much profit accrued to the United States by the coinage of trade-dollars, either from collecting customs duties levied at the trade-dollar rate from 1875 to 1878, inclusive, or otherwise?

Fifth. What has been the practice under this and other governments as to the receipt or refusal by them of their own coin?

And that the said committee have power to employ a stenographer, to subpœna witnesses, and to administer oaths and take testimony, and that the actual necessary expenses incurred in the execution of this resolution shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon the allowance and order of the said committee.

Mr. BECK. I object to that resolution calling for a special committee. I do not see any reason why the Finance Committee can not do any work this special committee is to do; certainly it is competent for that work.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not understand the remark of the Senator.

Mr. BECK. I say I object to any special committee being appointed for this purpose, believing that the Finance Committee is perfectly able to do the work.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do I understand that the resolution is now up for consideration?

Mr. HARRIS. It can not be considered without unanimous consent, and I shall object to that consent being given.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky are not in order unless I am allowed to say something in reply.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. On objection the resolution lies over.

Mr. HARRIS. I was going to move that the resolution be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator does that at this time, it will necessitate a statement on the subject by myself. I believe that would be in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution be printed and lie over then.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should be quite willing to discuss it, but I understand the Senator from California desires an executive session, and I do not wish at this or any other time unnecessarily to occupy the attention of the Senate on this subject.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] has objected to the consideration of the resolution, and it lies over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the resolution be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The printing will be ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer a substitute for the resolution that has just been offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent to the consideration of the resolution for any purpose?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no objection to the substitute being read.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the substitute to be printed and laid on the table with the resolution, and then I shall object to the consideration of either. I have a right to offer a substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That any standing or select committee of the Senate, or any two or more Senators desiring to make an investigation of any particular question or subject deemed worthy of investigation by them, are hereby authorized to sit by subcommittee or otherwise during the recess of Congress at such places at home or abroad, on land or sea, as they may deem proper; to send for persons, papers, and things; to administer oaths and examine witnesses; to appoint a sergeant-at-arms from the messengers of the Senate or elsewhere; to appoint a clerk and stenographer; and shall make such report with such recommendations to the Senate at the next regular session as they deem proper. The expenses of the said committee's employés, witnesses, &c., shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon the order of the chairman of such committee or subcommittee.

SENATE SEAL.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to offer the following resolution, and I ask that it be printed and lie over.

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be directed to prepare an official seal for the Senate of the United States, and that the expense of the same be paid out of the contingent fund.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints the following as the committee authorized by the resolution of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] adopted on the 17th instant:

Messrs. CULLOM, HOAR, MILLER of New York, GORMAN, and HARRIS.

PUBLICATION OF DEBATES IN THE RECORD.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HAWLEY. I dislike to detain the Senate just now from the important business in executive session, but I rise to a question of privilege, not a new one I am sorry to say, but a very interesting one.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, there was a debate here yesterday which was more interesting to some spectators than it was dignified or valuable in my humble judgment. Some very severe things were said reflecting upon a previous administration of the Government, distinguished officers of that Government—I think I see one now before me—reflecting upon the Senate at large, the Senators, and a distinguished commission created by the Government—some very severe things indeed, directly personal and offensively personal. I find on looking at the RECORD this morning that many of these things which were said by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] are for the most part stricken out of the RECORD, while the replies made to those remarks, made by his colleague [Mr. MANDERSON] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and incidentally and very briefly by myself, are some of them mutilated or stricken out. I did not suffer in that respect, though the little I said is hardly supported by what appears in the RECORD of the supposed or alleged remarks of the Senator from Nebraska. He said very much more than is printed in the RECORD. If he had not, I do not think I should have been upon my feet at all, and I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri would have been; I hardly think so, for I do not see why he made the speech he did, judging from the RECORD.

Mr. FRYE. The RECORD is not read in the galleries.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know how far the RECORD is read. This RECORD is ordinarily considered rather a dull newspaper and is not very much read by the great public at large. It is consulted frequently as a matter of record in order that one may see exactly what was said in Congress; and in that respect the RECORD of yesterday's debate in the Senate is very nearly valueless. While a very considerable portion of the public through the galleries and through the newspapers of the country will get an idea that something very severe was said, that can not be verified anywhere now except from the manuscripts of the reporter of the debate of yesterday, which I have before me. Much of the matter is not printed in the RECORD. I will just give a little example or two:

That was the position. The Senate was disinclined to do all that in one general appropriation, but they allowed this to be done, that every standing committee should introduce a resolution and that it should be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and they should report affirmatively, and it should receive the approbation of the Senate, and that was done. It was done substantially to give a clerk to all, or nearly all, the standing committees not included in the appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator from Connecticut advise us what he is now reading from?

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg pardon. I am now reading what is not in the RECORD.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the manuscript from which the Senator from Connecticut is reading?

Mr. HAWLEY. The official manuscript.

Mr. INGALLS. Of the Reporter?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am reading from the Reporter's own manuscript. Again:

Standing committees are provided with annual clerks in this way; not the manly way of a vote to make them all annual, but by this subterfuge of introducing a resolution and having it referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses and reported favorably by the Committee on Contingent Expenses and adopted by the body.

Senators will remember how much was said here about the word "subterfuge" in comments by other Senators, but the Senator from Nebraska omits that disagreeable expression of his about "subterfuge."

Another reference was made to some appointee of the Government who spent the winter hanging around Albany:

I do not intimate anything unkind or unpleasant. Then the two men and the boy were hanging around lamp-posts—no, the exposition in New Orleans—till the 1st of January.

That was considered disagreeable and that was omitted.

That sort of robbery.

That was omitted in a criticism upon some distinguished gentlemen. These are the words stricken out:

I was only suggesting that if the object of some persons was to trade shot, powder, shotguns, and bad whisky for the Indian lands, then it might do to have this precursor—

That is, the committee proposed by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]— have this precursor go out of this body to pave the way. Is it any worse to steal from the Indians by a consideration of that kind than to rob the American citizen of his birthright in the public lands?

That was a shot at somebody else. Another thing omitted is:

There is not a Senator here who would believe it; and would you believe that the head of any Department of this Government would be guilty of putting his name to a ratification of such an infamous robbery as that? That is worse than the stealing of the public lands, a good deal.

That was supposed to be disagreeable to somebody and has been omitted from the RECORD.

Mr. INGALLS. By whom was it stricken out?

Mr. HAWLEY. I can not testify absolutely to that, but I can give what I regard as good evidence.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will explain to the gentleman.

Mr. HAWLEY. Wait a moment. There will be abundant opportunity for the gentleman to explain. Again:

In Heaven's name there was a necessity for a change—

That is in the general direction of the Government—was there not? If our friends on the other side do not do worse, there was necessity for a change when this robbery goes on day after day.

These are only illustrations. I leave other gentlemen to speak for themselves. I have not suffered, but this was the thing to be done: either any errors of the gentleman should have been apologized for and the language withdrawn, or that there should be unanimous consent given by the Senate to strike out on both sides on general consultation whatever was disagreeable in that debate and whatever reflected unfavorably on honorable gentlemen. I protest that it is not in accordance with the true usage of the Senate and not in accordance with fair play that a gentleman should take the manuscript of what he has said from the Reporter and strike out that which he afterward discovers to have been uttered without due premeditation or without due consideration for the feelings of others, and especially when it leaves the remarks of other Senators without any sufficient justification or foundation.

I think this is properly a matter of privilege. I should be glad if it would result in an imperative instruction to the Chief Reporter here and his able staff and to the Public Printer to publish the debates precisely as they occur, saving only the little grammatical corrections needed on account of the inelegance or mistake of a speaker, &c. I wish that might be the result of it.

I feel bound to make this protest, because I think the whole affair quite contrary to sound rules and fair play.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut, to which of course I take no exception, has now placed in the RECORD some suggestions which I made yesterday which, as I will explain to the Senate, I thought it advisable to modify. I personally have no sort of objection, although some of the remarks were made in the heat of debate, that they should appear in the RECORD. It is seldom that I take an opportunity to correct the RECORD in respect to my remarks. I certainly added nothing to what I said yesterday; neither did I take anything out of the remarks of any other gentleman that I am aware of except it may be of the Senator from Missouri.

Several SENATORS. We did not hear the last remark.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I said I added nothing to the Reporter's manuscript. I discovered after these remarks were made that the Senator from Missouri felt that they were unkindly, or rather that the remarks were harsh toward a gentleman to whom he referred from Missouri, and thinking the matter over after the debate ended I spoke to the Senator from Missouri, and told him it was furthest from my wish to say anything unpleasant or unkind of any one, especially of any person with whom he had friendly relations, and I thought it well to strike those remarks out if it met his approbation, and he suggested that he thought it would be as well to do so.

I probably spoke to two or three other members of the Senate. I know I did to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], because something had gone in my remarks which, on reflection, I thought might as well not have been said, and stated that whatever would seem to be harsh or unkind I would have stricken out. I did that.

Mr. FRYE. Was it not the duty of the Senator first not to have made the remarks at all?

Mr. VAN WYCK. My friend can answer that in his own experience through life if he fortunately has been occupying so high a position that he may never have uttered a word or a sentiment which he felt called upon subsequently to modify or retract. If he is without sin in that direction, or whoever is, let him cast the first stone.

It was a strange question for a man occupying a position on this floor, or any other position in life to ask, whether it had better not have been said. I have no sort of objection; I am perfectly willing, and if any Senator desires it, I will call back the manuscript and let it be published, every word and every sentiment as it was uttered. I have no sort of objection to that; but when I found that a brother Senator on this floor did take some exception to what I said in the spirit of kindliness merely, and in haste probably I stated that some things might have been uttered which should be modified or changed, and that I was perfectly willing that that should be done; yet if there be any Senator who desires that the RECORD shall contain every word as it was uttered, then I certainly will not only consent, but desire that every word that was said in that debate shall be so published.

The Senator from Connecticut said there were some things uttered reflecting upon the officers of this Government. So there were, and so in my judgment there should have been. As I had looked at the act creating this commission and providing for its expenses, the first charge probably would lie against the Congress which passed a law so loosely drawn that probably, as I said yesterday, an executive officer or a Department officer of this Government might have approved every voucher, even to the purchase of some of the South American republics; but in accordance with the views which I had expressed to two or three brother Senators, I thought it well to modify my remarks by leaving out that statement and casting no reproach anywhere. If Senators desire I am perfectly willing to call back the manuscript and print it just as my words were uttered.

I do not know that anything further is necessary. I have explained the reason why and the manner in which the words came to be omitted which were contained in the Reporter's manuscript.

Mr. PLUMB. Before this subject is permitted to pass out of the consideration of the Senate I desire to make a statement for myself. I was writing at my desk when the Senator from Nebraska made his speech and did not hear all the speech as it was uttered; but subsequently when the Senator from Missouri came to speak on the subject he called the attention of the Senate to the fact that the Senator from Nebraska had made very harsh remarks about the members of the commission, charging them with being robbers or worse than robbers, because a robber took the chance of being punished by incarceration in the penitentiary while these men were free from that consequence of their wrong. That was the first I had heard of that statement. The Senator from Nebraska avowed the statement, reiterated the statement, and emphasized it in every way possible.

I intended then for a purpose which I shall mention in a moment to refer to that statement, but the early adjournment of the Senate prevented my doing so. I thought then I should have the opportunity of seeing in full print the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska this morning, and I looked at to-day's RECORD for the purpose of ascertaining the precise effect of his remark. There I ascertained that those words had been left out entirely, that there had been a careful elimination of everything in the nature of a personal reflection on the members of the South American Commission, and then, being moved by a little curiosity, I ran over a little further, and I found that where the Senator from Nebraska had made a little dash at a former member of this body who is now unfortunately a member of the Utah Commission, that had been left out too. So a very careful excision of these remarks seems to have been made, so that all that was calculated to excite attention and to be considered offensive has been eliminated, although uttered in the Senate and published to the country as having been made on this floor.

I am not going to say to the Senator from Nebraska that he ought not to have done that. I think on the whole if I had made those remarks I should have been moved myself in cold blood to have taken them out as being unworthy to be uttered here, and especially on the foundation that he laid for that purpose. And what was that foundation? That is what I am specially interested in, because a member of that commission is a citizen of my State, and a gentleman who, while not so well known at large as the gentleman from Missouri, Governor Reynolds, of whom the Senator from Missouri said yesterday only that which was true when he spoke of his very high character and of the manner in which he had discharged every public trust ever committed to him, is a gentleman equally as deserving of all the eulogy that was uttered upon Governor Reynolds, and I, like the Senator from Missouri, thinking of my friend thus traduced on this floor, was willing to say of him and for him all, and more, if human language could permit, that the Senator from Missouri said about his friend as a gentleman who in his sphere is the peer of any one anywhere in character and in reputation, and who holds his reputation, as his friends do, just as dear as human reputation is held by any one anywhere.

It sounds a little large to talk about $35 a day for a Pullman palace car. I am rather liable to be economical about the expenditure of public money myself; but when I reflect that every time I go to Denver, a distance of twenty-four hours only from Kansas City, I pay $10 for a section, and that there is only one of me, while there were three at least by confession of this commission, and that that makes $30 a day, leaving only a little bagatelle of $5 to be accounted for in some way that perhaps is not absolutely inexplicable, the Senator from Nebraska has all the foundation for this assault—I will not otherwise characterize it—upon honorable gentlemen not here to defend themselves, without knowing anything whatever as to whether there was anywhere any explanation of that which on its face is not unexplainable to an intelligent mind, and we see exactly what this amounts to.

Now, I learn on inquiry that every single step that these gentlemen took, their visit to the city of New York, to the city of Philadelphia, to the city of Boston, to the city of San Francisco, to the city of Mexico, and to the city of New Orleans, every single inch that they traveled was by the express direction of their superior, the Secretary of State. They commenced where he told them to commence, and they left off in any particular direction just precisely where he told them to leave off. More than that, I am assured by those who know, as I do not, that when it came to traveling in Mexico the necessity for an equipment of that kind is of a very obvious character and absolutely indispensable, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests. And yet because these gentlemen have taken the appliances and equipage which the Senator from Nebraska himself would have taken if he had been going across the continent or to the city of Mexico or elsewhere on his own business and have spent no more of the public money than he would have spent of his own money for similar service, they have been characterized here as robbers and as men who have committed their robbery with the risk of getting into the penitentiary, and therefore as worse than the men who commit robbery without that risk before them.

I have no feeling about this so far as the Senator from Nebraska is concerned. He can settle with the public or with any one who chooses to arraign him on this floor or elsewhere for his participation in it, and I repeat now that so far as these gentlemen are concerned—and I put them together, for my knowledge of Governor Reynolds warrants me in saying of him what I say from my intimate acquaintance with Judge Thatcher—those two gentlemen will bear comparison with any men on this floor or elsewhere not only with reference to the manner in which they discharge their public trusts but the absolute fidelity with which they expend every dollar of the public money committed to them to be expended, and I will trust them to render a truthful account of their stewardship not only as to money but as to every other thing committed to them in their public capacity.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, this is an unpleasant subject, and I speak about it with great reluctance. I participated very briefly in the debate of yesterday in obedience to a sense of public and private duty, and I said then only what I believe to be true and what I am willing to repeat now.

After the debate closed with some unpleasant features the Senator from Nebraska approached me at the eastern entrance to the Senate Chamber, and expressed his regret for what he had said in regard to Governor Reynolds. He remarked that I had exhibited considerable feeling, and he believed it would be best to eliminate everything that was personal in regard to Governor Reynolds, as I understood him, from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I told him that he had unquestionably done my friend very great injustice, and that I thought it was nothing but right and proper to repair that injustice in every possible way. He then said that I had made some remarks in reply to him which it would not do to leave without the context. I told him that so far as anything I had said was concerned I cared nothing about it and had only said it as a matter of justice to an absent individual who occupied very intimate relations with me.

This was the whole of it. I have never seen the official copy of the report since; I have had nothing to do with it, and for the first time this morning my attention was called to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as printed.

Permit me to say that this is but another illustration of the reprehensible practice which has grown up in both the House and Senate of making its RECORD a conduit for what has never occurred in many cases, and has made it not a true and correct report of the debates of the Senate and House. If this practice could be reformed and amended it would be in the interest of justice, of right, and I might almost say of public decency.

Mr. DAWES. I merely rise to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if it is an unusual thing for a Senator or for a Representative to withdraw from and strike out of the RECORD remarks which he regrets himself to have made. Although I never have corrected in any shape what I have said for publication in the RECORD, I have taken the liberty to withdraw remarks that I regretted myself that I had made, and I have always done it without being censured for doing it. I have been censured myself more frequently for letting remain in the RECORD unkind and improper remarks into which I have been led by the heat of debate.

Mr. VEST. The experience of my friend from Massachusetts is much more extended than my own. It has been the custom I believe—I do not recollect any case in my own individual experience but I have known it to be done—that remarks which were personal and unpleasant have been eliminated from the RECORD without explanation publicly made.

I do not want to discuss this matter, but I have simply to say this: It is hardly sufficient reparation under the circumstances which occurred here yesterday to take these remarks out of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as has been said by the Senator from Connecticut, reaches but very few persons comparatively out of the 55,000,000 people in the United States; it is very little read; its circulation is confined to public men and to what are known as a class as politicians; but there is another conduit for public opinion in this country in the reporters' gallery, in the Associated Press, and the remarks that were made here yesterday have gone all over the country. They were in the evening papers yesterday and the morning papers to-day; and they comprise charges which involve the personal character of gentlemen as distinguished as any—I will say with all courtesy as distinguished as any on this floor. There is the injustice of which I spoke, there is the wrong committed. I do not make any individual application of it now, but the practice is reprehensible.

A Senator here makes a speech in which he characterizes some individual as a thief, and immediately it is flashed to the Pacific coast, and north, south, east, and west; it enters into every household in the land through the public journals, and we all know the avidity with which this sort of personal discussion is seized by the public press of the country. It goes everywhere, while the RECORD, out of which it is eliminated, reaches but a very few hundred of the entire population. That is the wrong; and therefore there ought to be some rule adopted by which the reparation should be as wide and extensive as the wrong committed. Until that is done no just reparation can be made.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to add that I made my remark without any reference to the debate of yesterday; but having made it, I desire to add that there is no Senator who regretted more than I did the spirit of the language indulged in in the debate of yesterday, and I quite agree with the Senator from Missouri that but half reparation is made when a public injustice and wrong is done where a private explanation is substituted for an apology for an injury done to the public.

I myself experienced a short time since that very hurt and pain when there went into the RECORD what was publicly said here in a manner which pained me very much, and the Senator who said it felt as if he had done all that was required of him by coming privately to me and apologizing. Certainly, however, yesterday's proceedings had better have gone out of the RECORD. If the Senator from Nebraska did not feel that he was called upon to be as public in his withdrawal of his charge as he was in the making of it, certainly he did something in the way of correcting the mistake by withdrawing it from the RECORD with the sanction of the Senator from Missouri. It would have been better to have got up in his place here this morning and have expressed his regret to the Senate which he expressed to the Senator from Missouri in private yesterday.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts has misunderstood me. What I said in this matter was not intended by way of apology, and while something of what I uttered was said in the heat of debate, while much of it was said in the heat of debate, yet I do not understand that I was in a position requiring me to make any apology. I felt regret when I found the interest which the Senator from Missouri, whom I highly respect, took in this matter, and found that he felt it as a sort of personal injury to himself that I had made any seeming reflection on his friend. As he was the only person who had taken an active part in the discussion who might be interested by any withdrawal of that suggestion of mine, I thought proper to confer with him. It did not occur to me that the remarks of the Senator from Connecticut were of such a nature that it was necessary that there should be any explanation to him, because I thought the point of the thing was in the portion of the discussion in which the Senator from Missouri engaged; and therefore it was, desiring to leave no unpleasant impression on the mind of the Senator from Missouri but to place him in an attitude where I thought he would feel relieved from anything in the nature of a charge against his friend, I did suggest to him that I would withdraw any unkind statement or personal statement, if it was considered such, or anything reflecting on his friend. To that he assented, intimating that it would be well. Now it seems some Senators are not satisfied that that should be withdrawn.

I went further. I sent word to the Associated Press, after this conference with the Senator from Missouri, that I proposed to take out any unkind thing that might have been said to which he had objection and asked that there should nothing appear in the dispatches containing any reflection of that kind.

Mr. President, I will before I close ask unanimous consent of the Senate that my remarks as they were made yesterday and as they appear on the report of the Official Reporter shall be published in the RECORD. I know no other way to reach this matter. I have explained the motive that induced the course I took. When I had a conference with the Senator from Missouri and an understanding with him I did not deem it necessary to go any further, or make any suggestion, or rise in the Senate and say anything further about it. I had found something I thought which would strike the average public mind as remarkable in the matter of which I spoke.

We had appointed a commission to go to Central and South America to confer with those countries in regard to the re-establishment of trade, or the inauguration of trade, with them, and we found what? On an examination we found that before these gentlemen had left the United States on that mission, in the months of October, November, and December, the expenses they had incurred were over $6,000. Certainly that seemed enormous, and yet Senators here who represent individual members on this commission say that they probably did no more than they would have done if they had been engaged in private business of their own.

Here was a charge to which I referred for the service of a Pullman palace car at $35 per day for forty-one and one-half days to go to San Francisco, to go to Mexico, and it seems to New Orleans. The answer to that is the Secretary of State directed them to go. How many of this commission went on that excursion to San Francisco I do not know; but since yesterday I have learned—I no not know that it is true and it may seem unkind to refer to it—that not only the commissioners but members of their families were carried at Government expense, and the board bills, including members of their families, were paid out of the Treasury of the United States. That statement, which I have received, I know not as to the truth of; but if that be so and the other items be as stated, do gentlemen claim that such is the proper administration of the affairs of this Government? If the Secretary of State imposed an expenditure of $6,000 on this commission—and the size of the items would seem to include members of their families transported in this way—if the Secretary of State did that act, then the responsibility rests upon him, does it not? It must be somewhere.

Senators talk much about the public press, about public sentiment, and we are supposed to administer this Government in accord with public sentiment; we are supposed to make the expenditures of this Government in accord somewhat with public sentiment. Here a commission of three men was appointed, two only of whom went to San Francisco—indeed I understand that only one went to San Francisco—thence to Mexico, and to New Orleans in our own country; and during the months of October, November, and December the cost of the commission, excluding salaries, including only two commissioners and the clerk, was $6,000. That statement ought to be enough.

I care not about the respectability of the commissioner from Missouri; I said nothing of him nor of the commissioner from Kansas. That is not the point in this case. I was talking about the commission as a whole. Two members of the commission—possibly only one participated in part of the excursion—and the clerk go to San Francisco, Mexico, and New Orleans, and when they reach New Orleans the sum charged against the United States for expenses is $6,000! The Senator from Kansas says it would be nothing unusual for a private citizen on his own business. Would it not? Would it be nothing unusual for a private citizen to pay that amount for forty-one and a half days for a Pullman car? I know not where they went nor how long they delayed. I do know that this was a commission created for a conference with the South American countries so designated in the act, and yet up to the time of reaching New Orleans they spent more than $6,000.

In my judgment the American people without regard to party will think that there is something wrong. I thought there was something wrong, and I said so. I characterized it strongly it is true, and if gentlemen desire the same strength to be carried with it let it be so, I have no objection, although I would desire personally to have said nothing unkind to any Senator occupying a seat on this floor. But here was a wrong done, a wrong to the Treasury of the United States, a wrong done to the people of the United States. We pay each member of this commission a salary of $7,500 and all expenses. That meant the natural ordinary expenses of ordinary people, not probably of millionaires, but ordinary people who transact business. If these three men had been appointed ministers or consuls to the South American and Central American republics, the probability is that before they had started on their mission and left the United States they would not have incurred a debt of $6,000 against the people of the United States.

We have been asked what is the basis on which the Senator from Connecticut says that there was a suggestion about the president of the commission hanging around Albany. That I think was true. The president of this commission it was currently reported never reached nearer to Central and South America than the city of Washington, and yet as I stated his resignation was given in on the 27th of February and he received in salary nearly $5,000.

All these things may be right in the estimation of Senators. I think not, and thinking so, so expressed myself. There was blame somewhere—blame in the Departments or blame in the commission; and must it be understood that a man at great risk and great peril undertakes to arraign the Government or arraign its officers? This very body is arraigned; the people arraign it, the press arraign it. A distinguished Senator arose in his seat in this body and said that it was suspected—yes, said that this body was suspected. Was that a slander; was that a scandal on this body, for one of its own members deliberately to rise in his place and say it was suspected? In the minds of some to be suspected amounts to being convicted. It is proper that the Senate should be charged with that, but yet we must approach the sacred inclosure, must we, of the Government, of its officers, and we must be warned that any man who dares arraign them must prepare for a sacrifice. What a strange proposition!

It is not the first time that the sacredness of the Government and its officers has shown itself in this body, and it probably will not be the last. I have taken occasion before in commenting upon an officer of this Government to say that he who will not administer a public trust with something of the same diligence and economy that he would his own private affairs is liable to criticism; and when you find in a commission of this kind that two members, or one, if you please, feel at liberty to take their families, if they did so, if that statement is correct, and take a Pullman palace car and keep it forty or fifty days in their employ doing what the ordinary American citizen, the kind that it is supposed we employ in such commissions, would do in his own business, does not such conduct call for criticism?

Mr. President, I do not know that anything more is necessary to be said. I have explained as frankly and as fully as I could the whole transaction, and now I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the remarks just as they were taken down be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I shall object. The Senator from Nebraska, after deliberately eliminating those remarks from the RECORD, now asks unanimous consent to place them back without the context and not surrounded by the state of facts that occurred. I am perfectly willing for those remarks to be republished if the Senator so wishes, provided that every word that was uttered yesterday, in the way in which it was uttered, shall accompany what he said at that time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Just as the Reporter has taken it, what the Senator from Missouri said, and what I said, and what the Senator from Connecticut said, so that it will all appear.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposition of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] was regarded by the Senate as a question of privilege; and the Chair supposes that the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] falls into that and forms a part of it, and holds that he has a right to propose in connection with it the modification of the RECORD which he suggests; but perhaps the Chair should leave that to the Senate. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the Senator from Nebraska shall make this proposition and that it shall be considered? If there be no objection it will be so regarded.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, what is the proposition?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. To modify the RECORD.

Mr. VAN WYCK. By inserting what was taken down yesterday.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I object to that. I think there has been enough said and enough done on this whole subject. I do not think that any public good will be accomplished by the republication in the RECORD of the debate just as it occurred yesterday. It has been modified. It appears in to-day's paper with the modifications which I understand were made by the consent of the Senator from Missouri; and I presume the matter ought there to rest. If there is any public good to be accomplished by republishing in the RECORD just what was taken down of the debate yesterday I would not object; but I can not conceive that any public good will be accomplished by it and I think we had better let this whole matter drop.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks the permission of the Senate to have the debate of yesterday published in the RECORD as it took place. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Nebraska has not quite precisely stated my position at least. I have no criticism to make upon what any Senator shall deem to be his sense of duty in the way of criticising public men, and especially public officials. I have carefully refrained from finding any fault with that. My question yesterday was substantially asking whether before making seriously damaging charges against men of high reputation the Senator had carefully investigated his evidence. The RECORD will bear me out that was my question; for I have an utter disgust for what I conceive to be the bad habit of indiscriminate slander on the part of citizens in private life and by the public press on officials. It is discreditable to our character as American people and detrimental to the best interests of this Government. I say that we ourselves as newspaper men and public men assist in debauching the public conscience and in depreciating the true character and value of our Government. It is the best government under the sun, best founded in constitutional and statute law upon natural law and in accordance with the inspirations of mankind. Its institutions in general are the best; its administration is the best; the public men as a class may challenge comparison with the public men of any country that ever existed or exists to-day. Its Presidents for one hundred years may proudly challenge comparison with the sovereigns of any or all nations during these hundred years; and yet there is here and there all over the country an incessant stream of defamation calculated to bring down this Government in the estimation of its people, to make a republican government throughout the world seem far less worthy than it really is.

That is one reason of the protest I made. I did not seek to check the Senator in the performance of any duty that seemed to spring from a serious consciousness of necessity, from a high moral obligation, but I did mean in an indirect way to protest against defamation. If he had evidence of great wrong, I honor him for making the charge. That was the question I asked yesterday, and to-day I ask only another question. If he finds he was wrong yesterday, let him say so to-day. Let him not go privately and strike out his words from the official RECORD, where next to nobody would have seen them or have heard of them if I had not made these remarks. Let him not go to that, but let him rise and say: "I was unjust to that South American Commission; I believe they are gentlemen who mean well. Whatever their errors of extravagance may have been, I feel that they are honorable men." Let him say that if he feels it, and let him back out of what he said yesterday. I do not know this gentleman, Mr. Reynolds, from Missouri; I do not know Mr. Thatcher, from Kansas; I do not know that I ever saw either. I speak in behalf of the public service and in behalf of the fidelity of this RECORD. I want the gentleman to have the courage of his convictions and the courage of his charges. Stand by or back out of them, one or the other; that is all I ask for.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Only a word more, Mr. President. I would say to the Senator from Connecticut—though I do not desire to repeat what I have said once or twice before—that the RECORD was not corrected privately, that I had conference with those who I supposed were interested in any manner in the correction of the RECORD, and that it was done in that way. I will explain to the Senator that I did not do it because I thought what was said yesterday was wrong. I have already expressly stated that.

I will agree with allthe Senator says about the greatness of this Government for the last one hundred years; but does my friend remember that about twenty-five years ago there was an investigation known as the Covode investigation?

Mr. HAWLEY. I remember it. It was a careful investigation; witnesses were examined; and the committee solemnly and formally reported to Congress what it found.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My friend thought the Government was so good for the last hundred years that nothing could be said against it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I never said that in my life. I know that bad men abuse power.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understood the Senator a moment ago to say that the Government was so grand for the last hundred years——

Mr. HAWLEY. I said it was the best government in the world.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will speak and fight for that proposition. I do not say that there is not occasionally a Judas or an Ananias.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was alluding to the Covode report made about twenty-five years ago. The Senator from Connecticut did not think so then. He did not think the administration then in office was the grandest administration the world had seen when about twenty-five years ago he was reading the Covode report and preaching from it in the State of Connecticut and the New England States. The Covode report arraigned a Democratic administration; that was one of the agents that helped to sweep it out of power. The Senator from Connecticut then, I have no doubt, was fighting the administration which for the time being was the Government, and helped to turn it out of power.

Our Democratic brethren arraigned us very severely only last fall and have been doing it for several years past. They arraigned us in many matters for the wasteful expenditure of money and wasteful extravagance in giving away the public domain. The Government is not here, I would say to my friend from Connecticut; it is not in your little commission; it is not in your Executive Departments; it is at the hearthstones and homes of the people of Connecticut and Missouri and Kansas and Nebraska. There is your Government to-day, in the hearts of the American people; and when their representatives here, when their Executive Departments or Congress fail to live up to what they believe to be the true principles of government, then they rise up as they did twenty-five years ago when they turned the Democratic party out of power and as they did last fall when they turned the Republican party out of power. They are the Government; there is where the Government is. But we have been taught to believe that there must be no word said against, no arraignment made, of officers of the Government, no reflection on the administration, no attempt to criticise those in power; and yet it was said by an eminent Senator that this body is suspected of being controlled by monopolies—I think that was the point then. Is not that a serious charge? This is a branch of the Government, and yet it is suspected. And the Senator from Connecticut brings that sort of sacred holy halo around the administration and wants to have it so bright and brilliant that the common vision will not undertake to peer and look beyond it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Did the gentleman ever hear me say anything that bore any resemblance to that whatever?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think when we read the RECORD to-morrow probably we shall be able to discover it.

Mr. HAWLEY. I shall not eliminate any remarks of mine from the RECORD.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No; the Senator would not do that. I think they ought to remain. I think they expressed an idea which he ought not to eliminate.

I have explained that I desire the RECORD to be faithful and true. I have undertaken to explain my motive in this matter. The offense is that there seems to be an arraignment of somebody. If the facts arraign either this commission or the Secretary of State, it or he will be arraigned in the public mind, in the Government, which is in the minds and hearts of the people.

Now, that there may be no mistake about my attitude in this matter, my willingness to have the RECORD just what it ought to be, to contain everything said or done, I ask for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Chair. That probably will indicate to the Senator from Connecticut whether I desire to back out or adhere to what I have said.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska offers a resolution in lieu of his verbal proposition a few minutes since, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Official Reporter of the Senate be instructed to correct the record of yesterday, so that it may be a faithful copy from his notes and a true record of all that was said.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, so far as any allusion was made to myself, or to the Department over which, until recently, I presided, I have not the slightest objection to the Senator's publishing exactly what he said yesterday. In a period of nearly six years that I have served in the Senate I have had occasion only three times to correct remarks that I have made. The first was with reference to the first speech I made in the Senate after my entrance here; the second was on the first speech that I made in the Senate on my return; and the third was when I felt that I had done injustice in remarks of mine to a fellow-Senator, and then I rose in the seat where my friend sits on my right and asked of the Senate the permission to strike from my speech the remarks that I had made, saying that I did so because in the heat of discussion I had said that which I regretted and which I ought not to have said.

The Senator from Nebraska did say yesterday to me that he had been led in the heat of discussion into saying some things that he regretted, and suggested that he would eliminate them from the RECORD. I had no objection. I concluded that if he did so I would make no further remarks about the matter.

To-day he reiterates and repeats everything that was objectionable and says he desires it to go in the RECORD. He alluded to a transaction of the Interior Department while I was the Secretary thereof as a robbery. The honorable Senator is very much astonished, he is surprised, that an honorable gentleman—and I suppose everybody who sits upon this floor ought to be a gentleman—should take offense at a remark of that kind. I do not know how he has been brought up, I do not know where he has lived all his life, but wherever I have lived among honorable men to charge robbery was an offense. I will admit that sometimes in the heat of debate words may fall from one's lips without attention and without thought; but when a Senator rises on the following day and says he desires to stand by what he said yesterday, he repeats his offense. He knows very well that he is not to be called to account for anything he may say here. He knows very well that he can stand here and give out to the country a statement that goes everywhere that there has been robbery of the public lands in the Interior Department under my administration; he knows that I have no remedy; and he knew more, when he said it, that it was untrue.

Mr. President, I will not go over that question. I do not propose every time that a man rises on this floor and denounces the administration of which I have been a member to feel compelled to admit the statement to be true or else get to my feet and deny it. Common decency, common respect for the co-ordinate departments of the Government, would lead men of gentlemanly instincts and proper ideas to not use language of that character with reference to any transaction unless it was plain as sunlight. Does anybody pretend that the transaction with reference to which the Senator spoke was of that character? As I stated on the floor of the Senate, I have on my desk now the opinions of Attorneys-General, men who are as much above him in questions of law or morals as it is possible for one man to get above another, declaring that it was the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to carry out the opinion of the Attorney-General.

Reverdy Johnson when Attorney-General, in the fifth volume of Opinions of Attorneys-General, declared that it had ever been the practice since 1789 of the various Departments of the Government to receive the law as laid down by the Attorney-General as binding upon them, and that the Departments were bound to administer the law as the Attorney-General had declared it when the Departments had called on the Attorney-General for an opinion. He was followed by Mr. Caleb Cushing; and these are both good Democratic authorities. Mr. Caleb Cushing, than whom there was no greater or better lawyer who ever filled that place, in an exhaustive treatise that he wrote upon the subject, declared that it was not only the practice but that it was the law. In a subsequent review of that opinion by the same officer he declared that the Secretary of the Interior—and it was with reference to a land grant—was bound to take the law as laid down by the Department of Justice, the Attorney-General, and to adjudicate the case upon it, and the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Stuart, gave to the State of Iowa 560,000 acres of land that he said, in his opinion, he did not think the State was entitled to, but he did it because the Attorney-General had decided the law that way. Caleb Cushing declared that it became the law of the case and that the Attorney-General acted quasi-judicially in these opinions.

Mr. President, the honorable Senator knew that the Secretary of the Interior had the opinion of the Attorney-General. He knew more than that, because he stated it on the floor, which I never would have stated, that he had the opinion of the President and the entire Cabinet; and Mr. Cushing said that the Secretary of the Interior could not override the Attorney-General unless the President overrode the Attorney-General for him. The honorable Senator knew when he criticised that transaction as a robbery that a majority of the House of Representatives had deliberately, after a discussion of days, decided by a majority of 42 that the company alluded to was entitled to its land. He knew that the House Committee on the Judiciary, composed a majority of them of Democrats, men above reproach and above question, men whose integrity would not suffer by any comparison with his, men whose intelligence is equal to his, whose knowledge of the law no man will pretend is not equal to his—that committee deliberately, after hearing arguments, decided by a vote of 13 to 2 that this company was entitled to the land. He knew that a committee of this body had done the same thing; he knew that this body had acquiesced in that opinion; and yet he criticised that as a robbery, and he is astonished and surprised that anybody should think that he was taking liberties that were unjustified, and he says that when he criticises a Department he supposes he lays himself open, &c.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I am willing to submit to any fair criticism, but the Secretary of the Interior and every other head of a Department is there to execute the law. He is not there to listen to demagogues who may attack the statutes that this body and the other body together have made laws. There is an opinion of Attorney-General Hoar upon just exactly such a case, where a committee of this body had asked the Secretary of the Interior to suspend the operation of a statute pending legislation, and he declared that it ought not to be done and could not be done without violating the fundamental principles of government. And yet, on a question upon which there can be no possible doubt, upon a question on which every lawyer that has ever put his eye on it, who is worthy of any confidence or belief (with the exception, perhaps, of two or three men), has asserted that this company was entitled to the land, the Senator characterizes the execution of the statute in its behalf as a robbery of the public land!

Why, Mr. President, with nothing but the vote of the House his mouth ought to be closed. I agree with the honorable Senator from Connecticut that just such attacks as these are calculated to bring into disrepute this body and the Executive Departments of the Government. The honorable Senator says that he supposes the Senator from Connecticut fell in and took part with the ideas expressed in the Covode investigation and attempted to oust the party then in power. Sir, if the Senator had come here with a committee of investigation, if he had taken that step, and then when the testimony had been brought here and upon a final hearing he had been heard, it would have been a different case.

Now, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned I do not propose, I repeat, upon every occasion when the late administration is attacked or when any member of the late administration is attacked by this Senator or any other, to defend every act of those officers. I only want to say here that I am willing that the Senator shall put in the RECORD whatever he sees fit. If he desires what he said yesterday to go in the RECORD, I am willing to vote that it shall go into the RECORD; but I want to put upon the RECORD my statement that in my judgment there is nothing that will justify such an attack upon an executive officer, no matter who he may have been, when he acts with the deliberation that was had in this case and with the support that the executive officer had with reference to this grant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska proposes a resolution which will be read again.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Official Reporter of the Senate be instructed to correct the record of yesterday, so that it may be a faithful copy from his notes and a true record of all that was said.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday next, at 10 o'clock.

EXECUTIVE PROCEEDINGS FROM WHICH INJUNCTION OF SECRECY IS REMOVED.

MARCH 21, 1885.

In the executive session of the Senate the following communication was submitted by Mr. MILLER, of California, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 9, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to bring to the attention of your committee the inclosed copy of a note from the minister of Japan here of the 3d instant, warmly thanking Mr. Lucius H. Foote, United States minister in Corea, for his efforts for the protection of a party of Japanese subjects during the recent disturbances at Seoul.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. JOHN F. MILLER,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate.

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF JAPAN,
Washington, 2d of the third month,
Eighteenth year of Meiji,

SIR: During the disturbance at Seoul, Corea, in December last, several Japanese subjects, who had in vain been seeking safety in different places from the violence of the mob, took refuge in the United States legation. A number of other Japanese who had been taken prisoners by the Chinese troops were released at the instance of the United States minister, and were likewise afforded an asylum and protection at the United States legation.

Thus twelve Japanese subjects of both sexes were succored by General Foote, and during the time they were inmates of the legation he and Mrs. Foote were untiring in their efforts to make their condition more comfortable.

Finally, having obtained assurances from the Chinese and Corean officials that the refugees would not be harmed, General Foote provided an escort, composed of Chinese and Corean troops, under the command of Mr. Barnadau, naval attaché to the legation, and sent them, together with four soldiers who had been detailed by the Japanese minister to guard the United States and British legations, to Chenusepo, where they arrived in safety.

"These Japanese," the official Japanese report of the emeute declares, "owe their lives and safety entirely to the humane and zealous efforts of the American minister."

Those efforts on the part of the United States representative in behalf of my defenseless countrymen, efforts which greatly increased his own danger and rendered his position insecure, have awakened throughout Japan a feeling of deep gratitude to General Foote, and I have been instructed by His Imperial Majesty's Government to bring them to your attention, and through you to tender to General Foote their profound thanks for his brave and humane conduct on the occasion referred to.

Permit me, sir, in fulfilling this agreeable duty to add that acts such as I have recounted not only reflect the high character of the person who performs them, but they tend directly to draw closer the bonds of friendship and good-will which happily exist between our respective countries, because they demonstrate that deeds of generous bravery overstep the bounds of national limits.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to you the assurance of my highest consideration.

KUKI RINICHI.

Hon. FREDERICK T. FRELINGHUYSEN,
Secretary of State.

SECRECY AS TO TREATIES.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a report, from which the injunction of secrecy was removed, and it was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Rules, to which was referred a question of order raised by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] as to the operation of clause 3, Rule XXXVI, report that it extends the injunction of secrecy to each step in the consideration of treaties, including the fact of ratification; that no modification of this clause of the rules ought to be made; that secrecy as to the fact of ratification of a treaty may be of the utmost importance, and ought not to be removed except by order of the Senate or until it has been made public by proclamation of the Executive.

The Senate having ordered the correction of the debate of Friday, the 20th instant, according to the notes of the Official Reporter, the entire day's proceedings are republished, as follows:

FRIDAY, March 20, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory, remonstrating against the repeal of the so-called desert-land act; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair also presents a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana Territory, favoring the enlargement of the United States penitentiary in that Territory; which will be referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. I think, it being a memorial of the Legislature of a Territory, it is entitled to a reading at the desk. I should like to have it read so that it may go in the RECORD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that it has not been the custom to have read memorials of Legislative Assemblies of Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. Then I ask that the memorial be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be read at the request of the Senator from Indiana if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Council joint memorial concerning the United States penitentiary in Montana.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the council and house of representatives, composing the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, respectfully represent to your honorable bodies that the United States penitentiary at Deer Lodge, Montana Territory, in which are confined the convicts sentenced by the courts in this Territory, has but twenty-eight cells, suitable for one prisoner each, and that confined in said penitentiary are nearly one hundred convicts; that the original plan of said penitentiary contemplated the erection of another wing, which has not been built and which is now very necessary to the proper care and safe-keeping of the prisoners confined therein; that the wing of said penitentiary already constructed was paid for from the revenues received by the Government in this Territory; that the health of the prisoners is greatly impaired by the crowded condition of the penitentiary, and the rapidly increasing number of long-term convicts, many of whom are desperate characters, and who are necessarily in constant communication with each other, endangers the safety of the guards and of the community in which the penitentiary is located. Your memorialists therefore earnestly pray your honorable bodies to make an adequate appropriation to complete said penitentiary according to the original plans, and would suggest the setting off of a portion of the internal-revenue receipts collected in Montana for that purpose. And your memorialists will, as in duty bound, ever pray.

JAMES ED. CALLAWAY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
F. K. ARMSTRONG,
President of the Council.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that the memorial, if it has not already been done, may be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been so referred. Does the Senator desire to have the other memorial read?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not ask to have it read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of Maine; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE.

Resolves in favor of arbitration and peace.

Whereas it is the duty of all nations to avoid by every honorable means the burden and curse of war, and to establish peace upon the broadest and most permanent basis possible; and

Whereas it seems to be the settled policy of the United States Government to insist on the insertion in its treaties with foreign governments a stipulation that controversies arising under the terms of such treaties on the failure of negotiations shall be referred to umpires, mutually satisfactory, whose decision shall be final and authoritative, a policy which has been already adopted by several foreign governments:

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States should refuse to ratify any treaty which omits such a stipulation.

Resolved, That in order to render the principle of arbitration permanently practical a standing high court of arbitration, composed of persons chosen by each covenanting nation, on account of their peculiar fitness, ought to be constituted, to which should be referred for consideration and settlement those questions which have hitherto too often been left to the arbitrament of war.

Resolved, That a convention or congress of representatives from the nations, to adjust differences of international laws and usage, ought by mutual agreement to be called at some place most suitable and convenient, which might also agree upon the general character and powers of the aforesaid court of arbitration.

Resolved, That the bill introduced into the national House of Representatives March 3, 1884, by Hon. I. Newton Evans, of Tennessee, which provided for the calling of such a convention at Washington by the United States Government, meets with our approval, and we would hereby respectfully memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States to pass said bill, so that it may speedily become a law.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, properly prepared and signed, be forwarded to each of the two Houses of Congress, and also to each Senator and Representative now in Congress from the State of Maine.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, March 3, 1885.

Read and passed finally.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of Maine; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

STATE OF MAINE.

Resolves relating to United States appropriations for Indians.

Whereas believing that the education of Indians and their voluntary citizenship in the United States will most justly, quickly, and economically solve the Indian problem: Therefore,

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be, and they hereby are, requested to aid in the passage of resolutions solemnly pledging the faith of the nation to the Indian policy embodied in the following principles:

First. That the unpaid sum pledged for educational purposes by the Government, as part payment for the cession of lands by Indians, be appropriated for the purchase of stock, farming implements, and tools for Indian manual labor schools.

Second. That so much of the net proceeds of the sale of public lands as may be necessary shall be set apart for the purpose of creating a permanent fund for the education of Indians.

Third. That lands in severalty, making their titles inalienable for twenty-five years, and United States citizenship may be granted at once to all Indians who so desire.

Fourth. That the legal personality of all Indians may be granted, and that protection of law may be given them, as it is to all other races, within these United States.

Fifth. That the civilization of Indians may be hastened by providing for and rewarding their civilized industries.

Sixth. That the salaries of Indian agents be sufficiently increased to secure good men of large capacity and business experience, and to retain them in service.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing resolutions to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State.

COMMITTEE TO VISIT ALASKA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], which will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest that, as the resolution was read at length yesterday and has been printed, it be referred without reading to the Committee on Territories.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If it is the pleasure of the Senate, it will be so ordered.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Before that is done, I understood that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] had an amendment to offer to the resolution. I do not know whether he desires to offer it now.

Mr. COCKRELL. The amendment of which I gave notice I think was to be proposed to the Coast Defenses Committee resolution. I did not notice the business laid before the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I take it that this resolution is offered in all seriousness and with the intention that it shall be passed by this body, and if so it ought to receive at least a moment's consideration. I notice what seems to be a change in the form. It reads:

That a committee not exceeding five Senators, to be selected by the Committee on Territories, be authorized, &c.

I should like to inquire why it is suggested in this resolution that the committee to visit Alaska shall be appointed by the Committee on Territories. I fail to recollect the appointment of any other committee of this body in that way; and why this innovation is made I am at a loss to know. Probably the chairman of the Committee on Territories can explain.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know why the Senator from Nebraska should call upon the chairman of the Committee on Territories to give him any information about a resolution with the preparation of which that chairman had nothing to do, and about which he was not consulted. The mover of the resolution would probably be able to give the Senator some information. But as the proposition is to refer the resolution to the Committee on Territories, I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that if it comes back from that committee in a form subject to criticism, that will be the time to make it. I suppose the intention of the mover of the resolution, if I may guess at what it was, or if I may judge from the terms used, was that it should be a committee of five from the Committee on Territories, and that is a very usual and common way of framing a resolution for a special investigation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If it said "a committee of five to be selected from the Committee on Territories" I could understand that; but that is not the phraseology of the resolution, and I supposed this violent departure from the long-established usage of this body in the appointment of committees meant something. That is what I desired an explanation about. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I presumed this matter relating to Territories came from the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. No, the resolution was introduced by the Senator's colleague [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. MANDERSON. If my colleague is really in search of information on this subject, I think perhaps if he would apply to his colleague who introduced the resolution he might be informed upon the subject-matter of his inquiry.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will transfer the inquiry to my colleague.

Mr. MANDERSON. I thank my colleague for his courtesy. Not having had the experience in this body that it has been the good fortune of my colleague to have, I do not know whether the resolution is in the line of precedent or not. The resolution was introduced by me in conformance with the request of a number of gentlemen, some of them members of this body, who have seemed to think that an investigation into the subject-matter of Alaska and its interests was important.

My colleague was a member of this body at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress when the act of May 17, 1884, to provide a civil government for Alaska, was passed. I think he must have observed, as most persons who watched the debate upon that bill observed, the deplorable degree of ignorance which existed in this body upon the subject of Alaska and its interests. It seemed well to the gentlemen to whom I have adverted, by whom the resolution was prepared, that this inquiry should be made during the vacation of the Senate, for the reason that Alaska occupies quite a different position from any other of the territorial possessions of the United States, having no representative here and no representative in the other branch of Congress, and there being vast interests there in which the Government is interested pecuniarily, particularly the income derived from the so-called seal islands, or the seal fisheries of Alaska.

The reason for the language of the resolution as I understand it, that the committee should be selected by the Committee on Territories, was the fact that it would be extremely difficult, and from some inquiry that I have made upon the subject I do not know but that I may say it would be impossible, to obtain from any one committee, and probably impossible to obtain from the Senate, five Senators willing to give the six or eight weeks of time necessary and essential for the purposes of this inquiry. Therefore it was, as I understand it, that the Committee on Territories, if possible from their own number, and if not possible then from the membership of other committees, should select the names of those who should make this inquiry.

As I suggested yesterday, it seemed to me that the proper action to be taken on this resolution was that it should go to the Committee on Territories for their consideration and report. If that committee should see fit to change the language of the resolution and present it thus changed to the Senate, it would then come properly before the Senate for deliberation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I realize the force of the suggestions made by my colleague, yet I do not understand that there is any satisfactory reason, or that any reason has been given, why this committee should be appointed differently from any other committee of this body. The point on which I was seeking information was as to why this innovation was made. It seems from the suggestion of my colleague that the membership is not to be confined to the Committee on Territories, because it may be difficult to obtain five Senators from that committee who are willing to spend six or eight weeks in visiting Alaska, and therefore it may be proper to take them from the body of the Senate. But the point is still unanswered as to why it is that the selection of this committee shall be given to the Committee on Territories. It is not proposed that they shall all come from that committee necessarily, and I can not see the reason—and that is what I was desiring to have explained in this matter—why this power is given to the Committee on Territories. Ordinarily committees of investigation are differently appointed.

My colleague speaks of the lamentable ignorance which was discovered in this body on the occasion of the passage of the Alaska act. I might say to my friend that that is likely to be discovered on the passage of every bill that goes through this body. After the act is passed the lamentable ignorance of the body is displayed on the bill when they were passing it. Probably there will be no difference of opinion on that point.

The act of 1884 provided for a new set of officers for the Territory of Alaska. Before that time we had but few civil officers there. I think we had a customs officer in Alaska who supervised the interests of the Government in the Territory to which my colleague refers; but less than a year ago we appointed a full corps of officers, a governor, judges, and marshals. We provided a set of territorial officers for Alaska, and now this resolution requires us to send a committee there to learn whether those officers are discharging their duties, and whether they understand anything about that country.

What interest is sought to be protected or looked after in this matter? Not the Indians, because the best Indians who live to-day under the American flag are the Indians in Alaska. They are very respectable Indians. At present they seem to be honest, they seem to be moral, they seem to be virtuous; and now this resolution proposes to surround them with I do not know exactly what sort of influences. Such a committee as is proposed here might be useful if it was suggested to go up into Alaska and undertake to trade powder and shot and shotguns and bad whisky for the Indian lands. That might do. That would be a sort of precursor of civilized and Christian legislation, but I do not understand that that is proposed in this matter.

Mr. MANDERSON. I suggest to my colleague that if such were the object of this inquiry it might be well to refer the resolution to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That would be a good place to refer it, but even the Public Lands Committee can not save the plunder of the lands that belong to the American citizen. The Public Lands Committee have been trying to stop the plunder of the public domain, but they have been unable to do it. When you have an administration and executive officers who will wantonly give away, as we saw them do a few weeks ago, 700,000 acres of the public domain, the Public Lands Committee of this Senate is only a slight barrier to that sort of robbery. You rob the public domain from the white men of this nation and your Public Lands Committee and an enlarged public sentiment can not check it.

I was only suggesting that if the object of some persons was to trade shot, powder, shotguns, and bad whisky for the Indian lands, then it might do to have this precursor go out of this body to pave the way. Is it any worse to steal from the Indians by a consideration of that kind than to rob the American citizen of his birthright in the public lands? Oh, no.

I do not know how far this proposed investigation is to go; neither do

I know whether the Committee on Territories or the gentlemen having charge of this resolution understand about what it will cost the Government. I know the question of expense is a very small matter to suggest in so dignified a body as this. I am aware of that. I do not know whether those persons have speculated upon the expense and considered how much it will cost the General Government.

We have been practicing sharp, shrewd devices to secure annual pay for clerks of committees that do not have anything to do. That is what we have been doing most of the time during this executive session. Committees which do not have anything to do during the session are very anxious to be clothed with authority to work during the recess, and those committees which labor very hard during the session and have annual clerks very seldom come here to ask for the privilege to sit during the recess. This goes a little further, it seems. We are not satisfied with scheming to make that class of committees annual, but we are going further, to create special committees, as we did a day or two ago on interstate commerce, when there are two or three committees already having charge of that business.

Now, the proposition is to raise a special committee to go to Alaska, the furthermost boundary of this Republic. We have no interest beyond it that we know of except in the North Pole, and that would be an elegant place to send a committee of this body if it would probably fare as Greely's expedition did. The North Pole would do, because there we should not be vexed with the Monroe doctrine. About the only spot on the earth where nations show a little civilized Christian deportment toward each other is the interest in the North Pole. But Alaska is just a few miles this side of the North Pole. It is probable an expedition to Alaska would be pleasanter than one to the North Pole.

If the Senate will excuse me for a few moments, I suppose they will agree with me that probably this expedition to Alaska would not be any less expensive than the commission to Central and South America. At the last Congress there was dovetailed into an appropriation bill a clause for the creation of a commission to the Central and South American countries. The attention of no one was called to it at the time. When it was suggested a few weeks ago to increase the compensation of one of the hardest worked and most faithful servants of this body who ever has been or ever will be in its employment, the Committee on Appropriations staggered over that proposition; there was not any law authorizing it; and yet turn to the act creating the Central and South American Commission. Without any law creating it, in the first place, the Committee on Appropriations added about half a dozen lines providing for the payment of three commissioners to be appointed by the President of the United States to visit the countries of Central and South America, and the compensation of the clerk and the item for expenditures was so large and liberal that it would include even the buying of the country when they got down there.

I suppose this expedition to Alaska can not be any more economically managed than the Central and South American Commission, and what do we find? I merely refer to this so that we may not have the lamentable ignorance which my colleague speaks about after we get through with it. That is all I desire. To be forewarned is to be forearmed, and if we know what it costs to send a commission to the Central and South American states, we may have approximately some idea as to what it would cost to send this expedition up toward the North Pole.

On the 7th of July, 1884, the act was approved by the President of the United States appointing the commission, and they were duly appointed. They were to roam, as those who are so disposed are to roam in this northern country for a little while. They probably did not report for duty, any of them, until October, and then what? The first thing done by the commission which was to go to the Central and South American states was to gallopade across the continent to San Francisco, and from San Francisco to the City of Mexico and from Mexico to New Orleans to witness the exposition and the carnival which was held at New Orleans. Then, about the 1st of January, they got ready to start and they went down to the Central and South American states, against which we partially declared war the other day. They reached there in January.

I should like to ask my colleague if he has any idea how much it cost to get the commission started. The act was liberal and generous, and provided $7,500 for each of those gentlemen. It did not say whether it was to be pay for four months, or one year, or ten years; that was not a matter of any moment; $7,500 was too small a matter for this grave and dignified body to consider! I suppose it was the pay annually. They went, it seems, to Mexico. We talk about our plain democratic notions in this country, and yet, would you believe it, this commission, which never had but two men and a boy with it—the president was never with it—this commission of two men and a boy started for San Francisco and Mexico, and the first thing they did was to hire a palace car at $35 a day. That was only for the car; they paid for their transportation besides; their provisions were furnished besides. A Pullman palace car for forty-one and one-half days at $35 per day cost $1,447.

There was lamentable ignorance in this body, I agree with my friend. There is not a Senator here who would believe it; and would you believe that the head of any Department of this Government would be guilty of putting his name to a ratification of such an infamous robbery as that? That is worse than the stealing of the public lands a good deal. Two men and a boy were carried across this continent in a Pullman palace car, and then when you look over the list which I had the opportunity of seeing this morning at the State Department it will be seen that there were supplies laid in at Kansas City, supplies laid in at San Francisco, supplies at New York. Besides all this, there was a cook on the Pullman palace car. Talk about plain democracy, where does royalty go beyond this? Did the Prince of Wales do any better? There were more than two men and a boy in the company of the Prince of Wales, but the Prince of Wales would not have aspired to anything higher. Do you have Government officers who will ratify such a bill and order it to be paid from the Treasury of the United States? Yet it is being done.

In Heaven's name there was a necessity for a change, was there not? If our friends on the other side do not do worse, there was necessity for a change when this robbery goes on day after day. We have men here in this Chamber who think that the highest privilege and the greatest enjoyment of an American citizen is to pay his last dollar in taxes to this Government. We are shrewd in devising ways to get the last dollar out of the poor fellows' pockets, and we are shrewd in devising ways how to spend it. We are just as shrewd in one as the other. Here is your royalty—$7,500 per year, and then you furnish two men and a boy with a palace car at $35 per day; and when you see the other items of the cook and the supplies laid in, that of course proves to be a very large item.

Since the Utah Commission explanation where "lager beer" and "wine" were boldly allowed, they have gotten now only to putting down "supplies." That includes liquids and solids both. If this special committee must go to Alaska it of course will include a good deal of bay rum and Florida water. That is necessary to perfume the concern! That would be itemized, I suppose.

I ask my friends on this side of the Chamber if we had not better stop? All we have left is just this little family circle here. The Democracy have got the other end of the Capitol and they have got the administration. All we have got is here. Let us husband our honesty and our reputation better than merely provide a few posts for men who are ready to step in and plunder the Treasury of the United States. My friend would not have believed it, but we have acted in lamentable ignorance, I suppose.

I need to say no more except that the commission appointed to go to South and Central America, as I said, gallopaded all through the country, first to Boston; I guess the boy went to Boston; I do not know; there is a charge there. Then, as I said, they took a palace car across to San Francisco; then down to Mexico; then to New Orleans; and about the 1st of January they got ready to start; and, would you believe it, from the 1st of October to the 1st of January the expenses of that commission were $6,000? A man who breaks into your house at night runs the risk of being caught or shot in the act. The man who breaks into your house is honorable compared with such robbery, because he takes his chance of life or the penitentiary in his hand. These other men do not do it. Armed with a mite of authority they step into the Treasury and rob it ad libitum. But is there no check? You have your sworn officers to protect the Treasury and to protect the people. This money is taken from the pockets of men who have hardly money sufficient to pay $2 for a night's sleep on board a Pullman car. Those are the men from whom you wring and extract the money which is given to pay the expenses to sustain an honest administration of the Government.

You crown these fellows with royalty, do you? Thirty-five dollars a day for a palace car for forty-one days, and then pay their fare besides, and pay the cook and pay for supplies. All this is done, and then you pay $7,500 annually to each man besides. Since they got there (for remember they are now down in Central America) we have no report of their expenses. Of course the expenses will be enormous there.

If this were a legislative session it would be well to stop this thing. I trust some gentleman on the other side will take interest enough to visit the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury and call their attention to the matter, so that they may not from this time on be participes criminis to these transactions.

There was a president of that commission appointed. I suppose he never left New York except to come to Washington. He did not even go to San Francisco, he did not even go to Mexico, he did not even go to New Orleans; yet on the 25th of February he received and took nearly $5,000 out of the Treasury—$4,679.16. The 16 cents were put on to show that the account was honest, of course. I say the president did not go into the Central or South American country. The papers said he did not, and if he did I suppose some gentleman of the Committee on Foreign Relations will know it and can correct me. The understanding was that he spent the winter hanging around Albany. I do not intimate anything unkind or unpleasant. Then the two men and the boy were hanging around lamp-posts—no, the exposition in New Orleans—till the 1st of January. But here are $5,000 taken out of the Treasury of the United States by a man who came no farther in the performance of his duty than the city of Washington.

Senators will excuse me from giving a further bill of particulars in this matter. I refer them to the State Department and the Treasury Department for the items. Here is this commission which cost us in salaries and expenses about $40,000 before they got ready to leave New Orleans. I merely refer to that incidentally. I wish the Senate to understand about what it will cost to get this special committee of five to Alaska. They probably can not charter a Pullman car all the way, but when they get to San Francisco they can charter a steamer, and so they will go.

If it is right for the commission to bear this expense it may be thought right for a committee of this body to bear it. Of course I do not say it would, but I desire to say this much to show the reckless, improvident, wicked, infamous waste of the money wrung from the people in the shape of taxes. I had a right to say this, and I had a right to appeal to my brethren here that we should stop this thing, and that we should commence the work of reform a little. Reform is not the proper word; let us commence to be honest. Therefore it was, so that hereafter some one might not rise and have to make the humiliating confession which my colleague did, that there was lamentable ignorance after the thing was all done. I wished to call the attention of the Senate at this time in advance to what probably and naturally would be an approximation of the expense of any committee of this kind to be appointed.

Mr. MANDERSON. Before asking for action on my motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Territories I wish to make one or two suggestions in reply to my colleague, not so much perhaps in reply as supplemental to his remarks.

I congratulate myself that the introduction of this resolution has afforded a text on which we have secured the discourse we have heard this morning. I certainly would be the last man in this body to pretend to defend any raid on the public Treasury such as my colleague has characterized as having been perpetrated by the commission of exploration to Central America; and I do not understand from my colleague that the action of that commission was in any way of such a character that any committee of this body or the Senate of the United States is responsible for it. This resolution that I have introduced is of the character that I have already stated. It is not the general resolution providing that a committee of this body may sit during the recess and employ a clerk and have its expenses paid, being privileged to sit anywhere within the United States for the purposes of its deliberations; but it has specific objects and purposes, and I submit to my colleague that if he had read the resolution (as I presume he has) he would admit that the labor devolved upon the proposed committee would be of such a character that they certainly would have no sinecure, but that active and vigorous efforts would be required at their hands to comply with its provisions.

I am not one of those who stand ready to condemn everything of this kind, and I do not stand here even to condemn the action of my colleague when he followed a few days ago in the line of precedent and, after effort made by him had failed to procure an annual clerk for the committee of which he is the chairman, he introduced a resolution that the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River be permitted to sit during the recess of Congress. I fear that my colleague has forgotten the fact that within a very few weeks a resolution was introduced by him and considered by the Senate and adopted by the Senate in the face of the fact avowed on the floor of the Senate that the purpose of the resolution was that the session clerk of my colleague's committee might be made an annual clerk through the means of the introduction and passage of this resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My colleague will allow me a moment just there.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have not forgotten it; I remember it quite well. As I stated here several times, the rule of this body should be to confine annual clerks to committees needing them, and not go beyond that, or to give them to all the standing committees of this body. That was my position, that the future rule should be that only the committees whose duties required an annual clerk should be allowed one; but this body had gone beyond that. The Committee on the Census, with nothing to do during the recess, the Committee on Private Land Claims, and some others had already been worked in, worked in as my colleague knows, by reason of certain positions of important members of this body, and then followed the other race, in which we all engaged. I say it should be one rule or the other. If the Senate made it a rule to confine annual clerks to the committees having duties, that would be one theory. If they went beyond that and gave to a half-dozen as a matter of favor an annual clerk when the duties of the committee did not require it, then it should extend to all the standing committees of this body. That was my position, and I desired to stand there. I would prefer that we should do it in a manly way, by resolution making them all annual, and not seek to do it in the way of subterfuge. That was my position on the matter, and that is where I stand to-day. When we got to that point and included nearly all those, then we went beyond it by the appointment of special committees, not only giving them clerks, but giving them stenographers and messengers, and the privilege to go where they please in the United States and entail as much expense as they choose on the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to call the attention of my colleague and the Senate to the peculiar character of this resolution. If it was for the purpose that my colleague states, it seems to me it would have been very easy for a gentleman with his knowledge of the English language and expert, as he is, in the use of words, to have drafted a resolution that would have reached the purpose that he designed; but this is the resolution presented by my colleague on the 2d of March, 1885, in the expiring hours of the administration that he says fortunately is just going out of power:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River be directed to prepare a detailed statement of the expenses of the improvements of the Mississippi River and its tributaries with a view to ascertain the amounts expended for purpose of commerce, the amount expended to protect the lands adjoining from the ravages of the rivers, to report the same to the Senate at the December session of Congress, and be authorized for that purpose to employ a clerk at the usual compensation until December 1, 1885, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

At the request of my colleague this resolution upon that day was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, was reported back favorably by that committee, and favorably acted upon by the Senate, and I can imagine that under it my colleague, with his clerk and perhaps two men and a boy in addition thereto, may be able to make a junketing expedition from the source to the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Mr. VAN WYCK. My colleague knows very well that that does not make any expense to the Government except the pay of the clerk.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, it does.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir; no expense except the pay of the clerk.

Mr. MANDERSON. Then I do not understand the force of the English language.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then the gentleman will have to confess to the lamentable ignorance he spoke of a while ago.

Mr. MANDERSON. The expenses of this committee for the purposes of this inquiry are to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate. I do not wish it to be understood that I would suppose for an instant that my colleague would make this the pretense of a pleasure excursion or the excuse for a junketing trip; I do not think he is much given to excursions of that character; but I submit to him that if he does not desire to be so judged he should not judge; and I submit to him further that it is at least discourteous in him to his colleagues in this body, to the Senators of the United States, to suppose that because they introduce resolutions of this character they propose to make them the pretense for a raid on the public Treasury. I do not believe that he would be guilty of such action, and it seems to me it is rather unbecoming in him to charge that his associates in this body would do it. Does my friend now understand the purport of my language?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do.

Mr. MANDERSON. So I submit, Mr. President, that in paying attention to the demands of gentlemen interested in this subject and introducing the resolution now before the Senate, I have simply been following in the line of precedent set very largely by my colleague the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That sometimes is the case. If I had refrained from placing the Committee on the Mississippi River Improvement, which is a standing committee of this body, on the same basis with other committees probably not so important, if I had refrained from taking what was said to be the sense of the Senate, I doubt very much whether it would have held my colleague in check—probably not.

It is strange that my colleague can not see the distinction. I endeavored to explain, and at the expense of repetition I will say again that we have standing committees of this body that have duties to perform which require diligent labor during all the session, and the work of some of them probably continues into the recess. Those committees have annual clerks. Besides them we have other committees that have but very little to do, which have grown up from the necessity of finding as many chairmanships as possible, and therefore it is there is but little for these committees to do.

I have often insisted that the proper way was that the employment of annual clerks should be confined to committees having duties to discharge which made it necessary; but the Senate saw fit to do differently, and in several cases, as was stated when the matter was discussed, clerks were appointed annually, or what was the same thing, continued during the recess to committees who had no duties to discharge substantially, and then it was proposed, and the struggle was made here, that all the standing committees should be entitled to annual clerks. That was the position. The Senate was disinclined to do all that in one general appropriation; but they allowed this to be done, that every standing committee should introduce a resolution, and that it should be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses and they should report affirmatively, and it should receive the approbation of the Senate, and that was done. It was done substantially to give a clerk to all, or nearly all, the standing committees not included in the appropriation bill. I think nearly all the standing committees are provided with annual clerks in this way; not the manly way of a vote to make them all annual, but by this subterfuge of introducing a resolution and having it referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses and reported favorably by the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and adopted by the body. That was the course pursued.

Mr. MANDERSON. My colleague will yield to me?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. Does he mean to say that the resolution presented by him and acted upon by the Senate was a mere subterfuge, that it was not intended to carry out the purpose for which it was apparently introduced?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It was intended to carry out that purpose undoubtedly; but it was done as the mode, the means whereby the clerk of a standing committee of this body should be made an annual clerk. That my colleague understands. That committee has a duty to discharge far more than some committees whose clerks are made annual. I think my colleague understands that precisely as well as I do.

That was the purpose of this system. It was to fasten the clerks of all the standing committees as annual clerks upon the pay-roll of the Senate. There may be a few exceptions; but as I say every standing committee that has asked to have a clerk appointed in that way has had the clerk appointed. That was one branch of the case. That did not seem to satisfy all the gentlemen in this body, and there must be special committees appointed, and hence it was they had a special committee on interstate commerce when there were already two or three committees having charge of that matter, and then it was that the resolution for the appointment of a special committee to visit Alaska was offered.

My friend says my remarks were discourteous. Certainly not. Are we not to be allowed to criticise ourselves? Are we not to be allowed to criticise ourselves or any department of this Government because by so doing we are liable to the charge of discourtesy?

Mr. MANDERSON. Will my colleague allow an interruption?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MANDERSON. I wish simply to state the fact that appears by the RECORD, that this resolution of mine was introduced during the closing hours of the Forty-eighth Congress when it was supposed there would be yet another day for its consideration, but owing to the continuance of the session during the last legislative day of the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress the resolution was not acted upon, and therefore it was again introduced at this special session. So it was not, as my friend suggests, that this resolution was an afterthought because of a desire to procure the services of a clerk or of a stenographer.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not know that this was intended solely for the purpose of having a clerk. I was drawn into that part of the discussion from allusion made to the standing committees of this body who had only per diem clerks during the session being allowed to sit during the recess. The fact is, as my colleague states, that the resolution was introduced in the last hours of the last session; but I was remarking that then we commenced to introduce resolutions for special committees when there were standing committees of this body delegated to that duty; and now it is asked that there be a special committee to go to the Territory of Alaska, when I will say to my friend that I understand that every Territorial officer of the Territory of Alaska is in the city of Washington to-day, or most of them are. I think the governor of Alaska is here to-day and has been here from the commencement of the last session.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is the question I was going to ask, if he had not been performing his Territorial duties as governor of that Territory in the city of Washington the whole of last winter?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I understand the governor of Alaska was here during all of the last session; this is not the seat of his government, I suppose; but this special committee is to transfer the seat of its operations to Alaska and the United States officers in Alaska desire to visit Washington, and they are here. All information can be gathered from them as to the condition of the Indian tribes, as to the condition of the seal fisheries, as to the condition of the Territory, and all obtained from the Territorial officers who are in this city to-day.

My friend was suggesting that my objection was discourteous. We are met with that everywhere. If we make an inquiry of an Executive Department, that is a discourtesy; and if we undertake to speak in the interest of fair play and common honesty and make a suggestion even in regard to ourselves, that is a discourtesy.

I undertook to illustrate, as I think I had a right to illustrate, the enormous expense of the commission to South America and Central America. I had no right to presume that this would be as costly, but I think the Senator does know, if he has had occasion to examine the list of traveling committees, the enormous amount that is drawn from the Treasury in carrying them on. It may be necessarily so. That, of course, I do not pretend to say.

Now, the Senate will excuse me. I have said all that is necessary, I think, on this matter of special committees, and all that is necessary on the matter of the examination of Alaska. If that is required, it is an easy thing to ask the Committee on Territories, a standing committee of this body, to be allowed to discharge that duty and obtain that information. My objection is to the appointment of a special committee, which will entail expense on this Government which might run up to the extent of the rapacity of the commission to the South American and Central American countries to which I have referred.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not rise for the purpose of prolonging this debate, but for the purpose of bringing it to an issue and carrying it to its legitimate end after what the Senate has listened to from the Senator from Nebraska, his earnest appeal in the interest of economy, with which I fully sympathize, and upon which I think I have preserved a better record than he has; for whereas he intimates that there was a general agreement among the chairmen of standing committees that, having failed those of them who asked of the Appropriations Committee to have their clerks made annual, they should seek to accomplish the same end by this method which he has himself characterized as a subterfuge, I want to say for one that I was not a party to any such agreement, that the Committee on Territories has never resorted to that subterfuge with a view of getting pay for its clerk during the vacation.

Let me add that this resolution was introduced without any consultation with me in the regular session of the Senate. As originally introduced it had no relation to the Committee on Territories whatever, but provided for the constituting of a special committee. I can only say for one that if a committee be sent, whether it be a special committee or whether it be constituted out of the Committee on Territories, I shall not be a member of it, that I shall not have the appointing power of any clerk or any usufruct from any clerk or any stenographer who may be appointed for it. Let me add further that I have not given the consent of my mind to the adoption of this resolution. I am not persuaded that it is essential. This simply by way of preface.

Now, Mr. President, if it be true, as the Senator from Nebraska has admitted, that he does not mean to call the Committee on the Mississippi River Improvement together during this coming vacation, that notwithstanding he has introduced and the Senate has passed a resolution committing to that committee the work of a certain investigation, he does not contemplate undertaking that investigation, that he does not propose to do that work or any part of it——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I did not say that. I said that no expense would be entailed by this committee except the appointment of a clerk; it has no power to meet anywhere in the United States that it may please.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator said more; he said it was a subterfuge with a view of getting a clerk. He so characterized his own resolution. Now, I want to say to the Senator who has appealed so justly in behalf of the people against any extravagant expenditure here that even that clerkship involves fifteen hundred or eighteen hundred dollars of the people's money, and by his own confession it has been accomplished here by a subterfuge. I am sure if he has been overpersuaded by others to going into any scheme of this kind he will be glad to be helped now to consummate this plea of his for economy by saving some money to the Treasury, because notwithstanding all he has said about the South American commission the Senate can do nothing about that. That commission went in pursuance of a law passed by both Houses. We have no power to audit their accounts. We may perhaps in the future be able to bring them to book if there has been an extravagant expenditure of the public money. But there is an opportunity here to take the Senator from Nebraska at his word and to save the Government the cost of a clerk to his committee during the vacation. I therefore offer and ask to have read for information a resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana propose an amendment to the pending resolution?

Mr. HARRISON. No; it is a resolution that I ask may be read for information at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate passed on the 4th day of March, 1885, authorizing the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River to sit during the vacation of the Senate and to make certain investigations therein named, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the reference——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is the reference of the pending resolution of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not propose to ask action on my resolution now; I simply wanted to say that when it can be reached I shall ask its reference to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, of which the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is chairman, and let him deal with it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed I made myself plain to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARRISON. Allow me to add one thing more.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. Two or three days ago, when the debate was on upon the resolution of the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] giving the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry leave to sit during the vacation and make certain inquiries and have a clerk, the Senator will recollect that I spoke against it and voted against it. I see he was recorded in favor of that proposition also.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was. Any other? No other resolution of that kind?

Mr. HARRISON. No. I suggest that when the Senator comes to consider my resolution in committee he can enlarge it so as to take in these others.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I supposed my friend from Indiana understood distinctly the history of what took place in the expiring hours of the Forty-eighth Congress and also the attitude of the question. My friend from Indiana, the chairman of the Committee on Territories, was engaged in this same raid to secure a clerk for his Committee on Territories. Am I right?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is right, in that the Committee on Territories introduced an amendment to an appropriation bill and referred it to the Committee on Appropriations, asking for an annual clerk; but the Committee on Appropriations did not allow it, and the Senate on the final vote did not allow it, and there the Committee on Territories stopped.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then the Committee on Territories started in this race, it seems, with the other committees of this body which had not an annual clerk, for the purpose of obtaining one. That was the attitude, I think, of all the standing committees of this body. They felt, and the Senator from Indiana felt, that he was unjustly dealt by, and so he was. He was chairman of an important committee of this body, far more important than some of those committees which were allowed annual clerks. There was far more necessity that his committee should have an annual clerk than many committees who were allowed one; and he was engaged in that race. So the gentleman from New York the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was also in that race, and so I think they all were. Then the chairman of the Committee on the Mississippi River Improvements modestly dropped in behind. There was force in that.

As I stated before, I have always insisted that the clerks of this body should be made annual clerks to committees that had work to do, or else all should be annual clerks. That is a plain proposition easily understood. When we examined we found the Committee on the Census, that never met, had an annual clerk; the Committee on Private Land Claims, that had but little to do, had an annual clerk; and was there any reason for that, and that the Committee on Territories should have none? No. There should have been a little honesty in this matter. So we insisted on making them all annual or restricting them to those actually necessary. That did not suit the views of the Senate. Their action was that they would not assume that attitude to make these committee clerks all annual; but it was suggested and acted upon that each committee should report a resolution for its committee and have it referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, and that that committee should report it back to the Senate; and the Senate adopted many of them in that way. That was the mode suggested, carried out, and acted upon by the body itself; and when the Senator from New York the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, at this session, adopted the same tactics, in saying a word upon that resolution I said, as I say now, that one or the other course should be adopted in a straightforward, manly way—restrict the clerks to necessary duties or give them to all the standing committees. I said then that inasmuch as the Senate had chosen to ratify this subterfuge to get rid of a vote that they should all be made annual clerks, and as one and another had dropped in in this way, since that had been adopted as the rule and practice of the Senate, I would vote to continue the clerk of the Committee on Agriculture. I voted that that committee should be included, and I am ready now to vote an annual clerk to every standing committee of this body, or if the Senate think what they should think, that the other is the proper solution, restrict them only to those committees that have duties to perform.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to become a participant in the very interesting domestic discussion which has been going on upon the other side of this Chamber, and of which I have been an interested auditor; but I must be permitted to observe that it seems to me the Senator from Nebraska who has last spoken is very much in the condition of that dutiful young gentleman who was found to have participated in the murder of his own father, and who gave as an excuse that he saw that the old man was about to be beaten to death, and as he could not help it, he thought he would hit him a lick himself to put him out of his misery. The Senator from Nebraska it seems is chairman of a committee that never meets, that we all know is utterly unnecessary, and he thinks that its arduous duties demand the services of an annual clerk. I leave him to settle that question with the principle of reform which he upholds so often on this floor.

But I rose, sir, for a different purpose. The Senator from Nebraska, in his general raid upon the subject of reform, has seen proper to make an attack personal in its character upon the gentlemen composing the South American and Central American Commission. Mr. President, for twenty-five years I have been the intimate personal friend of one of the gentlemen upon that commission. I know him as well as I know any human being in this world. He has filled nearly every important position in the State of Missouri. His record, public and private, is as stainless and without reproach as that of any public man could possibly be. The man who charges in my presence that Thomas C. Reynolds has ever been extravagant or otherwise taken one cent of the people's money makes a statement which I contradict absolutely, positively, and unequivocally.

Sir, I have not been to the Secretary of State or to the Treasury Department to examine the accounts of the commission; but I undertake to say in advance (and I challenge the Senator from Nebraska to the issue) that those accounts will not put one stigma upon the character of Governor Reynolds. If he went to the City of Mexico in a palace car, he went as he thought a representative of this Government should go, and as a gentleman occupying that position should go. He did not go in a palace car with any idea of putting on any token of royalty, or of squandering the people's money, wrung, as the Senator says, from them by taxation. He went to the City of Mexico, as I know, under the orders of the Secretary of State. He came back to the city of New Orleans under the orders of the State Department for the purpose of interviewing the representatives from the Central American and South American states who were attending the great exposition. He has performed his duties honestly and faithfully, as he has performed every other duty public and private during his long and successful career. His report is before the Senate. It is the report of a statesman, of a gentleman, of a scholar, of a man who is worthy to fill any position in this Republic. I received from him only two days ago a letter from San José, in Costa Rica, where in the midst of a foreign people, confronted by disease, he was traveling over the mountains on mules for the purpose of discharging this mission. He is there to-day discharging the delicate functions imposed upon him in a manner so satisfactory that the new Secretary of State told me not forty-eight hours ago that he regarded him as one of the best officers in the service of the Government. And I desire to say now that when those accounts are examined it will be found that not one cent has been appropriated to any selfish purpose on the part of Governor Reynolds. He is one of that commission.

The Senator speaks of two men and a boy. The "boy" is nearly fifty years old, and has been the editor of one of the leading Republican papers in the city of Chicago and is the secretary of that commission, a gentleman who has rendered distinguished service, political and otherwise, in this country. The imagination of the Senator from Nebraska changes him into a "boy."

Governor Reynolds was a lawyer in full practice in the city of Saint Louis. He received at the hands of the Secretary of State or the President this appointment with a salary of $7,500 a year. The money which he receives could have been no inducement. He took with him upon this trip when he started out a member of his family, very dear to him, whose health was impaired, and who is now in the city of Baltimore in a condition which will necessitate his immediate return to the United States. I challenge the Senator from Nebraska to go into these accounts after Governor Reynolds returns here and place before the people of the United States the truth or the falsity of the statements he has made here to-day. All I desire to say in advance, in defense of this gentleman, my friend, my constituent, is that he seeks no concealment and asks the fullest investigation.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I regret that anything further is necessary to be said on this matter, but it would seem so from the earnest remarks made by the Senator from Missouri. I presume he is the only member of this body who could have supposed that there was any intention of making any reflection personally upon the gentleman the Senator speaks of.

Mr. VEST. I do not wish to do the Senator any injustice. I did speak earnestly. I ask the Senate now to decide this issue between us. The Senator from Nebraska said that men who would thus expend the public money were worse than men who would break into a house, or words to that effect, because, as he said, the burglar might be put in the penitentiary, while these men would escape probably.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes; I said that about this commission. I do not think I shall have any occasion to take it back, even when his friend Mr. Reynolds gets into the United States again. He can convey that to his friend Reynolds, that I do not think I shall be required to take it back.

Mr. VEST. This is no place for threats. I made none.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, sir. The threat came from the Senator from Missouri when he said that when his friend came back then I would hear as to the truth or falsity of these charges. The threat came from there.

Mr. VEST. And I repeat it.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well. The gentleman talks about threats. I say I am ready when his friend from Missouri comes back to the United States, and I will have no occasion to take that remark back which he has repeated.

I have not a word to say about his friend from Missouri. I do not know anything about him. That was not the matter with me. I was talking about the commission. His friend from Missouri was appointed one of a commission to visit the Central American states. That was the object. They go to San Francisco, they go to Mexico, and now I say to my friend that they were not going there particularly with the robes of royalty about them; I do not suppose they even went to San Francisco or Mexico with the American flag wrapped about them; but there is no telling what this may be when they get to the states to which they are accredited from this Government—the Central American states—but I say to my friend, and he will agree with me, that when this commission traveled from New York city to San Francisco and hired a palace car at $35 a day they did what there was no justification for in the mind of the American people. He knows it, and he believes as an honest reform Dem ocrat that any individual who discharges his trust and performs his duty, who makes an expenditure beyond what he would do in his own pursuits in life, is not administering his trust faithfully, to say the least. Mr. Reynolds and the other commissioner and the man fifty years old who went with them, had they been going on their own business, however important, to San Francisco or Mexico, would never have hired a palace car at $35 a day—never, never! Now what justification can there be for that? Tell me! tell me!

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is a curious subject. I should like to know whether the Senator has, I was going to say groveled, I will say examined, so far into these accounts as to know whether this may not cover the subsistence, the commissary bills, and the railway transportation. Does he know all about the details of this transaction, know so much as to justify him in attacking the honor of these gentlemen, saying that here is an infamous outrage, in addition to the other language repeated by the Senator from Missouri? If he is going on in this way exposing to the whole public of the United States, making present to the whole public of the United States the bitterest, fiercest attacks on the common integrity and honor of gentlemen who have always stood as high as he can ever hope to stand, I hope that he will be able to show that he does it on decent evidence.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have groveled through this, I will say to my friend——

Mr. HAWLEY. Likely.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suppose he understands the force of words when I say I have groveled far enough to understand the suggestions he has made. Here was this palace car—I was replying to my friend from Missouri—forty-one and a half days at $35 a day for three men; if you please, $1,447. I will say to my friend from Connecticut that the accounts still further show charges for supplies laid in at Kansas City, at San Francisco, pay to the cook on the palace car, pay for the tickets, and I will say to my friend he will find included in these accounts—they are all there and they foot up $6,000 and upward for one quarter's expenses merely—$6,000 for three men from October to January, and at that time they had not left this country!

Is a man to be arraigned, and all sorts of threats and denunciations made against him, for making a statement of figures which appear in the Treasury Department and in the State Department in regard to this matter? These facts are there; these statements are true, and will Senators undertake to justify and defend them? On what pretense? How would you characterize such charges except in the manner stated by me? The only wonder is that there are any officers connected with this Government who would pass approvingly accounts like these. That is the wonder.

Now, Mr. President, I have answered the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut; these figures show just as I have stated here precisely; and I have answered the Senator from Missouri, who seems to regard the charge against this commission as a personal statement against his friend upon it. I stated the facts and characterized them strongly perhaps, as I thought the facts would abundantly justify.

Mr. MILLER, of California. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not wish to speak on that question. I wanted to make a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but I will not make it just now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to refer.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON MISSISSIPPI RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the Senator from California makes his motion I wish to offer a resolution which I have submitted to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator excuse the Chair for calling attention to a resolution offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is to be referred.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I ask that that resolution be referred.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution of the Senator from Indiana will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. It can come up to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it lie on the table to-day.

Mr. VEST. Let the resolution be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution of Mr. HARRISON, as follows:

Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate passed on the 4th of March, 1885, authorizing the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River to sit during the vacation of the Senate and to make certain investigations therein named be, and the same is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think that had better lie on the table. The Senator from Indiana is not present.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Indiana asked that it be referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

Mr. SHERMAN. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is moved to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River.

The motion was agreed to.

DIGEST OF ELECTION CASES.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now I ask for the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the Committee on Privileges and Elections eighteen copies of the digest of the contested-election cases of the Senate, ordered to be prepared under a resolution which passed the Senate February 26, 1885.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to hear some explanation of that.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], chairman of the committee, when he left supposed that the Committee on Privileges and Elections had the power in its own right to order the printing of these copies, the Senate having already ordered the preparation of this digest, and he went away with that impression; but I hold in my hand a letter of the Public Printer, who says that the Committee on Privileges and Elections has not that right, although some other committees, like the Committee on Finance, have. He asks, therefore, to protect him in the execution of the order given by the chairman, that the Senate pass this resolution allowing eighteen copies for the committee, two for each member.

Mr. DAWES. Is that a digest to be prepared or the old digest?

Mr. SHERMAN. The digest the committee are ordered to prepare. It has to be revised, and it is supposed each member of the committee should have a chance of suggesting revisions. These are to be mere proof copies.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution the question is on its adoption.

The resolution was agreed to.

TELEGRAPH CONTRACTS.

Mr. GORMAN. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed, in addition to the information furnished for the Senate on the 3d of March instant, to furnish the Senate with copies of the contract entered into between the Union Pacific Railroad Company and other railroad companies affected by the act approved July 1, 1862, and the Western Union Telegraph Company, together with all statements now on file in his Department touching the same.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE] yesterday, which will be read.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. I do not think we can dispose of that resolution this morning. It will lead to discussion; and I insist on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator from California will give way long enough to let the resolution which I offered yesterday by direction of the Committee on Coast Defenses be considered. I think it will take less time to consider it to-day than it will to-morrow, for we have already had an hour and a half's discussion on the general subject, and I apprehend we can dispose of the resolution in a few minutes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from California withdraw his motion?

Mr. MILLER, of California. I do not like to be discourteous, but there is some executive business which it was agreed by Senators should be taken up to-day, and it will require some time to dispose of it. I do not think this is a good time for the Senator from Oregon to bring forward his resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and forty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

CLERKS TO STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That so much of the several resolutions of the Senate passed since the 1st day of March instant as provides for a clerk for any standing committee of the Senate during the recess of Congress be, and is hereby, rescinded.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

MONDAY, March 23, 1885.

The Senate met at 10 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS, it was Ordered, That the Committee on the Judiciary have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by him on the 19th instant, directing the compilation of the laws relating to the allowance of private claims, reported it with an amendment, to strike out all after the word "Resolved" and insert:

That the Committee on Claims be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to compile the existing laws relating to the presentation, consideration, and allowance of private claims against the United States, and to digest in brief form the judicial decisions and legislative precedents relating to the same, and that the necessary expense is hereby appropriated, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate under the direction of the said committee.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate cause to be prepared an alphabetical list of all private claims which have been before the Senate, with the action of the Senate thereon, since the close of the Forty-sixth Congress.

Resolved, That 500 copies each of the digest and list hereinbefore mentioned be printed for the use of the Senate.

COLUMBIA INSTITUTE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. JACKSON a director of the Columbia Institute for the Deaf and Dumb to fill the vacancy in the board of directors occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Bayard.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. MORRILL to fill the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution occasioned by the expiration of his term of service.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. CULLOM to fill the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution occasioned by the expiration of the term of Mr. Hill.

INTERSTATE-COMMERCE COMMITTEE.

On motion of Mr. DAWES, it was Ordered, That Mr. HOAR be excused from service as a member of the select committee on the subject of interstate commerce.

Whereupon,

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. PLATT to fill the vacancy occasioned thereby.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After six hours and thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

Mr. TELLER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

TUESDAY, March 24, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. W. I. MCKENNEY, of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

OBSTRUCTION OF ARKANSAS RIVER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 25th ultimo, a report of the Chief of Engineers relative to the prevention of obstruction to navigation through the draw of the railroad bridge across the Arkansas River at Rob Roy, Ark.; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of Arizona Territory; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

Memorial in reference to certain lands in Arizona Territory.

Whereas immense tracts of land in this Territory are now owned or claimed by a few railroad companies under grants from Congress; that such lands comprise a very considerable portion of the agricultural lands of our Territory; that the holding of a claim to such large tracts of land by a few persons has proved very disastrous to the interests of our citizens, by preventing the development of our resources and the settlement of our Territory; Therefore,

Be it resolved, That Congress is earnestly requested to order the said land, particularly that part now claimed by the Southern Pacific Railroad Company, to be restored, as soon as practicable, to settlement by pre-emption, homestead, &c.

On behalf of the citizens of this Territory we ask that Congress will not permit the present session to pass without granting us the relief so earnestly desired.

Resolved, That the governor of this Territory be respectfully requested to forward this memorial to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to our Delegate in Congress at Washington at his earliest convenience.

H. G. ROLLINS,
Speaker House of Representatives.
F. K. AINSWORTH,
President of Council.

Approved February 6, 1885.

F. A. TRITLE, Governor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Legislature of Arizona Territory; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Memorial petitioning Congress for further protection of the border between this Territory and the states of Sonora and Chihuahua, in Mexico.

Whereas the southern portion of the Territory of Arizona borders upon the states of Sonora and Chihuahua, in Mexico; and

Whereas a large portion of the criminal element of said Territory frequent and commit depredations along the said border, owing to the protection from punishment afforded them, from the fact that criminals after commission of crime can seek immunity from said punishment by crossing said border into Mexico; and

Whereas the treaty relations between our Government and that of Mexico are deficient, in so far that a large portion of our criminals are not subject to extradition, and owing to the difficulties and delay of extradition in such cases where said treaty relations admit of such extradition; and

Whereas there have been and are now bands of men organized for the purpose of stealing cattle in our country to be disposed of in another, which stealing has assumed such alarming proportions as to seriously threaten the financial welfare of the stock-raisers along the border: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved, That Congress is hereby memorialized to pass an act creating a mounted patrol, to patrol the border between this Territory and the states of Sonora and Chihuahua, in Mexico, for the apprehension of criminals from either country committing depredations in this Territory, or creating a large re-enforcement of the custom-house guard, with authority to arrest said criminals; and that the treaty relations between our Government and that of Mexico be modified in such a manner as will provide for greater security to residents near the border and reduce the difficulties and delays of extradition; and

Be it further resolved, That the governor of this Territory forward copies of this memorial, certified to under the seal of the Territory, to our Delegate in Congress, the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives for proper presentation to the Congress of the United States.

H. G. ROLLINS,
Speaker House of Representatives.
F. K. AINSWORTH,

Approved March 9, A. D. 1885.

F. A. TRITLE, Governor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair presents a petition of the Legislature of Arizona Territory, praying that General Ulysses S. Grant be placed on the retired-list. The petition will lie upon the table, inasmuch as that subject has been acted upon by Congress, and requires no further action, the Chair supposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] is absent attending the obsequies of a relative, and I ask that he be granted an indefinite leave of absence.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That leave will be granted unless there be objection. The Chair hears none.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator will give way a moment that I may have an order entered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. MILLER, of New York. Certainly.

On motion of Mr. DOLPH, it was Ordered, That Maj. Theodore J. Eckerson have leave to withdraw from the files of the Senate his petition and other papers in his case, subject to the rules of the Senate.

COMMITTEE ON COAST DEFENSES.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator from New York will also give way for the consideration of the resolution which I offered on the 19th instant, which was reported from the Committee on Coast Defenses. It has gone to the Calendar, and can be taken up only on motion, as I understand. I have not had an opportunity to call it up. If it leads to protracted discussion I shall not object to a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business at any time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the resolution for information.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I have no doubt the resolution referred to would lead to discussion. I renew my motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five hours and thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

COMMITTTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MILLER, of California, on his own motion, was excused from further service as a member of the Select Committee to Inquire as to the Capacity of Steel-Producing Works in the United States.

NAVAL ACADEMY VISITORS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. VOORHEES and Mr. SPOONER members of the Board of Visitors on the part of the Senate to attend the next annual examination of cadets at the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., under the requirement of the act of February 14, 1879.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the credentials of James H. Berry, chosen by the Legislature of Arkansas a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Augustus H. Garland in the term ending March 3, 1889.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, March 25, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM ARKANSAS.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I rise to a question of privilege. I ask that the Senator-elect from Arkansas, James H. Berry, who is now present, may be sworn in.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator-elect will come forward and take the oath of office.

Mr. BERRY was escorted to the Vice-President's desk by Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. RANSOM, on his own motion, was excused from further service upon the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

On motion of Mr. COCKRELL, and by unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Vice-President be authorized to fill the vacancies on the several committees.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four hours spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, March 26, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

MEMORIAL.

Mr. FAIR presented a memorial and joint resolution of the Legislature of Nevada; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

Assembly memorial and joint resolution relative to a school for the Indian youth of Nevada.

Whereas large sums of money are annually appropriated by the United States Government to give the Indian youth literary and industrial training, such as is given at the schools of Carlisle, Hampton, Genoa, Forest Grove, and Albuquerque; and

Whereas there are in the State of Nevada about seven hundred Indian youth, between the ages of 6 and 16, and without the educational advantages afforded to such children in other States: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That our Senators and Representative in Congress be requested to use every honorable effort to secure from the General Government an appropriation of $10,000 for the erection of a school building in some suitable place in Nevada, and a further appropriation of $17,500 annually for each one hundred children in attendance, for the necessary expenses in conducting the literary and industrial departments of said school.

Passed March 5, 1885.

STATE OF NEVADA,
Department of State, ss:

I, John M. Dormer, secretary of state of the State of Nevada, do hereby certify that the annexed is a true, full, and correct copy of the original resolution relative to a school for the Indian youth of Nevada, as the same appears on file in my office.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of State. Done at office in Carson City, Nev., this 10th day of March, A. D. 1885.

[SEAL.] JOHN M. DORMER,
Secretary of State.
By WELLS DENNY,
Deputy.

ELECTRIC LIGHT FOR SENATE CHAMBER.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, who were instructed by a resolution of the 11th instant "to inquire into the expediency of lighting the Senate Chamber by the electric process, the probable cost of the change, with the comparative cost of maintaining the same," submitted a report thereon, which was ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MILLER, of California. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and thirty-eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT, in pursuance of the order of yesterday authorizing him to fill the vacancies on certain committees, appointed Mr. GRAY to fill the vacancies upon the Committee on Claims, the Committee to Examine the Several Branches of the Civil Service, the Committee on Fisheries, and the Committee on Patents; Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, to fill the vacancies upon the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, and the Select Committee to Inquire into all Claims of Citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua; Mr. BERRY to fill the vacancies upon the Committees on Civil Service and Retrenchment, the Committee on Public Lands, the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, and the Select Committee to make provision for taking the Tenth Census and ascertaining the results thereof; and Mr. BUTLER to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution submitted by him on the 19th instant:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed by the Chair to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, unless he may have some further communication to make, the Senate is ready to adjourn without day.

The resolution was agreed to; and Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. BECK were appointed the committee.

ROOMS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to offer a resolution, and after a brief explanation I shall ask unanimous consent to have it considered now. If there is objection, of course I shall not press it to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the following resolution, adopted by the Senate July 5, 1884, "Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Architect of the Capitol be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to rent and prepare suitable rooms outside of the Capitol for the use at the next session of Congress of such Senate committees as have no rooms, and that all expenses hereunder be paid out of the fund for the contingent expenses of the Senate, subject to the approval of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate," be, and is hereby, rescinded, to take effect on the adjournment of the present session of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state briefly to the Senate that under the resolution of last year a house was rented for the use of Senate committees which has proved to be inconvenient for that use, and it is deemed necessary to pass this resolution at this session in order that no arrangements may be made for the use of the building at the next session. Unless there is objection I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent of the Senate given to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CALL. I object to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being objection the resolution will lie over and be printed.

SENATE EMPLOYÉS AND EXPENSES.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer another resolution, and I shall ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. If there is objection it may lie over with the other.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators be appointed, with leave to sit during the recess of the Senate, to carefully examine and report on the first day of the next session, by bill or otherwise, what reduction should be made in the number and compensation of the employés of the Senate, and any further provisions that may be expedient to control and regulate the disbursement of the contingent expenses of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is unanimous consent given to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if there is not a committee now upon that subject, a regular standing committee, the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. There is a standing committee known as the Committee on Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but I suppose that is rather an auditing committee than a committee that can go into the whole question of the expenditures of the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I am heartily in sympathy with the object of the resolution, and I shall vote for it if it is thought necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. VOORHEES. Let it go over until to-morrow. I object to it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made the resolution will lie over.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. MAXEY, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of C. M. Wilcox be withdrawn from the files, subject to the rules of the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

FRIDAY, March 27, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that unless he may have some further communication to make the Senate is ready to adjourn without day, reported that the committee had performed the duty assigned them and that the President had replied that, if agreeable to the Senate, he would ask it to remain in session until Thursday next.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned to Monday, March 30.

MONDAY, March 30, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.
The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Before that motion is put I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield for a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must insist, Mr. President, in the state of the public business.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Public——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont insists on his motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. Execute the order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will clear the galleries and close the doors.

The Senate thereupon proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, and by unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to fill the vacancy on the Select Committee to Inquire as to the Capacity of Steel-Producing Works in the United States; and Mr. SEWELL was appointed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

TUESDAY, March 31, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator withhold that motion for a few moments so that I may make a report from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River?

Mr. CAMERON. No; I insist on my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania insists on the motion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to state to the Senate——

Mr. CAMERON. The motion is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is not debatable. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ROOMS FOR COMMITTEES.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate the resolution submitted by me on the 26th instant in regard to rooms for Senate committees.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution heretofore submitted by the Senator from Iowa, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the following resolution, adopted by the Senate July 5, 1884, "Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Architect of the Capitol be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to rent and prepare suitable rooms outside of the Capitol for the use at the next session of Congress of such Senate committees as have no rooms, and that all expenses hereunder be paid out of the fund for the contingent expenses of the Senate, subject to the approval of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate," be, and is hereby, rescinded, to take effect on the adjournment of the present session of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I shall make no objection to the repeal of the resolution of July 5, 1884, but I have the courage to say that for six years I have been in the Senate without a place, except such as I procured at the hotel where I have lived, for the papers, the documents, and the books which it is necessary to consult in regard to the public business of the Senate, and that in my judgment it is no respect to the people of this country or to the success of popular institutions that the proper facilities for study and investigation should not be allowed to Senators.

The disposition which seems to exist to make political capital on one side or the other of the expenses of the Senate, in my judgment, is a great mistake. The people of this country expect of those whom they send here such intelligent and wise legislation as will benefit the great mass of the people—as will enable them to earn bread and clothing for their families and will give them comfort and contentment. The failure to perform these duties will cost not millions but thousands of millions, and will increase the want, discomfort, and penury which now exist much too largely among the laboring people, the wage-earners of the country, who constitute the great body of the people. The important duties of Congress can not be performed without intelligent assistance, without proper facilities for study and a place where business may be done.

I think that every Senator ought to have some place provided by the public where his papers can be kept, his correspondence carried on, and where he can have some privacy for study and investigation. I know that during the past six years, until there were some rooms provided outside of this Capitol, I had no place, and many other Senators had no places where they could write or study. I think that the Senate ought to provide some conveniences for Senators who have to live upon their salaries, who are unable, not having large fortunes, to provide themselves with suitable accommodations, and have to live upon what the public provides for them. I do not believe that the business of the country can be properly conducted unless there are some facilities provided for Senators to carry on their correspondence, some place where their books and papers can be kept outside of their rooms at the hotels which they may have for their personal accommodation. The people, in my judgment, do not desire this. Their interest requires that Senators should not only attend to the debates of the Senate, but should devote their time to the study and investigation of important public questions, of great policies of state, which affect the great body of the people in their homes, their families, their comfort. They expect Senators and members of Congress to answer a large correspondence, and to attend to their interests before the Departments.

I desire to say further that there are many Senators here who are chairmen of committees who have convenient accommodation provided for them, who have rooms which are in every respect all that they desire, while there is a large proportion of Senators who have no such conveniences. If we shall adopt the policy that Senators shall have no other convenience at the public expense than a desk in the Senate Chamber, no place for study or books, no clerks, no assistance in correspondence or attending to business of their people in the Departments, but shall support their families and pay all this expense out of their salaries, we in effect adopt a policy that no poor man shall be a Senator, but that this body shall be composed of millionaires.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

SENATE EMPLOYÉS AND EXPENSES.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senate to take up the resolution offered by me on the 26th instant in regard to Senate employés and expenses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators be appointed, with leave to sit during the recess of the Senate, to carefully examine and report on the first day of the next session, by bill or otherwise, what reduction should be made in the number and compensation of the employés of the Senate, and any further provisions that may be expedient to control and regulate the disbursement of the contingent expenses of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Before the resolution is adopted, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa the probable expense of the proposed committee. The Senate has been engaged for some time in wrestling with that proposition with a view of reducing, limiting, and cutting off expenses of that kind, and preventing the continuation of the duties of committees. While we are engaged in that work it would seem ill advised probably that another committee should be appointed, a special committee, unless we are fully apprised not only as to the object of the proposed committee, which is expressed in the body of the resolution, but as to the probable cost.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that it is not intended or expected that this committee will cost the Senate anything. It is understood that the work will be done without cost to the Senate.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is satisfactory.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no provision in the resolution, as the Senator will see, for a clerk, a stenographer, or any expense whatever.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I discovered that in the resolution there were no allusions to that; but when the committee sits, if it shall find it necessary to have a clerk, or a stenographer, or a messenger, after having employed such assistance and discharged the duty required, the committee may come in at the next session and state then that it found it important to have assistance, and therefore the expense would still be fastened upon the Treasury. Therefore I desired in advance to have a statement from the Senator from Iowa that there was to be no expense upon the contingent fund or upon the Treasury in any way.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not my purpose to be considered in any way as a member of this committee, but it should be the distinct understanding of the Senate and among Senators that the force which we have now already in employ in the Senate will be able to perform all the clerical work required. The regular force of the Senate will furnish the necessary information to the committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. At an early part of this called session I submitted a resolution which proposed to rescind all the resolutions which had been passed since the 1st of March in respect to clerks for committees to go around making examinations upon different subjects-matter. I did that not so much for the small amount involved in the cost of those clerks as to arrest the attention of the Senate to what I regard as a growing evil in the Senate caused by the increase in the number of employés of various kinds for several years past, which has been authorized by the Senate, and the very large increase of our contingent expenses. I thought under the circumstances the authority given to sit during the recess to committees having but little business to do, merely or obviously for the purpose, or at least with the effect, of giving those committees clerks during the recess, was one of those cases which demanded attention from the Senate in order that a totally unnecessary expense should be arrested.

I am perfectly willing, however, to waive the consideration of that resolution if the committee proposed to be appointed under the pending resolution will take up that subject and consider the matter, not in a penurious way but in a liberal way. I do not wish to see the expenses of the Senate of the United States curbed, cabined, and cribbed merely for the sake of parsimony, or as I may say for the sake of demagogism. I think it is the cheapest kind of demagogy, but at the same time the Senate of the United States like all other legislative bodies should be reasonably considerate of the money of the people, and the money should not be expended even by so dignified a body as the Senate of the United States except for proper purposes and in proper amounts.

I believe that this committee properly organized, making a careful review of the contingent expenses of the Senate, the number of our employés and the salaries paid to them, will be able largely to reduce the number and amount of both, so that we may bring back the expenses of the Senate to something like their normal condition of a few years ago when they amounted to probably one-half what they do now.

I therefore accept the resolution offered by the Senator from Iowa as the best solution of the question. I hope that during the coming recess the committee will be able in good faith, strictly pursuing their duty, to investigate and to report to us such measure as will make the expenses of the Senate conform to what is a reasonably fair business allowance for the expenses of this body.

Mr. PLUMB. While this debate is going on in a sort of desultory way, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that another legislative body has been doing something in this line as well. As the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill passed the House at the last session, it contained a paragraph providing for the constitution of a committee of five persons who should be members-elect of the Forty-ninth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. I will read the entire provision so that its whole scope may be seen:

That a committee consisting of five members-elect to the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress, shall, prior to the first Monday of December next, inquire into and investigate the expenditure of appropriations for Indians, under treaty, for their support, for their education, or otherwise, and whether any changes should be made in said appropriations or their expenditure. Said committee shall also inquire into the expenditure of public money for the Yellowstone Park and the administration of the laws applicable to said park, whether any change should be made in said laws or the boundary of the park, and what steps, if any, can be taken to make of practical benefit and utility that portion of the public domain. That said committee shall have power to appoint subcommittees and visit the places where appropriations mentioned herein are expended, and in doing so they are authorized to use Government conveyances and means of transportation. Said committee or any subcommittee thereof shall have power to send for persons and papers and to appoint a clerk, and the committee may report by bill or otherwise to the Forty-ninth Congress. A sum sufficient to pay expenses of said committee hereby authorized, and of witnesses that may be summoned before it, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which shall be immediately available and payable on the draft of the chairman of said committee in sums not exceeding $1,000 at any one time.

I think the Senate in all its extravagance, whatever that may have been, never sent abroad quite so wide a scoop-net as that in the shape of a junketing or investigating committee. This committee is authorized to go all over the United States wherever money is spent for Indian schools or wherever its members may seek to go, in the Yellowstone Park, or where anything relating to the Yellowstone Park may lead them to go, and they are not even required to make a report. They "may report" to the Forty-ninth Congress "by bill or otherwise," but they are not required so to do. I wish to call special attention to the last part of the paragraph, which provides that the "expenses of said committee" and "of witnesses that may be summoned before it" shall be paid—

Out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated * * * on the draft of the chairman of said committee in sums not exceeding $1,000 at any one time.

If that is not "straining at a gate and swallowing a saw-mill" then I have never known the force of that expression. A draft may be drawn every minute of every day for a thousand dollars, but no one draft shall embrace more than $1,000. Whatever guarantee of economy there may be in that, we shall see the result of when the committee comes to make its report, if it ever does report.

Mr. HALE. I did not notice. Is the draft to be made upon the contingent fund of the House?

Mr. PLUMB. No; I was about to call attention to the fact that the money is to be drawn from the Treasury of the United States. There is no limit as to the amount which shall be drawn except the amount which may be in the Treasury of the United States subject to be appropriated by Congress. It is not drawn upon the contingent fund of the House as a limit; it is not drawn subject to the scrutiny of the officers of the House, who would have some reference, of course, to the condition of that fund in approving accounts, but it is a general run and jump at the Treasury of the United States, only limited to the one condition that no single draft shall be issued for more than $1,000.

I understand that that committee having been constituted by the Speaker acting under this provision of law have already arranged to go to Alaska. We have heard a good deal about the use of cutters, &c., in getting down to Fortress Monroe and going up and down the Atlantic coast, and so on, but I understand the House committee thus provided for have already chartered a revenue-cutter to take them from San Francisco to Alaska. Of course from that very elevated position they can have a very good view, so far as the human eyesight can extend, over the Indian schools and the Yellowstone Park.

That provision was incorporated in the bill as it came from the House. As Senators will see by looking at the Senate print of the bill, the Senate Committee on Appropriations recommended that it be stricken out, and the Senate by a vote struck it out; but when it came into conference the conferees on the part of the House insisted so strenuously that they should have this little privilege of getting a jump at the Treasury that in the closing hours of the session, which was bound to expire by law at 12 o'clock on the 4th day of March, and as a tub to the whale, as one of the means of preventing that which seemed to be inevitably impending, an extra session of Congress with all that that meant adverse to the business interests of the people of the United States, the Senate conferees in that case, as in many others, against their former judgment and against the expressed wish of the Senate, yielded; and so the House has got its junketing commission in this shape and with this great scope before them in regard to what they may do and in regard to the expenditure of public money.

But, Mr. President, that is not all. When what is known as the fortification appropriation bill came to the Senate it contained a provision that—

The President of the United States shall appoint a board, of which the Secretary of War shall be a member and president, to be composed of two officers of the Engineer Corps, two from the Ordnance Corps, two of the Artillery corps of the Army, and two officers of the line of the Navy, which board shall examine and report at what ports fortifications or other defenses are most urgently required, the character and kind of defenses best adapted for each, with reference to armament, the utilization of torpedoes, mines, or other defensive appliances—

And for that purpose there was appropriated the sum of $300,000.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, by the bill as it passed the House?

Mr. PLUMB. By the bill as it came from the House. It was not an ordinary sum of $10,000, $15,000 or $20,000, the expenditure of which we characterize in our criticism upon the acts of our own committees as extravagant, but the sum of $300,000. Not only that, but it was an expenditure of this sum of money to cover ground which had been gone over carefully, critically, and painfully for years and years by various boards heretofore organized; and this board could do nothing but duplicate the work of those that had gone before.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations took that question up. They changed the constitution of the board to some extent, having understood that this was in the nature of a sine qua non on the part of the House, and struck out the sum of $300,000 and proposed to limit the expense to $25,000, which they thought was ample for that purpose. The bill came into conference within six or eight or ten hours at most of the time when Congress was obliged to adjourn, and in that conference the Senate conferees yielded $15,000, and that commission with the authority to expend $40,000 is now authorized to go ahead.

I only mention these things to show that in the matter which has been spoken of here, and which was the subject of the resolution of the Senator from Ohio, the Senate has not been the chief sinner, if sinning there has been; that it has followed, a long way off in the measure of extravagance, the lead of the House of Representatives. All the committees which have sat in this body for the last five years, in my judgment, would not cost the Treasury of the United States the amount of money that these two commissions, authorized by law inserted in the appropriation bills by the House of Representatives and insisted on by them to the extent of saying that the bills should fail unless they could get them, will cost the Government.

I think myself that it is time generally to call a halt. Many matters may be properly the subject of investigation by committees of this body, but there is a great mass of information which can be obtained without the formal constitution of committees for that purpose, and which ought to be obtained for the use of the Senate by the ordinary appliances of its clerks and others in its permanent employ, as well as by the action of Senators themselves when they have leisure for that purpose during the vacation or at other times.

But, Mr. President, the trouble has been that out of this has grown a system of expenditure as an adjunct to the ordinary expenses of the committees, the expenses for stenographers, for clerks, for messengers, for transportation, for matters of personal convenience to Senators, each committee being assured by the person having it in charge that this is what some other committee has done, and from time to time these expenses have grown apace illegitimately and to the detriment of that economy which should be observed in the expenditure of public money by the Senate as well as by all public officials. But what the Senate has done has only been in the line of the example, if I may call it such, which has been set by the other House; in other words, this system has grown up in both branches of Congress, and has extended until it has become to some extent a means to the convenience or wishes of Senators or individual members of Congress to get to remote sections of the country at the public expense. If it is not that avowedly, then that has become apparently a necessary incident to what is going on, and what was authorized to be done.

I am glad the Senate has manifested a disposition to bring these expenses within limit. None of these committees ought to cost the Senate very much. All of them can do work enough if they are properly manned and properly inspired, to give a return which will equal the amount of any considerable expense which they may incur. But a committee which costs two, three, four, or five times more than is necessary ought not to receive favor at the hands of the Senate; and because of the expense, because of the unnecessary expense, I think the Senate does well to limit the sphere within which these committees shall move; and especially ought it not to constitute them for the acquisition of information which can readily be obtained without the investigation of a committee specially raised for that purpose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I did not intend in anything that I said or in introducing the resolution which I offered to criticise the Senate as contrasted with the House of Representatives. I have observed since my return to the Senate the large increase of expenditure in the nature of contingent expenses by both the House and the Senate; and I have no doubt that what the Senator from Kansas says is true, that if an abuse has sprung up in this body it has been followed by the House, or, if it originated in the House, it has been followed by the Senate; and the remark I made about the contingent expenses of the Senate applies as well to those of the House of Representatives under either political party; and I desire to say that the same criticism applies to the Senate, for I notice that during the two years when our Democratic friends had the majority in the Senate they largely increased the contingent expenses of the Senate, and even in the last Congress it is just to say that the large portion of the increase of expenditures was made to meet demands from the other side of the House, especially the large sum required for the employment of clerks to Senators. There would seem to be a great deal of justice in that demand. As the dominant party had the chairmen of the great majority of the committees, and Senators in the minority had not, therefore, the same facilities of clerical assistance, they would naturally require that there should be some better division of that kind of service. That appeal was made, and upon a resolution offered from the other side of the House some $40,000 is now expended each year for clerks to Senators, largely, as a matter of course, representing the minority of the Senate who are not chairmen of committees.

The same remark applies in regard to the Butler house, as it is called. The renting of that house was severely criticised, and I think justly criticised—the sudden employment of a large and expensive building somewhat remote from this wing of the Capitol for the purposes of committees. It was a movement made on both sides, I believe; it came from the other side in the first instance; at any rate it was adopted without distinction of party. Therefore the remarks I made have no application of a party character to either House; but the natural tendency of legislative bodies is always to increase this class of expenditures and increase the number of employés about them. We naturally become attached to those employés; we probably magnify their services; we want to render them favors; and I have sat here many and many a time and voted them thirty days' extra pay when they were already overpaid for the time they actually served. We dislike to refuse to grant a favor to those who are around us and who contribute so much to our comfort, and who are generally so ready to do the business assigned them.

Mr. President, I hope that if this committee is organized the members of it will give us some comprehensive scheme, not founded upon any narrow economy, but founded upon a fair business list of the number of employés necessary to conduct the business of the Senate and a fair and just compensation to each of them; and from that time forward let it be understood that the idea of extra compensation shall not be tolerated or allowed.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I think that the resolution ought to be amended. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to it. In line 5, after the word "Senate," there should be added the words "in the number of committees."

Mr. SHERMAN. I think so, too.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think that the resolution is broad enough to give this proposed committee any jurisdiction to report touching the committees of the Senate.

Mr. President, the gravest extravagance of the last year was the leasing of the Butler house for committees of the Senate, and the appointment of some ten or twelve messengers to take charge of it. The cost was from $25,000 to $35,000 a year undoubtedly, and it accommodated largely committees who have no business to do. There are a dozen or sixteen committees of the Senate that can be dispensed with just as well as not, and if each Senator has a clerk the necessity for those committees, if ever there was any, ceases with the employment of that clerk. While these committees are in existence they are demanding rooms. The pressure is exceedingly great upon the Committee on Rules to provide rooms in the Senate wing of the Capitol. There are no rooms in the Senate wing that can be provided, without the removal of the Supreme Court to some other building, which in my judgment ought to be done, or without the erection of a Library building and the removal of the Library from its present location. That pressure for rooms led to the passage by the Senate of the resolution to hire rooms outside. The rooms outside had not been leased three months before every Senator occupying those rooms came to the conclusion he did not want them. The building is too far off. You can not get committee meetings outside, and the only place to have committee-rooms is in this wing of the Capitol; it is the only convenient place; and if our committees are reduced some ten or twelve or sixteen there will not be the slightest trouble about furnishing every committee with a room.

I move to amend the resolution by inserting after the word "Senate," in the fifth line, the words "in the number of committees."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine proposes an amendment, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "Senate," it is proposed to insert the words "in the number of committees;" so as to read:

Resolved, That a committee of seven Senators be appointed, with leave to sit during the recess of the Senate, to carefully examine and report, on the first day of the next session, by bill or otherwise, what reduction should be made in the number and compensation of the employés of the Senate, in the number of committees, and any further provisions that may be expedient to control and regulate the disbursement of the contingent expenses of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

REPORT OF POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE ON POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I desire to make a statement in behalf of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

At the last session of the Senate, on May 27, 1884, the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads submitted a report accompanying a bill, the number of which I do not just now remember, in reference to the postal telegraph. That report was printed in two parts, the first containing the conclusions of the committee, and the second the testimony laid before the committee on the subject of the bill.

Mr. TELLER. It is impossible for us to hear what is going on, the confusion in the Chamber is so great.

The VICE-PRESIDENT rapped to order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The attention of the committee has been called to a paper purporting to be a third part of that report, which paper was prepared and printed during the present month, having been sent to the Printing Office on the 16th of March. The committee have inquired into that, and feel it due to themselves to make the statement to the Senate that they are in no wise responsible either for the preparation or the publication of the paper marked part 3 of Report No. 577, and they adopted this morning a resolution, which I was directed to lay before the Senate, on this subject:

Resolved, That the paper purporting to be part 3 of Report 577, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, was not authorized to be printed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and said committee is not responsible for its preparation or publication. Said paper should be omitted from the bound copies of the reports.

That resolution expresses the view of the committee, and while I was not authorized by the committee, I will now offer the following resolution, which I shall ask the adoption of by the Senate:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, directed to omit from the bound copies of Senate reports the paper purporting to be part 3 of Report No. 577, first session Forty-eighth Congress.

I send the resolution to the Secretary's desk and move its adoption. The document ought not to be printed as the report of the committee because the committee had nothing whatever to do with it.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the resolution read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will take occasion to state that the committee are not able to say definitely who is responsible for the publication. The then clerk of the committee took it to the Printer and had it printed, as he understood by direction of the chairman of the committee. But it was done after the chairman of the committee had ceased to be a member of the Senate, and I think was wholly unauthorized, and resulted from a mistake or misunderstanding. Perhaps nothing is chargeable against the late chairman of the committee or against the clerk. It is owing to some misunderstanding on the part of the clerk and chairman of the committee; but in order that the committee may vindicate itself from connection with it I have thought proper to offer the resolution which I have sent to the desk and move the adoption of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to omit from the bound copies of Senate reports the paper purporting to be part 3 of Report No. 577, first session Forty-eighth Congress.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to add to what my honorable colleague on the Post-Office Committee [Mr. SAULSBURY] has said, that the report of the committee on the bill referred to on the postal telegraph system was read to the full committee on behalf of the subcommittee, which subcommittee consisted of the chairman, Mr. Hill, Mr. JACKSON, of Tennessee, and Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The report was very carefully considered by the committee. On the 27th day of May last—that was the date it was adopted—it was presented to the Senate. That embraced two parts. One part was the report proper, and the second part the evidence accompanying the report. That was submitted on the 27th of May, 1884. This third part which now comes in contains a large mass of matter prepared long after the adoption of the report. Hence the committee is not responsible for it and was not aware of it at the time of the adoption of the report. There was never any action, as shown by the committee journal, in reference to the bill after the 27th day of May, 1884.

Mr. INGALLS. Who prepared the document known as the third part of this report?

Mr. MAXEY. I am not prepared to answer that question.

Mr. INGALLS. How did it get in the hands of the Public Printer?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will state that the late clerk of that committee came before the committee and stated that there were certain interrogatories propounded to the president of the Western Union Telegraph Company which had been omitted in the report made May 27, 1884. The attention of the chairman of that committee was called to the fact by the clerk of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Who was chairman of the committee at that time?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. Hill, of Colorado, the chairman of the committee, stated that the clerk informed him that those questions could be published as a kind of addendum to the report. He said, however, that newspaper criticisms were also in possession of the chairman of the committee, and his understanding was that those criticisms of newspapers were also to be appended as part of the report, and with that understanding he prepared the paper and carried it to the regular officer of the Senate who delivered it to the Public Printer.

Mr. INGALLS. The clerk of the committee prepared it at the direction of the chairman?

Mr. SAULSBURY. He said that the chairman never saw this part of the report as he had prepared it, but that he had prepared it in accordance with what he understood to be the wishes of the chairman. That was about the substance of what he said, but he also said the chairman had never seen the paper after it was prepared.

Mr. INGALLS. How many copies were printed?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Two hundred.

Mr. INGALLS. On whose order?

Mr. SAULSBURY. One hundred and fifty of them are in the possession of the late clerk, who neglected to deliver them to the committee. He did not know what had become of the other fifty. They were printed, according to the usual course, for the use of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Who ordered them printed?

Mr. SAULSBURY. They were ordered printed under the general order. The clerk of the committee carried the paper to the person having supervision of the printing of reports for the Senate, and he understanding it to be a part of the report had the usual number, two hundred, printed for the use of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Did the clerk of the committee act on his own responsibility?

Mr. SAULSBURY. As I before stated, he said that he understood Mr. Hill to desire it to be published as an addendum to the report which had been made in May, 1884.

Mr. INGALLS. It was not by any order or concurrence on the part of the committee?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Not by any order of the committee, nor by any knowledge of the committee.

Mr. MAXEY. I will now resume what I was going on to say. The last order made by the committee was on the 27th day of May, 1884. When the attention of the committee was called to this matter yesterday, we sent for the Journal Clerk of the Senate, Mr. Spencer, and inquired of him if any order had ever been made by the Senate authorizing that paper to be printed. He ascertained that no order had ever been made by the Senate authorizing that publication. There is no order whatever of the committee on the subject subsequent to the 27th of May, 1884, and as I stated in respect to it, it would be a simple impossibilty that the committee should have known anything about that third part, because it contains articles bearing date long subsequent to the date of the report.

That, I think, is all that it is necessary to say. I do not care to lay any blame. I do not wish to be understood as laying any blame on anybody about it, but simply as saying that the committee, as a committee, is not responsible for that document.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the resolution may be again read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be again read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to omit from the bound copies of Senate reports the paper purporting to be part 3 of Report No. 577, first session Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I propose to add to that:

Said paper not having been prepared under the direction of the said committee.

I move to amend the resolution in that way.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be so modified, if there be no objection.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me the language suggested by the Senator from Delaware may cover all that ought to be provided for, but here is a proposition made in this resolution apparently to suppress a report. Now, it seems to me that if we propose to withhold this paper from the printed documents of the Senate, we should give upon the face of the order the reason why, and I think it should state distinctly that it is not the report of the committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have just submitted a report stating that.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator says "said paper not having been prepared." I would make the language stronger, so that hereafter it may appear that this is not a report, that it was not prepared by the committee, that the committee did not authorize its printing, and, in short, that it is a total fabrication, because I believe that is about the statement of the committee now, that this report was never seen by the committee or any member of it, that it was not authorized to be reported, and therefore the face of the paper should show that this is a fabrication, and for that reason should not enter into the permanent records of this body.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I did not hear all that was said by the Senator from Delaware, a member of the committee. I should like to inquire when the first publication was made of any report from the Post-Office Committee on this subject.

Mr. SAWYER. If the Senator will give way I will state that I have in my hand a statement from the Journal Clerk made to the committee. We asked him to furnish the reason why this portion of the report came to be in print. He came before the committee. The committee reported some time in April their bill, and obtained permission then to make a further report. On the 27th of last May they made their report and it was authorized to be printed. That was last year. On the 16th of March of this year, this present month, this part 3 was sent to the Printer, while never any portion of it came before the committee to my knowledge, and I was on that committee, and I do not think I was ever absent from a meeting. I send up the statement to which I have referred.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the statement be read.

Mr. SAWYER. This is the statement we had prepared.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin offers a statement, which will be read.

Mr. CONGER. The present Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads did not meet until the 19th of March. The publications were all prior to that time.

Mr. SAWYER. I had reference to the committee of the previous Congress.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear the statement read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The statement will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., March 30, 1885.

SIR: In compliance with the request of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads I beg leave to submit the following statement relative to the recent publication of a document purporting to be a continuation of the report of the committee on the subject of the postal telegraph:

The bill (S. 2022) "to establish a postal telegraph" was reported to the Senate on the 9th of April, 1884, by Mr. Hill, who asked at the time, on behalf of the committee, the privilege of submitting at a day in the near future a report in writing to accompany the bill. The request was granted, and on the 27th of May following Mr. Hill submitted the report (No. 577), which, together with the testimony taken and printed as part 2, was sent to the Public Printer on that day.

The printing of the report and testimony was under the direction of Mr. Williams, bill clerk, whose desk is the regular channel through which printing, by order of the Senate, accompanying bills, goes to the Printer, and he receives his instructions from the desk in the Senate.

On the 16th of the present month it seems Mr. Fox, clerk of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, came to Mr. Bartlett, who has charge of the miscellaneous printing and binding for the use of Senators and committees on requisition of the Secretary of the Senate, and asked for a requisition to print for the use of the committee 200 extra copies of a document which Mr. Bartlett did not closely examine, but which appeared to be manuscript and printed matter in the nature of a report, and bore the usual heading placed by Mr. Williams, the bill clerk, on reports ordered printed by the Senate.

The heading (with the exception of the word and figure, "Part 3," in writing) is in print, and is a copy of the heading of the original report. It is as follows:

48TH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION. SENATE. REPORT No. 577. PART 3.

REPORT ON POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MAY 27, 1884.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. Bartlett assuming that the request for the extra copies came from the committee, and from the heading of the document that the transaction was regular, gave the requisition without question, as it involved simply the expense of the paper and presswork of two hundred copies.

Mr. Bartlett's statement and a copy of the requisition are herewith appended.

The document never passed through the desk in the Senate, and Mr. Williams, whose desk, as stated before, is the regular channel through which such matter, excepting as to the requisition for extra copies, goes to the Printer, states that he never saw the document until it was printed.

The authority of the Printer for the composition and printing of the regular number is the heading of the document as quoted above. The only indication on its face as to who prepared the heading is the word and figure "Part 3" in writing which I do not assume to identify.

Very respectfully,

WM. E. SPENCER,
Journal Clerk.

Hon. O. D. CONGER,
Chairman Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SAWYER. The committee's report was presented on the 27th of last May and is entirely complete except two or three pages in which questions were propounded to officers of the telegraph company and a copy sent in writing to them for them to prepare answers to; but instead of doing that, they came before the committee and most of the questions asked were answered in their testimony. Part 3, besides these interrogatories, consists of clippings from newspapers published since the election of last fall running up into December. The committee did not feel that they ought to be responsible for a report purporting to be made last May and containing newspaper clippings from newspapers of last December after the election.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator state when the first authority was given to print any report in connection with that subject?

Mr. SAWYER. Some time in April, 1884.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Was this report ordered to be printed by resolution of the committee, or by resolution of the Senate?

Mr. SAWYER. The committee got permission in April to make a report; in May they made the report; and no authority has been granted by the Senate or by the committee since then.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Who made the first report?

Mr. SAWYER. The chairman.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. Hill made it as chairman of the committee. Was he the subcommittee to whom that matter was referred?

Mr. SAWYER. It all came before the whole committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Authority was given to print the report, and this I understand to be an addendum to that report.

Mr. SAWYER. It purports to be that.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It purports to be an addendum to that. Outside of newspaper clippings it had some queries propounded to the telegraph companies.

Mr. SAWYER. Oh, yes, sir, but these questions had been in the report and printed. They were sent to them in New York.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Have two hundred copies been printed?

Mr. SAWYER. I believe they have.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It would seem before any action should be taken by this body time at least should be given so that Mr. Hill should be heard. Therefore I think I shall have to ask that the resolution go over until to-morrow that we may see the whole statement in the RECORD.

Mr. SAWYER. I do not think any one has attempted to do anything wrong.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I was desirous that that statement should be made.

Mr. SAWYER. I think it was all through an oversight; but the committee do not feel that they ought to be responsible for a report made last May containing matters that occurred long afterward.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It seems some things have happened since, because here an interrogatory was propounded which I understand appears in this addendum.

Mr. SAWYER. Those interrogatories were asked of these parties during February of last year; they were sent to them at New York; and then they came before the committee and the questions were asked over, substantially the same things.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I shall have to ask that the resolution go over until to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us have the amendments reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Some amendments have been suggested to the resolution which have not been reported. The Secretary will report the amendments so that they may be understood.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add:

Said paper not having been prepared under the authority of said committee or printed by its direction.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the further consideration of the resolution be postponed——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I raise objection to its consideration. It may as well go over until to-morrow. It may just as well be passed then. We are not crowded with business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has unanimously agreed to the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think an objection is in order at any time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator propose the postponement of the further consideration of the resolution until to-morrow?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think an objection is in order at any time before a resolution is voted on. That is my understanding.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is that agreeable to the Senate? The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution lies over until to-morrow.

RECESS COMMITTEES.

Mr. VAN WYCK. From the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River I make the following report:

The Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, to whom was referred the following Senate resolution:

"Resolved, That the resolution of the Senate passed on the 4th day of March, 1885, authorizing the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River to sit during the vacation of the Senate and to make certain investigations therein named, be, and the same is hereby, rescinded"— respectfully report as a substitute therefor the following:

"Resolved, That all resolutions of the Senate of the Forty-eighth Congress and the present extra session of the Senate authorizing any committee to sit during the recess and to employ a clerk or stenographer or messenger, be rescinded," and recommend adoption of the same.

Only a few words, Mr. President, as no written report accompanies the result of the committee's deliberations, by way of explanation.

The Senate understands full well the circumstances under which the resolution was introduced and referred to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River. They had that resolution under consideration and they felt that the object of the introduction of the resolution was to strike at what has been referred to already this morning in the suggestions of Senators on this floor. It was not so much that one committee as that the system, which the Senator from Ohio says has grown to be so enormous in its proportions and in its expenditures, should somehow be curtailed. Looking at it with that view the committee felt it their duty to receive the resolution in the spirit in which it was sent for the purpose of accomplishing the object which was intended, and therefore looking over the matter fully they came to the conclusion that the better way was to strike at this thing so that it could be perceived that something had been done, and so radically as to prevent its recurrence in the future.

Mr. President, much has been said for and against this resolution in previous discussions in this body, but it would seem if there is to be a beginning it should be a beginning to eradicate and strike out and get at the root of this matter. What the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has said in regard to the action of the House of Representatives is certainly no precedent for us. It shows them equally guilty and possibly a little more so than the Senate; but that only illustrates the necessity of radical action at this time upon this matter.

Now, I think I have a right to ask this much of the Senate. No doubt every committee feels properly the weight and the responsibility of its duties and it feels them sometimes weighing very heavily during the recess of the Senate. If each committee would exercise just a little self-sacrifice and consent that it should share the fate which belongs to others having equally as much merit, then there certainly would be no difficulty about this matter.

I know it is claimed that some two or three of these committees were appointed by the Forty-eighth Congress at its first session, and that they partially finished their labors during one sitting in the last summer, and it is claimed that they are exceptional, and should be reserved from the operation of any sweeping resolution of repeal. It would appear that if a special committee appointed to examine a special object have occupied one entire summer, or as much of it as they deemed necessary, there should be no reason for that committee occupying a second summer.

It will be generally conceded, I think, on both sides of the Chamber that the results of the labors of committees which sit during the recess are not commensurate with the labor expended by members of the committees and the expense imposed on the Treasury; and therefore when we are starting to move properly, let us do it in such a way that our action will be effective and known and felt.

It was hardly necessary for the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to make any sort of apology in the direction he indicated when he said that this thing can be done without seeming to be done in a spirit of demagogy. That is a very fashionable word sometimes to be used when an idea or an argument is lacking to oppose a thing to call it by that name. This matter needs no excuse or apology of that kind; and what gentlemen mean by demagogy I fail fully to understand. What does it mean? That this body and that at the other end of this Capitol are so far removed from and so much above and beyond the source of their being, the creation of the powers which they are exercising, that it is rather an offense to stop long enough to ask what this same source of power thinks of a matter. I suppose the people who are competent to elect members to the other end of this building, or the Legislatures who represent the people of the States who elect members to this, may reasonably ask that those whom they elect shall stop long enough to consider their wants and their desires.

It is no matter whether this is done in reference to the clamor of the people, if you please to call it so, or the press. This body and the other are here to represent the people, to do as they want; and that other class, the press, are only strong when they have the people behind them, whose darts are only felt when the power that impels them comes from the great body of the people. It is well enough to consider both aspects of the case now and then; and therefore it is when we find the Senator from Ohio saying that the expenses of this body have crept up without any sort of necessity, as I understand striking at a few committees which probably do as much service to the nation as the three or four that may be retained. he will not accomplish anything. We have started out in this matter; and are we to stop without accomplishing anything when we have it in our power to do it? The Indians and the Indian lands will be taken care of whether the Committee on Indian Affairs go out again or not. Education and labor will be taken care of in this body whether that committee sit during another summer recess. And so with all the committees. I name those because they are the two most important, and when those are left out there is hardly anybody to rise in this Chamber and say that any of the others are of sufficient importance to continue a week or a month or during the summer solstice. They both devoted much time during the last summer to the matters committed to them. The Indian Territory was exhausted. I suppose now the excuse is Oklahoma. Well, what is the matter with Oklahoma? Oklahoma is here in the Capitol. All the facts are now known. It is true, while the discussion was going on, it was stated that nobody was occupying Oklahoma, that it was as free as when it came from the hands of the Maker; but now by the papers it seems the military have been destroying some ranches of syndicates located in Oklahoma. But that is not the point. We in the Capitol have acted, and the Executive has been delegated with authority to attempt to obtain control of that country besides some others for the use and occupation of settlers who may seek to go there.

Now, Mr. President, I may be allowed to say, I trust—I say it with no spirit of unkindness—if there are ten or fifteen committees here with the same powers as at the last recess, the expense will be great. I think the committees during the last recess which then sat averaged between $8,000 and $10,000 each in expense, so that the expenditure may rise up to $100,000 or upward—for what? Therefore I think I have a right to ask, as the Committee on the Mississippi River Improvement yields to this sort of clamor very readily, that the other committees will yield just as readily and just as gracefully, and save this money. The public interests will not suffer; no interest will suffer; and the Treasury will be slightly benefited. It is true I do not believe that the people are penurious, that they care much about the $100,000. Oh, no; if we had been careful in the discharge of our duties in some other matters they would cheerfully and ungrudgingly submit to many things. The people probably would not complain if we had done the things they wanted done; but when we have turned our backs on some very great projects dear to the people of the nation, then naturally they are complaining even at the $100,000; they naturally feel hurt that their servants should turn upon them and insist upon taking that much out of the Treasury.

Mr. President, I do not know that anything further is necessary to be said in the general tenor of my remarks. I have spoken in no spirit of unkindness to any committee of this body. The Mississippi River Committee is placed with the others in the body of this resolution, and we think a little patriotism at this moment would raise us above the ordinary level and induce us to say that every one of those recess committees shall be blotted out and the resolutions giving power to sit during the recess shall be rescinded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will lie over for further consideration until to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. Let it go to the Calendar.

SENATE EMPLOYÉS AND EXPENSES.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I desire to say a few things with respect to the suggestions which have been made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], and also the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. I think there is a misapprehension as to the actual increase of the expenditures of the Senate during the last few years, although I believe this increase has gone on too rapidly, and for that reason I offered the resolution which was passed this morning. I have had prepared some statements with reference to the expenditures of the Senate for a number of years, and I can state to the Senator from Nebraska, if he will be kind enough to give me his attention, that when we come to examine these statements we shall find that the increase has not been so rapid as Senators would seem to think.

Here is a statement of the total appropriations for the Senate for the ensuing fiscal year, and for several years preceding:

Amount of appropriations made for the Senate of the United States for the following fiscal years:

1886.
By legislative act	$867,083 10

Deficiencies	35,594 19
	698,509 99

It will be seen that these appropriations have not been increased as Senators have supposed. I, of course, include in these sums every expenditure for the Senate, including the compensation and mileage of Senators and every item of expense in and about this body. When we come to consider the employés of the Senate, which term includes clerks of committees and all messengers, laborers, &c., and employés of every name (but not including the Capitol police, because they belong to the two bodies), we find the state of things shown by the following table:

Statement showing the number of employés of the Senate and amounts of appropriations therefor provided in the several legislative acts, including deficiencies on account of same, for the following fiscal years:

* Extra month's pay, $26,317.52.
† Thirty-one clerks to Senators included in number of employés for 1885.
‡ Extra month's pay, $26,317.52; about same as 1883.
§ Seven new messengers to committees provided for 1882.

That these expenditures have increased, and increased beyond what they ought to be, I think will be apparent to every one who examines with care the appropriations from year to year. But let us see now how these expenditures have grown up. Last year just before the adjournment, on the 5th of July, there was brought in a resolution providing for the renting of a building outside of this Capitol for committees that could not be provided for within the Capitol. That involved an expenditure of, say, $25,000, if continued.

Mr. PLATT. Twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. Twenty thousand dollars, the Senator from Connecticut tells me, which is more nearly the sum. That involved an expenditure of say $20,000, including the messengers, laborers, watchmen, and employés of every name and nature needed to take care of the additional building.

There is another expenditure which has grown up here in the last few years which I desire to call the attention of the Senate to, because I think it is well enough for us to know a little of the details. I will not go back further than 1876, prior to which time it had been the custom to allow the session employés of both Houses to have an extra month's pay. The Democrats then being in possession of the House of Representatives stated that that custom should be broken up, and that instead of allowing them an extra month's pay we should incorporate into our statutes a provision whereby the long session should be considered as continuing for seven months and the short session for four months, whereas in fact the long session usually was less than seven months and the short session from necessity was only three months. So the extra month's pay which had been voted from year to year was in another form incorporated in a statute upon the request of the House of Representatives; but no sooner had that law fairly become a part of our statutes when the House of Representatives itself, in March, 1879, provided for an extra month's pay to its session employés, and of course that being a matter which related only to the House of Representatives, and it being a Democratic body, the Senate did not resist that request of the House. They went avowedly upon the idea, which was incorrect, that the Senate employés were receiving greater compensation in the aggregate than were the House employés. The Senate, however, of course assented to the proposition that the House should have this increased month's compensation. That made the session employés of the House receive for the long session eight months' pay, and for the short session five months' pay. That went on in the House of Representatives, the Senate doing nothing about it until the 1st of July, 1879, when the House of Representatives not only provided for its session clerks and other employés to have an additional month's pay, but provided that the clerks and others borne upon the annual roll of the House of Representatives and receiving annual salaries should also have an extra month's pay. That the Senate disagreed to at first, but finally yielded to it in conference, and the House employés therefore were receiving for twelve months' work thirteen months' pay beginning in 1879 when the House first insisted upon that proposition.

So again on the 3d of March, 1881, in the sundry civil bill the House of Representatives again presented this proposition to the Senate of giving not only their session clerks an extra month's pay, but of giving their annual clerks an extra month's pay. At that session the Senate insisted that if the session clerks and annual clerks of the House of Representatives were to receive an extra month's pay, at least the session clerks of the Senate should have the same extra pay. That may have been wise or otherwise, but that was done. How was it done? The Committee on Appropriations refused to do it. They refused to put it in the regular bill, and the bill passed without the session employés of the Senate having an extra month's pay; but on the following day a resolution was introduced into this body by a Democratic Senator—I desire to speak plainly in reference to this matter—providing that the Senate employés borne upon the session roll should each receive an extra month's pay, and that was passed. It was a joint resolution. Of course it could not be done otherwise, and it promptly passed the House. Thus in 1881 we began in this body for the first time to appropriate for the session clerks an extra month's pay beyond that provided in the statutes of 1877, which provided that the sessions should continue for four months and seven months respectively during the long and the short term.

The same thing was repeated the next year, the House employés, both session and annual, getting a month's extra pay, and the Senate annual employés not receiving it.

The following year when the sundry civil appropriation bill came before the Senate it found in it a proposition from the House of Representatives again providing for an extra month's pay to the session clerks and to the annual clerks borne upon the rolls of the House of Representatives, including even their official reporters, who are borne upon the annual rolls of the House and receive a compensation of $5,000 each per annum. It included every officer and employé of every name and nature connected with the House of Representatives. Then that year the Senate of the United States—and I do not say what particular Senator or body of Senators is responsible for it—said it was a manifest injustice that men, a number of whom were receiving larger annual compensation in the House of Representatives for services performed by like employés of this body, should receive as annual compensation more than was paid to corresponding officers of the Senate, and also an additional month's pay, or pay for thirteen months. We said it was a manifest injustice to the employés of this body that not only their compensation should be less than that of the House employés, but that, in addition to that, we should consent that an extra month's pay should be paid to those borne on the annual rolls of the House. Therefore the Senate struck out this provision with an understanding, I may say, derived from the debates of this body, as will be seen by reference to them, that if the House insisted upon this provision the Senate should also insist upon a like provision. During that year—and I have the law before me—when it was first proposed that this extra month's pay should be paid to all of our employés, we incorporated into the law making the appropriation for this purpose a provision for a joint commission, in this language:

That a joint commission consisting of three Senators to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, and three members-elect of the Forty-eighth Congress to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall during the recess of Congress consider the question of the salaries and compensation of the officers and employés of the Senate and House respectively and also the number of such employés necessary for the official transaction of the business of the two Houses, and shall report to the two Houses on the second Monday of December next their conclusions, with reference to the whole subject, and shall recommend legislation respecting the same if in their judgment any legislation is necessary.

That provision was made in 1883, because it was agreed that the expenditures of the two Houses were growing more rapidly than they should grow. That commission was appointed and selected and met, but it was absolutely unable to agree, and after a thorough and full examination its members reported to their respective Houses that it was impossible for them to agree. Since that time it has been the custom in both Houses to appropriate at the end of each session an additional month's pay to the employés of both Houses. That amounts in round numbers in this body to $20,000 per annum. It amounts in the House of Representatives to from $36,000 to $40,000 per annum.

It was in order that the Senate of the United States may overhaul this whole question that I proposed the resolution relating to the expenditures which has been adopted. If we can not have an agreement with the House, let us have some thorough understanding with respect to our own expenditures.

When we come to another item of expenditure which has been added in the last two or three years, an item of expenditure known as clerks to Senators, that is an expenditure amounting to $40,000 per annum. The Senators know how that was adopted, and with what tenacity Senators insisted upon that as being essential and necessary to the proper and legitimate conduct of the public business of this body.

I mention these matters now as a partial answer to the Senator from Nebraska why these appropriations have apparently grown within the last few years. They have grown up from the fact that clerks to Senators have been employed, they have grown up from the fact that the extra month's pay was forced upon us by the House of Representatives for four years before we placed our own employés on a par with this insistance on the part of the House of Representatives.

Now, it seems to me that it is timely and proper that we should consider these questions and see whether or not we can reduce, as I am sure we can, both the number and, in some instances, the compensation of our employés.

But there is another thing I wish to call the attention of Senators to, and that is that it will not do to take the appropriations of 1875, 1876, and 1877 as a measure for the appropriations for clerks and employés of this body. It was the habit up to 1877 in this body, and to some extent since, to appropriate large contingencies in bulk so that the entire clerical labor force of this body did not appear as among the employés in the appropriation bills specifically appropriated for. These appropriations were made in bulk for contingent expenses of the Senate, and in that way the contingent expenses in those years prior to 1877 were very much larger than they are at this time.

For 1884, 1885, and 1886 every expenditure involving the compensation of an employé is drawn into the regular appropriations in the form of a clerk, or a messenger, or a watchman, or a laborer, so that while the roll has apparently grown largely in numbers, if you compare one appropriation bill with another, in fact the employés of this body have not been increased largely, except by the number of clerks to Senators and by the increase made necessary by the renting of the Butler building. There was an increase of some eight or ten made in 1879 for the convenience and proper conduct of the business of this body.

I agree with the Senator from Ohio in the desire that the Senate shall have force enough and that it shall have that degree of intelligence and competency in its force which will enable it to transact the great business of this body; but in order to secure that intelligence and degree of competency it is necessary that the men about us here shall have a reasonable compensation for the service they render.

I say then, Mr. President, if we look over the expenditures of this body, while I believe we can reduce them, I do not want to have Senators believe that we have doubled the expenditures in the last ten years, because we have done no such thing. I have shown you the details. There has been a considerable increase, and I have given you in the main the causes of that increase.

I might mention one other item, that is, the increase of the number of committees and the compensation paid to committee clerks. In 1877 we had but five annual committee clerks of this body. Now we have seventeen. Of course that involves an increased compensation for clerks of committees. That is a subject which can very well be revised by this special committee.

Now, I want to say one word in reference to the suggestions made by the Senator from Nebraska in another regard. As I stated before, since we have come into the habit of appropriating specifically for the employés of this body our contingent expenses have been reduced, not perhaps proportionately, but we have made special appropriations year by year for the purposes of investigating committees such as have been suggested in various resolutions before us. The appropriation of last year was $15,000, to which was added $15,000 more in a deficiency bill, making the expense of such investigations last year $30,000. The appropriation in the last legislative bill for committees making investigations for the next fiscal year is $25,000. I hope that all the committees that are making investigations will endeavor to bring their expenditures of every name and nature within the appropriation of $25,000 for the next year, and I believe this can be done.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Will the Senator allow me right there to ask him to state how many investigating committees were expending the money?

Mr. ALLISON. I can not say just at the moment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I think my friend will find that the average of each committee was from $8,000 to $10,000. One committee expended about $25,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator now refers to the Committee on Education and Labor. That committee entered upon a very large expenditure and a very large scope of investigation, as the Senator from Mississippi who sits before me [Mr. GEORGE], and who was an able member of that committee, well knows. They have published, I believe, or propose to publish four or five volumes. Every Senator for himself can judge of the utility or inutility of that investigation and examination; but that is the committee which has created the largest expenditure of public money, and I believe has expended in all, exclusive of printing, much less than $25,000. Whether that committee has performed its duty or not, I will not say. I suppose it has. I know that that investigation was requested by a very large body of men in this country and by a body of men that the Senate it seems to me ought to regard.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. The largeness of the expense caused by the Committee on Education and Labor was occasioned by paying for the summoning and examination of a large number of witnesses who were brought before them. Nearly all the expenditures made by that committee were occasioned in that way. I will undertake to say, without having made any special examination, that eliminating the expenses arising from the summoning of witnesses before that committee, the other expenses of that committee were of a very moderate character, as much so as those of any committee of a similar size who have ever been engaged in doing work for the Senate during vacation.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I did not intend to discuss in detail these questions but only to mention some of the circumstances under which the apparent increase of expenditures and the real increase has grown up. The Committee on Education and Labor perhaps spent the largest sum of money of last year's appropriation. The Indian Committee I suppose is the next largest in expenditure, and the chairman tells me that the expenditure was within $2,400, although they extended their examinations to a great number of Indian tribes, even going so far as to California.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that while this re-examination is necessary, it is not a wise thing for us to improperly and improvidently carry to the country the idea that we are increasing rapidly and unnecessarily the expenditures of this body.

While I am up, I want to say another word, and that is that in the nature of things expenditures in certain departments of this Government will grow from year to year. I saw it stated very gravely in a newspaper the other day that the Forty-eighth Congress, in comparison with the Forty-seventh Congress that was Republican in both Houses, had saved to the people of this country more than $100,000,000. Mr. President, the appropriations of the Forty-eighth Congress, leaving out the appropriations for pensions, were in excess of the appropriations of the Forty-seventh Congress. The appropriations, leaving out those for pensions, made by the Forty-eighth Congress are nearly $8,000,000 in excess of the appropriations made by the Forty-seventh Congress.

I do not say this for any partisan purpose or in any partisan way. I do it for the purpose of calling the attention of the public to the fact that the Forty-eighth Congress, leaving out the appropriations for pensions, have authorized the drawing from the public Treasury of near $8,000,000 more than the Forty-seventh Congress which expired on the 3d of March, 1883, and I can give the absolute details of these appropriations showing the truth of what I say. So that when it comes from any quarter or whatever quarter it may, that the Forty-seventh Congress was an extravagant Congress because it was all Republican, and the Forty-eighth Congress was an economical Congress because it was half Democratic, I wish to make the statement that an examination will disclose the fact that, excluding pensions, the appropriations of the Forty-eighth Congress are, in round numbers, $8,000,000 in excess of the appropriations of the Forty-seventh Congress which adjourned on the 3d of March, 1883. The truth of this statement is verified by the following table:

Statement showing the appropriations, exclusive of pensions, made by the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses—the Forty-seventh Congress covering the fiscal years 1883 and 1884, and the Forty-eighth Congress covering the fiscal years 1885 and 1886.

†Also reappropriated and made available for 1885 an unexpended balance estimated to be $66,000,000.

A careful examination of this table in detail will show that the increase of the Forty-eighth Congress over the Forty-seventh is, in exact figures, $7,594,002.50.

While these appropriations may appear extravagant and excessive with reference to many departments of the Government, they were deemed by both political parties, Republicans and Democrats alike, as necessary for the faithful and successful conduct of the public business, and during the Forty-eighth Congress, so far as I know, there was no suggestion of distinction of party with reference to the economies of that Congress as compared with the prior Congress, which was wholly Republican.

Having said this much, Mr. President, I am willing that this resolution shall go over.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask my friend from Iowa a question in that connection. I ask him if it is not the fact that the expenditures were largely increased in the Senate over the appropriations made by the House in the last Congress?

Mr. ALLISON. In some instances they were increased undoubtedly.

Mr. VEST. I ask him if the figures do not show that the increase was $16,000,000 on the general appropriation bills?

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator desires to go into that, I am willing to go into it. The Senate of course did increase the appropriations and they surrendered appropriations. The House of Representatives wholly omitted many necessary appropriations—the House of Representatives wholly omitted to appropriate for necessary expenditures of this Government. Take for illustration, where there was no hostility or opposition: We had made a solemn compact and treaty with France that we would appropriate whatever sum should be awarded under that treaty by commissioners to pay the claims of French citizens. Those awards were $625,000 in all. It was not appropriated for at all in the House of Representatives; and yet the treaty required it; it was a solemn obligation that we should appropriate that sum.

In addition to that, in 1883 we made a treaty with Mexico whereby we agreed that the boundary line between Mexico and the United States should be marked anew from a certain point on the Rio Grande, I think from El Paso to the Pacific Ocean. We agreed that we would appoint commissioners to remark that boundary and set up new stakes and monuments, and there were commissioners appointed who reported $224,000 necessary to do the work, and the Secretary of State sent to us the urgent request of the Mexican Government that we should carry out that treaty stipulation, and he giving as reason therefor in addition that the boundary was undefined in many parts along this line as between the United States and Mexico, and that there were disputes constantly arising and that that boundary should be remarked. The Senate of the United States put in $224,000 for that purpose.

Thus I have given you in two items nearly a million of dollars that we added to the appropriations with reference to two international questions, and I might give you others. And yet are we to be charged with extravagance because we have put in these essential and necessary appropriations of public money which the public interest and our treaties with foreign nations required us to make? If the Senator wants to reargue the additions made in the Senate over the original appropriations made by the House of Representatives in detail, if he specifies any single item of extravagance I will be able, as chairman of the committee, I hope to give him at least the reasons why the appropriations were enlarged in the Senate.

But I was not speaking of partisanship in either body. I am glad to say that I do not know of any such thing as partisanship in the Senate with reference to appropriations. The Senator does not know of any such thing, and I would not now speak of this question if I did not believe that there was a public misapprehension with reference not only to the character of our public expenditures, but to the necessity of many of the appropriations we make from year to year.

Mr. BLAIR. I should have no reason for taking part in this debate save for the allusion that has been made in the remarks of the Senator who has just taken his seat to the investigation, which is not yet fully concluded, that has been under the conduct of the Committee on Education and Labor. That investigation was ordered in the year 1882. The original resolution calling for the investigation was introduced by the honorable Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], whom I now see in his seat. It was somewhat limited in its scope. It seemed to be directed mainly at a development characteristic to some extent of the manufacturing industries of the North, an occasional development. I have reference to the matter of strikes.

It was thought, as that resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor for consideration before action by the Senate, that it would be well to enlarge its scope so that the investigation, if conducted at all, should have a comprehensive and appropriate reference to the interests of labor generally and so that all systems of labor, at the South as well as at the North, should be the subject-matter of appropriate investigation and consideration. Accordingly the resolution was so enlarged in its scope as to embrace the subject-matter which I have indicated, and as thus enlarged the investigation was ordered I think by a unanimous vote of the Senate, substantially so at all events; and the committee entered upon its labors.

I wish now to say that since that time that committee has, as I state from an examination of the work done by the various investigating committees of this body, as far as any trace of it can be found, performed more labor by at least 100 per cent. for the same amount of expenditure than ever has been performed by any other committee of this body or of the other body in my belief, certainly of this. The committee has been exceedingly careful and prudent in the matter of its expenditures. So far as the personal expenditures of members of the committee are concerned, they have not drawn on the resources at command as deeply as they would if they had been engaged in their own private personal business, and anybody can satisfy himself in regard to that by an examination of the vouchers on file.

So far as the expenditure of money for the summoning of witnesses is concerned, which has been alluded to by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], himself a member of the committee, very careful discretion was exercised by the chairman in that regard. It was, of course, necessary to examine a large number of witnesses coming from or representing all portions of the country. That was contemplated by the resolution itself, and in the discharge of our duty, as we understood it, that was an indispensable thing to be done. As an example of the effort of the committee to avoid expense in that regard, I will state one or two instances, one particularly.

Of course the testimony of the leaders of the various labor organizations of the country was necessary. We found that a national, almost an international convention of the leaders of these various societies was to be held in the city of New York. These leading men were to be assembled from all parts of the country and from Canada. We took advantage of that opportunity, and thus saved what is the principal source of expense, as we all know, in the summoning of witnesses, we avoided the mileage of those witnesses, and thus obtained a thousand pages at least of indispensable and valuable testimony direct and pertinent to the subject-matter at a very slight expense to the Government. What was done in that instance was aimed to be done in all cases.

Testimony was taken in the city of New York, in the city of Boston, in the city of Manchester, N. H.; in the city of Birmingham, Ala.; in Augusta, and in Columbus, Ga. Witnesses in this way were obtained from all portions of the country, including the Mississippi Valley and the Pacific coast as well as along the lines of the great lakes.

The committee did its principal work in the way of gathering testimony in the year 1883. The testimony thus taken aggregates somewhere between 4,000 and 5,000 pages of printed matter. It comes from witnesses who are representatives of all classes in society, of all the interests of society, and especially those who would be likely to be well informed on all questions touching the social and industrial development of our people. Whoever takes pains to read that testimony or to read any considerable portion of it will be willing to admit that upon the problems which are involved in the good of our people valuable information is there to be found, such as the committee was directed to obtain by order of the Senate.

Incidentally I may say that whoever has occasion to study the topic which is now so prominently before the Senate and before the country, that of interstate commerce, the great transportation problem, will find the views of the most important and reliable witnesses in this country, and the facts bearing upon the problem have never been more fully, carefully, completely, or comprehensively stated than they are to be found in that testimony. Mr. Albert Fink has never before any other committee of this or any other body or in either a public or private capacity, to my knowledge, and I have read the most that he has said, stated the transportation problem and his views from his standpoint so comprehensively as in his testimony before that committee. He had notice, he had time; and the committee upon interstate commerce would do well to study the transportation problem from his standpoint in his testimony before the Committee on Education and Labor.

On the other hand we found in the State of Georgia, what may be new to the Senate, it was certainly so to me, the only State railroad commission that I know anything about—and there are twenty or thirty of them in the country—which has any real power and which in the matter of regulating fares and freights and public accommodations to be furnished by corporations to the people exercises any force emanating from the sovereignty itself. We took the testimony while there of the chief of that commission, and there is a large amount of valuable data given from the standpoint of a commission which has actually had power and has exercised that power from a governmental standpoint in relation to fares and freights and the general management of corporations, the accommodations that they shall give to the public in the matter of transportation and accommodation at depots, and all that sort of thing. That was of course an important topic as bearing upon the condition of the industrial classes as well as of all classes in this country.

The food problem has been thoroughly discussed by witnesses who know something in regard to it. I might go on extensively and indicate to the Senate directions in which they might find valuable information, and information pertinent to the inquiry which the committee was ordered to make.

I may say further that it was a labor not of the day alone but of the night, performed by the committee under the hostile criticism of the press of the entire country, and yet it was a work to which that committee can now point as the initiatory step, the commencement of the movement which has culminated in giving to the people of this country a Labor Bureau, which is now fostered and kindly fostered by both political parties, so that this very year an appropriation of $35,000 has been made in order that it may commence its work; and it was the initiatory movement, too, as I believe, of most of that legislation to which members on both sides of the Senate give very close attention in these days, bearing upon the general, the more free and equal applications of the great principles of philanthropy and of Christianity to the condition of the races of our people.

Having said this much with reference to the work of the committee, I wish to state something further and something definite in regard to what it has cost. The Senator from Iowa says that this committee is the one which occasioned the great increase of cost so far as the matter of investigations is concerned. Let me state what it has cost up to this date, and it is substantially true. Two thousand dollars, and probably $1,000, will complete everything further that it proposes to do.

For the expenses of its members and the taking of this vast amount of testimony upon this great variety of subjects, that committee has paid out less than $13,000 of the public money for the summoning of witnesses and paying their attendance before the committee, for the personal expenses of the committee in transportation, in board, and in everything that appertains to the expenses of an investigating committee. Beyond that, there has been paid a sum which I take in round numbers from the stenographer of the Senate to be $9,000, to whom the committee committed the whole charge of the subject of reporting the testimony, which, of course, if the testimony was to be printed, as it has been, was an exceedingly important work. There has been paid out under the direct superintendence of the Reporter of the Senate some $9,000. A subcommittee was appointed from the general committee, consisting of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH] and the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER], who were to obtain certain statistics bearing upon the relative wages of laborers in this and foreign countries, and the wages of working people in different portions of our own country.

That was an investigation which they conducted upon their own account, the results of which I have never seen any further than to approve the expenditures. Their expenditures will not be over $2,000 or at most $2,500, and are included in the $13,000 which I have already stated as the aggregate of the amount paid out for the personal expenses of the committee and the summoning of witnesses. Beyond that is the matter of the stenographic fees which the Reporter says to me in a note amount to about $9,000 already expended, and which at the utmost can not possibly be swollen above the amount of $10,000 at the outside when the whole work shall have been concluded. Thus there has been so far an expenditure by that committee doing this vast amount of work not exceeding $23,000, and the whole will be brought inside of the sum of $25,000.

Beyond this, which is not a part of the expenditures of the investigating committee, there is the further circumstance that upon an examination of the evidence by the members of the House and Senate a law was passed requiring it to be printed. The cost of printing that testimony, an edition of some 25,000 copies to be distributed throughout the country, if it were bound as the Agricultural Reports are to be bound, in five volumes, the fifth volume remaining to be completed, by the computations relied upon by the Senate committee and the House committee, would be about $60,000. The law as it was passed was with the understanding on the part of the House committee that those volumes should not be bound in the style of the Agricultural Reports, so that the cost of binding will be reduced I have no doubt by something like $20,000; I can not tell exactly how much. I anticipate that the entire cost of printing the edition will not be over $40,000.

Every year we are expending for the printing of the Agricultural Reports from $160,000 to $200,000, as I am informed by members of the Committee on Printing, and sometimes we expend more. This report of the Committee on Education and Labor, in its general distribution throughout the country, will reach quite as large a circle of interested people as are accustomed to rely upon the publications of the Agricultural Department. There are from 20,000,000 to 30,000,000 people in the United States interested in this subject-matter, for whom there never has been any expenditure before, either in the way of an investigation or in the way of a publication at the expense of the country in which they felt themselves specially interested.

Having said this as to the absolute expenses of the committee, I wish in this connection to give to the Senate and to the country a little data which I have had collected by the financial clerk of the Senate in regard to the expenditures of this body in years previous in this direction and up to the present time. I am unable to give the Congresses which ordered these investigations. Some of them extended, as this one has done, to more than one Congress, but they are all since the war. The financial clerk of the Senate wrote to me as follows:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF THE UNITED STATES SENATE, FINANCIAL ROOM,
Washington, October 9, 1883.

SIR: Your favor of the 8th instant received. To give you the gross amount of expenditure of each of the investigating committees of the Senate since the war closed would require about a week's work, as many of these expenditures are scattered through the appropriations for miscellaneous items for the several fiscal years.

I inclose you a statement of some of these expenditures which I had prepared for a Senator some time ago. If this will answer your purpose, please inform me.

Respectfully,

R. B. NIXON.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR,
Manchester, N. H.

The first in the list is the Joint Select Committee on Alleged Outrages in the Southern States, the cost of which committee and its investigation was $80,419.95. That does not include, as I understand it, any expenditure for printing an edition of the result of their labors as does the estimate for the Committee on Education and Labor, the expense for printing its report being some $40,000 while the entire expense of collecting the material and making the report will not exceed $25,000. I say the Joint Select Committee on Alleged Outrages in the Southern States expended $80,419.95, not including the expense of publishing its report. The other items furnished by the financial clerk are:

Committee on Privileges and Elections, to inquire into certain charges of bribery and corruption in connection with the recent Senatorial election in Kansas	$18,210 79
Joint select Committee on Retrenchment	3,692 40

Making $17,349.26 for the Copiah and Danville investigations.

I think it is well enough that these items should be understood and studied and digested by Senators who have the impression, if there are any such, that the Committee on Education and Labor in its investigation is the source of all their woes. I apprehend that in the end it will be found that it has done as much for as little money as any committee which has ever been established by this body and intrusted with the duty of investigation. Whether it shall continue and complete its labors is of course a matter which comes under the scope of the resolution offered by the Senator from Nebraska. As I said before, when the resolution continuing the investigation passed the Senate it only asked for the opportunity of completing its labors. It was authorized to do so during the last fiscal year, and failed to do it because of the illness of the chairman. The expenditure is substantially over. God knows I should be glad to be relieved of any additional labor, and if the action of the Senate is such as to cut off any further work on its part, I shall be thoroughly satisfied and abundantly relieved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Chair will state that there is no question before the Senate, the resolution reported by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] having under the rules gone over.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the subject which has been referred to by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] passes out of mind, I wish to say that I have observed a disposition on the part of the Senate, while asserting the right to control its own force both as to numbers and salaries, to follow the House of Representatives in any increase which the House saw fit to make of the salaries of the members of its force. I have never myself assented to that proposition. I regard it as subversive of the independence of the Senate, of all true ideas of economy, and of every principle of legislative propriety.

One question which I think the Senate ought to study is the number of its employés and the proper salaries to be paid to them with reference to the duties which they do and entirely without reference to anything which the House of Representatives may do about its force, either as to numbers or as to salaries. I think I could show, if I were disposed to go into it, that the large portion of the increase of the expense of the Senate in regard to its employés of late years has grown out of the apparently insane desire to see that the House did not get its fingers into the Treasury in regard to its employés unless the Senate was there too.

When this committee is formed I hope that the committee will go at this question of the Senate employés with reference to a desire only to discharge honestly the obligation which the Senate as a body owes to the country in regard to that control which it asserts concerning the expenditure of public money with reference to matters which are pertinent either to the convenience of Senators or the dispatch of public business in which the Senate is concerned, and that it will separate itself wholly and entirely from any dependence upon the House with reference to the numbers of employés or with reference to salaries or anything else, leaving the House to be extravagant or economical as it sees fit, the Senate maintaining itself upon its own basis as it ought with reference to the expenditure of that money which it controls.

SENATE SEAL.

Mr. FRYE. I rise to call up a resolution reported by the Committee on Rules some days ago touching preparing a seal for the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be directed to prepare an official seal for the Senate of the United States, and that the expenses of the same be paid out of the contingent fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Will the Senator from Maine state the object of the resolution?

Mr. FRYE. The Senate is without any official seal. There is a legend of one, three women very slightly clothed, but it is only a legend. The Secretary of the Senate is annoyed a great deal by requests that the seal may be attached to papers. He is very desirous that there shall be a seal, and it seems to the Committee on Rules that there ought to be one. I take it it will cost about $100.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Several messages in writing of an executive character were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

Mr. COKE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

WEDNESDAY, April 1, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONDITION OF GENERAL GRANT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has received several dispatches touching the failing health of General Grant. Is it the pleasure of the Senate that the Secretary shall read them?

Mr. SHERMAN and others. Let them be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

About 5 o'clock this morning great unfavorable change occurred in General Grant's condition. Rev. Dr. Newman hurriedly sent for. It is believed the end is near. Family summoned to the sick room.

At 6.55 this morning ex-Senator Chaffee left General Grant's house. He says the General is very low and is conscious that he is dying. The doctors say he may last the day out.

At 9 o'clock General Grant is growing weaker. The throat is thickening, but the main trouble is with the heart. The doctors say he may die at any time.

Senator Chaffee states that the sudden weakness of General Grant this morning was the result of an affection of the heart. It is understood now (10.45 a. m.) that the General has entirely lost the power of speech.

NEW YORK, 11.40 a. m.

General Grant still alive, but sinking fast.

TELEGRAPH CONTRACTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 20th instant, the contracts between the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Western Union Telegraph Company; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE EMPLOYÉS AND EXPENSES.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Vice-President be authorized to appoint the committee ordered by the Senate by its resolution of yesterday in regard to the number and pay of the employés of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection it will be so ordered. The Chair will appoint the following committee pursuant to the order just made: Senators ALLISON, PLATT, PLUMB, MILLER of New York, COCKRELL, HARRIS, and PAYNE.

FREDERICK W. STEIGELMAN.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer for adoption a resolution, which is in the ordinary form, on the death of an employé of the Senate, allowing six months' pay. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The resolution was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to the widow of Frederick W. Steigelman, deceased, late mail-carrier in the post-office of the Senate, the sum of $600, being an amount equal to six months' salary as mail-carrier aforesaid, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

REPORT OF POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE ON POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SAWYER. I hope the Senator from New York will withdraw the motion and allow the resolution to pass.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, I do not see the Senator from Delaware in his seat.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate do now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

THURSDAY, April 2, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

Mr. HOAR. I notice that in journalizing the motion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] yesterday that a special committee authorized by a resolution of the Senate be appointed by the Chair, the Journal recites the motion and the vote as a motion that the committee should be appointed "by the Vice-President." I understand that under the Constitution the Vice-President is President of the Senate, and that it is in his capacity as President of the Senate that this particular authority is intrusted to him. If the chair had been vacated for a day and a President pro tempore appointed, that authority would have passed to him under the vote of the Senate, although the office of Vice-President would not of course have devolved upon him.

I merely call attention to the fact. I think in future the distinction should be preserved in the Journal.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know what the precedents are in the past. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts is a correct one and conforms to the old custom, but I am not sure of that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary of the Senate informs the Chair that the custom is uniform in accordance with the present Journal.

Mr. HOAR. I do not ask any change in the Journal, but I think the custom should be changed. If the Journal Clerk has inadvertently fallen into such a custom, whether it is recent or remote, I think in future it should be changed. The practical importance of the question is what I have stated. If the authority be conferred upon the President of the Senate, it devolves upon anybody who holds the office of President of the Senate, temporarily or permanently, and I do not understand that the Senate can confer under the Constitution any additional authority upon the Vice-President in his capacity as a high officer of the Government, except so far as he is President of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. The rules recognize him as presiding officer always.

Mr. HOAR. Always.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Unless there be objection the Journal as read will be approved. [A pause.] It is approved.

CONDITION OF GENERAL GRANT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair has received additional bulletins in regard to the condition of General Grant. If it be the pleasure of the Senate they will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, April 2—11 o'clock a. m.

The following has just been issued:

"The General is now resting easily on his couch, only Harrison, his colored servant, being in attendance. He has rallied considerably within the last hour, and there is now said to be no danger for several hours at least."

NEW YORK, 11 o'clock and 20 minutes a. m.

General Grant is failing rapidly.

CHEROKEE INDIAN APPROPRIATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay before the Senate the resolution submitted on the 31st of March by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. MORGAN. Before that is taken up I ask leave to offer a resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama offers a resolution which will be read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish for the information of the Senate copies of all papers and correspondence filed in his office since the 4th day of March, 1885, relating to the appropriation of $300,000 for the Cherokee Nation of Indians and the alleged misappropriation of a portion thereof.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN and Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read again.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be again read.

The resolution was read.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that lie over until to-morrow.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. There being objection, the resolution will lie over until to-morrow.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After three hours and fifty-three minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

During the executive session,

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed by the Chair to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, unless he may have some further communication to make, the Senate is ready to adjourn without day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. HOAR and Mr. CAMDEN the committee.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that, if he have no further communication to make, the Senate is ready to adjourn, were about to obey the instruction of the Senate when they received from the private secretary of the President a communication to the effect that the President had instructed him to say to the committee of the Senate formerly appointed that he had no further communication to make and knew no reason why the Senate should not adjourn after disposing of the nominations already made. The committee being of opinion that it is unnecessary to take any further steps in obedience to the instruction of the Senate, will consider themselves discharged unless the Senate shall otherwise order.

FREDERICK W. STEIGELMAN.

Mr. CHACE (after the doors were opened). I ask leave to report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a resolution referred yesterday and recommend that it be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island reports from the Committee on Contingent Expenses a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. SHERMAN:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to the widow of Frederick W. Steigelman, deceased, late mail-carrier in the post-office of the Senate, the sum of $600, being an amount equal to six months' salary as mail-carrier aforesaid, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. CHACE. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

REPORT OF POST-OFFICE COMMITTEE ON POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] on March 31.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, directed to omit from the bound copies of Senate reports the paper purporting to be part 3 of Report No. 577, first session Forty-eighth Congress, said paper not having been prepared under the authority of said committee or printed by its direction.

Mr. SAULSBURY. In the debate that was had the morning when I introduced that resolution there were perhaps some remarks made which might seem to reflect on the late clerk of the committee. He has placed in my hands an affidavit which discloses his connection with the transaction, and I ask that this affidavit of the clerk may be read. I desire to say that the service of Mr. Fox, while clerk of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads for a number of years, impressed me favorably with his integrity and intelligence, and I do not believe that he has done anything but what in his judgment he believed to be perfectly right. I ask therefore that his affidavit may be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The paper will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 2, 1885.

To the Senate of the United States:

Having noticed by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the proceedings of March 31 that after the resolution of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to suppress part 3, Report No. 577, on the postal telegraph had been laid before the Senate, and the matter explained by members of the committee, a Senator expressed himself as understanding that the statements of the members of the committee were to the effect that the document was a "total fabrication" and that "it was never seen by any member of the committee," I deem it in the interest of truth and but just to myself that I furnish the following statement to your honorable body:

Part 3 of Report 577, in question, consists:

1. Of the questions propounded to the president of the Western Union Telegraph Company during the progress of his examination under several resolutions of the Senate. These questions were omitted from part 2 of the report by an oversight and are necessary to the intelligent reading of the testimony.

2. Of about sixty extracts from newspapers, about thirty from papers in the Associated Press, and about thirty from papers outside the Associated Press, intended to show "the action of the Associated Press in furnishing reports of the Presidential election November, 1884," these extracts are plainly designated as "press comments," are properly credited to each newspaper, and, like the matter contained in part 2 of the report, are appendixed to the report proper. They pertain to the "free and independent use of the telegraph by the press," which subject the committee was directed to inquire into by the resolution of Mr. PLATT, January 29, 1884.

During the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress I was instructed by the chairman of the committee, Mr. Hill, to prepare the above material for the Printer, which was to form an appendix to the report already printed. I had informed the chairman that it was customary when the chairman of a committee made a report on a subject of special interest to himself, for the committee and the Senate to allow him to prepare the report in his own way and time, so long as the important conclusions of the report were concurred in by a majority of the committee. I still believe that advice to be well founded. I proceeded with the work of arranging and copying as I had time between my various duties as clerk of the committee; but when the adjournment of Congress approached it found me with the work uncompleted. On the 3d or 4th of March I mentioned the fact to the printing clerk, in the office of the Secretary, and told him I would like to have the copy sent over to the Printer at my convenience after the 4th of March. I had always transacted such business with this clerk, known as the printing clerk in the Secretary's office, and supposed he had entire charge of such matters. I was not referred to any other department of the Secretary's office, but given to understand that my request would be attended to. About the close of the next week I had the copy ready for the Printer. As the materials furnished me only required copying and arranging I did not deem it necessary to submit the copy when prepared to Mr. Hill; and about 2 or 3 p. m. on the 14th of March (not the 16th) I took the same to the Secretary's office, intending to deliver it to the printing clerk, Mr. Bartlett. Not finding him there, and being unable to learn his whereabouts, I left it on his desk with the request in writing that he would send it to the Printer, have two hundred extra copies printed for the use of the committee (as had been done with all previous prints), and have the proof delivered to me for correction. The requisition shows that the copy was sent to the Printer on the 16th of March. I received the proof some days after.

Journal Clerk Spencer, in his report of March 30, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, states that—

"On the 16th of the present month it seems Mr. Fox, clerk of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, came to Mr. Bartlett, who has charge of the miscellaneous printing and binding for the use of Senators and committees on requisition of the Secretary of the Senate, and asked for a requisition to print for the use of the committee two hundred extra copies of a document which Mr. Bartlett did not closely examine."

This statement is not correct, as I have shown above, and conveys a wrong impression. Had it been intimated to me by any one in the office of the Secretary, as might have been done at any time between the 3d and the 16th of March, that what I requested was unusual or irregular, it could not have been done and I would not have asked it.

In the same report of Journal Clerk Spencer prominence is given to the fact that the "heading" placed by me upon the manuscript copy was "the usual heading placed by Mr. Williams, the bill clerk, on reports ordered printed by the Senate." It is stated also that the other clerk, Mr. Bartlett, "assumed from the heading of the document that the transaction was regular," and also that "the authority of the Printer for the composition and printing of the regular number is the heading of the document." Such statements are calculated to convey the idea that there is a peculiar heading used in the Secretary's office by the use of which, in this instance, an appearance of regularity was given to the document, the printing clerk disarmed, and the Public Printer deceived, when, as a matter of fact, no such peculiar heading exists. The heading I used was merely one torn from an old print in the committee-room to save that much writing.

Trusting that the above statement of facts will aid the Senate in properly disposing of the matter, and relieve me of any suspicion of improper conduct,

I am, yours, very respectfully,

GILBERT D. FOX,
Late Clerk of Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

WASHINGTON CITY.
District of Columbia, ss:

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 2d day of April, 1885.

R. B. NIXON,
Notary Public.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What action shall be taken on the communication? Shall it lie on the table?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let it lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire it to be printed?

Mr. SAULSBURY. No, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The communication will lie on the table. The question is on the resolution submitted by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

The resolution was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, at all times the man who willfully and maliciously bears false witness against another, the assassin of character, has been regarded as an outlaw and unworthy of the association or the notice of respectable and honest people. An instance of this kind of person is to be found in the writer, whoever he may be, of an article published in the Brookville Register, a newspaper published in the town of Brookville, Fla., which is as follows:

SENATOR CALL SAYS IT SMELLS BAD.

The old battle-scarred soldier of the Seminole war (the payment for whose services has been due and unpaid for thirty years) as well as the owners of the scrip, must feel as if an icicle had passed down their backs when the testimony before the Indian war committee brought out the fact that Senator CALL did all he could to prevent the payment, going so far as to characterize the matter as a fraud, and saying that it smelt badly, thus defeating the measure, while other States, whose Senators have labored to secure the rights of their citizens, have long since secured payment of similar claims.

The Legislature that made Senator CALL a Senator passed resolutions setting up the justice of this claim. Then, in pronouncing it a fraud and denominating it as smelling badly, he assails the character of the men who made him as well the owners of the same, who depended upon him to see justice done them. Yet in his testimony he does not know even the nature of the claim, except as it appears from others. "It smells badly." This may appear a little rough, but the committee drew out these facts, and the majority of this committee were his friends, and he was before them and did not deny the charge, failing to do which he stands as admitting the same, self-convicted.

If ever a claim was a just one this one is, and we will say to Senator CALL, the right man is after you, and you shall work under the lash, and this claim, so just and so long deferred, shall be settled. It is the only great claim Florida has ever had and amounts to nearly $1,000,000.

Moneys due the State, also the school fund, are by the United States Government being wrongfully covered into the United States Treasury to the extent of $100,000, which is filled to overflowing, and our State and schools are a direct burden upon the people. All this because of an apparent showing of indebtedness on the part of the State.

Next week we will publish this evidence in full for the benefit of our readers. CALL is our Senator, and as such entitled to our support when right, but no man can expect this when he is wrong.

This great claim is largely owned in this and other Southern counties by men who took it many years ago as cash, never dreaming it smelt bad, who have warmly indorsed CALL as a man, and they must find it hard to believe their hearty love and support of him should leave it possible for him to pay them thus. Our columns are open to CALL or any friends who choose or can explain.

This is a subject of some interest to the people of Florida, and the object of this malicious and false statement is to injure me in the good opinions of the people of that part of the State, and as the article is a willfully false statement of the action of Congress and my own action on the subject, I take this occasion in my place in the Senate to correct it and brand the falsehood and its author.

In the first place, it is a falsehood that I ever said the claim "smelled badly;" in the second place, it is another falsehood that I either defeated it or had anything to do with defeating it, as the letters herewith presented from Governor Bloxham, Senator HAMPTON, and Senator JONES will show the people of the State. All this the writer of this shameless article must have known. In the third place, there never was any claim before Congress out of which it was proposed to pay the Indian war soldiers or the holders of scrip one cent except the bill herewith presented which I introduced, being a bill requiring that this money when paid to the State shall be appropriated by the State to the payment of the Indian war soldiers instead of going into the pocket of Mr. S. I. Wailes, the State agent, as the journals of Congress will show; also providing for the payment of the unaudited and unpaid claims of soldiers and of the unpaid Indian war scrip.

The bill intended to be referred to in this article in the Register was a bill by Senator JONES which was reported favorably by Senator HAMPTON, of South Carolina, to reimburse the State for its expenditures on account of Indian war hostilities, not to pay the soldiers and the scrip owners. This bill was defeated and laid over, not by me, but by Senator JONES at Governor Bloxham's request, because Governor Bloxham found out, and so wrote to Senator JONES, as his letter here published will show, that of the $92,600 proposed to be paid to the State in money Mr. S. I. Wailes claimed about $62,000 under an alleged contract for collecting the claim, with which he had just as little to do as the writer of this shameless article has with the truth. The bill, therefore, would have been, if it had then passed, a bill to rob the Indian war soldiers, and the scrip-holders, and the State, for the benefit of Mr. S. I. Wailes. However this may be, I had nothing to do with it. Governor Bloxham's letter was not addressed to me, but to Senator JONES, and it was Senator JONES who stated the fact to the Senate, and not me. I heartily approve his action in the premises, and had the letter been addressed to me should have done as he did; and the action of my colleague was, and the effect of the bill I introduced would have been to prevent the robbery of the Indian war soldiers and the scrip-holders, and to defeat a fraudulent claim against the State for $62,000. At every session since I have been in the Senate, as the records will show, I have introduced bills and made speeches for pensions to the Florida Seminole war soldiers and for bounty lands to them, and I have introduced a bill for the payment of the scrip and of the soldiers with the money to be paid the State, and it will take something more than this unblushing falsehood to rob me of this just reputation in the minds of the people of South Florida.

Governor HAMPTON has made this statement before through the correspondent of the Times-Union, so there is no excuse for the willful falsehoods of the Brookville Register. The press is one of the most honorable and useful agencies of modern time, and the men who are connected with it are many of them the highest type of citizens and men of learning and character. They owe it to themselves and the country to purge themselves of the despicable creatures who make a business of falsehood and slander.

Senator CALL had nothing to do with the defeat of the resolution to pay the State of Florida $92,600 to reimburse Indian war expenses. I asked that it be laid over at Governor Bloxham's request. See his letter.

The resolution had nothing to do with the payment of scrip or the Indian war soldiers. It was to reimburse the State for expenses already incurred, and at the suggestion of Governor Bloxham it was recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs with the hope that a more favorable settlement could be obtained.

C. W. JONES.

UNITED STATES SENATE, Washington, D. C., March 31, 1885.

MY DEAR SIR: I have seen an article from the Brookville Register reflecting on you "for defeating," as it says, the joint resolution providing for the payment to the State of Florida the expenses incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the Seminole war. In justice to you I must say that you did not defeat, nor prevent in any way, the passage of this resolution, and the Register is utterly mistaken in the statement about this matter. The resolution was reported from the Military Committee by myself and was recommitted to the committee on the request of Senator JONES, who acted in pursuance, as I understood, of a letter from Governor Bloxham, asking that the resolution should not pass in its present form.

I am, very truly, yours,

WADE HAMPTON.

Hon. WILKINSON CALL.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE, Tallahassee, Fla., April 11, 1884.

DEAR JONES: Your favor of the 7th has been received and considered. After advising with many members of our State government, I sent the telegram about the Indian claim. Now, my dear Senator, I will give you our reasons according to the settlement proposed in the Hampton report. The State would receive the difference between the $224,000 allowed by the Secretary of War and the 132,000 of our bonds held by the Indian trust fund, or $92,000 in cash and our 132 bonds.

Governor Drew made a contract with Mr. Wailes to allow him 15 per cent. I supposed, when we assented at last Congress, that it was 15 per cent. upon the money we received. But Mr. Wailes claims the 15 per cent. on the money, and on the 132,000 bonds and on the interest due on those bonds or the coupons representing said interest. When in Jacksonville last February Mr. Wailes and myself called on Governor Drew and he interpreted the contract as Mr. Wailes did. Now take $132,000 in bonds, interest on same $240,000, and $92,000 in cash, making $464,000 upon which Mr. Wailes would claim 15 per cent. interest, you see at once, after deducting his commission from the cash we receive, there would be but an insignificant sum to turn into the treasurer. It would be too small to be satisfactory. I think it had better go over than, practically, for all we receive in cash to go in the shape of commissions.

Believe me, your friend, truly,

W. D. BLOXHAM.

Hon. C. W. JONES,
United States Senate.

[S. 822.—Forty-eighth Congress, first session.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, December 19, 1883.

Mr. CALL asked, and, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to bring in the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill providing for the auditing and payment of claims of soldiers who served in the several Indian wars in Florida.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the claims of soldiers who were mustered into the United States service in the several Indian wars in Florida, who have not received their pay, shall be audited and paid.

SEC. 2. That the claims of soldiers who served in the said Indian wars in Florida for horses furnished by them and lost in the service shall be audited and paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States otherwise unappropriated.

SEC. 3. That where money shall be paid by the United States to the State of Florida, or any other State, to reimburse it for money paid for organizing and maintaining troops for defense against the Indians, if any of the troops which served in such war have been charged for and allowed in the settlement with such State, such money shall be paid on condition that the State shall agree to apply the said money first to the payment of such troops; and the said money shall not be used by the said State for any other purpose until such troops have received their pay: Provided, That in the case of the State of Florida this act shall not prevent the payment by the State of Florida to Letitia K. Beard for the services of her husband, William K. Beard, as agent of the State of Florida in the settlement of said accounts.

[Senate Report No. 995, Forty-seventh Congress, second session.]

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

February 16, 1883, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted the following report (to accompany bill S. 2098):

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2098) "to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities," beg leave to submit the following report:

In accordance with the requirements of the joint resolution of Congress approved March 3, 1881, the Secretary of War has investigated, audited, and made a report to Congress, May 22, 1882, of the amount due the State of Florida for expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities in that State between the 1st day of December, 1855, and the 1st day of January, 1860. (Executive Document No. 203, Forty-seventh Congress, first session.)

The expenditures grew out of the Seminole war of 1855, 1856, and 1857, the State authorities being compelled, in the presence of an anticipated and subsequently actual outbreak of the Indians, to call forth the militia of the State, the force of United States troops then on duty being inadequate to the protection of the people. The report of the Secretary of War (Executive Document No. 203) fully sets forth in detail the items of expenditure allowed and disallowed, the total amount found due the State being the sum of $224,648.09.

It is established that the funds at the command of the executive of the State of Florida in the years referred to were insufficient to equip, supply, and pay the troops in the field, and, relying upon the approval given by the President of the United States and the Secretary of War, on the 21st day of May, 1857, of the services of these volunteers, the State Legislature, in order to provide their equipment and maintenance, authorized the issue of 7 per cent. bonds.

A portion of the bonds, amounting to $132,000, was sold by the governor to the Indian trust fund of the United States, and the proceeds of such sale were disbursed by the treasurer of the State for the "expenses of Indian hostilities," as appears from his report to the Legislature for the year ending October 31, 1857. Another portion was hypothecated to the banks of South Carolina and Georgia as security for a loan of $222,015, and $192,331 of this loan was disbursed directly by a disbursing agent of the State in payment of "expenses of Indian hostilities," including pay of volunteers.

The portion of the bonds sold to the United States for the "Indian trust fund" is still held by that fund and accrued interest since 1857.

The State of Florida paid out through a disbursing agent, as shown by War Department report	$193,330 16
And through warrants from State treasurer	78,056 11
Total		271,386 27
Interest on this sum from January 1, 1857, to April 1, 1883		$498,672 27
Total cost to the State to date		770,058 54

We quote from a statement made by the United States Treasurer of the State indebtedness to the "Indian trust fund," June 12, 1882, as follows:

Loan on 7 per cent. bonds of the State of Florida	$132,000
Coupons due and unpaid January 1, 1877	138,040
Interest to July 1, 1882, from January 1, 1857	50,820
Interest from July 1, 1882, to April 1, 1883	6,930
		327,790 00
Due the State		442,268 54

There appears, therefore, lawfully due the State of Florida, according to the State treasurer's account, the sum of $770,058.54, being the principal and interest of the sums which she borrowed and expended on behalf of the United States.

If from this sum be deducted the amount loaned the State by the Indian trust fund, principal and interest, $327,790, there still remains due the State the sum of $442,268.54.

In auditing the accounts of the State, however, the Secretary of War has disallowed many items under the rules and regulations governing payments to the regular forces, and yet, with all his disallowances, after an exhaustive examination, he finds due $224,648.09. Now, if we add the interest on this sum from January 1, 1857, to April 1, 1883, to wit, $412,790.86, we have $637,438.95. Now, if we deduct the amount due the Indian trust fund, to wit, $327,790, there is still due the State the sum of $309,648.95.

This case is one where the Government, through the President of the United States and Secretary of War, promised to pay these troops when mustered into the United States service, and they would have been long since paid by the Government, if so mustered, but the mustering officer arrived in the State after they had been mustered out, and the State was compelled to borrow money with which to pay them.

Congress has universally paid interest to the States where they have paid interest. We cite the cases where interest has been allowed and paid for moneys advanced during the war of 1812-'15 as follows: Virginia, act March 3, 1825 (4 Stat. at L., page 132); Maryland, act May 13, 1826 (4 Stat. at L., page 161); Delaware, act May 20, 1826 (4 Stat. at L., page 175); New York, act May 22, 1826 (4 Stat. at L., page 192); Pennsylvania, act March 3, 1827 (4 Stat. at L., page 241); South Carolina, act March 22, 1832 (4 Stat. at L., page 499); Massachusetts, July 8, 1870 (16 Stat. at L., page 198).

Thus it will be seen that the precedent for the payment of interest under the rule adopted for the settlement of claims of war of 1812-'15 is well established.

The committee are of the opinion that the urgent necessity for the services of these troops and the action of the President and the Secretary of War create an equitable obligation on the part of the General Government; and as the State of Florida not only borrowed money from the Indian trust fund, but also from the banks of the States of Georgia and South Carolina, for their payment, upon which the State has since paid interest, your committee have concluded to recommend the sum of $92,648.09 as a full payment to the State of all Indian war claims, this being the difference after deducting the sum borrowed by the State from the Indian trust fund ($132,000) from the amount found due the State by the Secretary of War ($224,648.09), and to further recommend the delivery to the State of all bonds and coupons held by the trustee of the Indian trust fund.

The committee have amended the bill in accordance with the views expressed in this report, and they recommend the passage of the bill as thus amended. Accompanying the report is a communication from the Secretary of War, explaining the origin and the present condition of the claim of the State of Florida against the Government of the United States.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m). I move that the Senate do now adjourn sine die.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate do now adjourn sine die. Senators in favor of that motion will say "ay;" those opposed will say "no" (putting the question). Before announcing the result of the vote, Senators, I desire to express to you my obligation and thanks for the kindness and support that I have received at your hands. The motion is agreed to; and the Senate stands adjourned sine die.

FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE FORTY-NINTH CONGRESS.

FIRST SESSION.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 7, 1885.

The first Monday of December being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Forty-ninth Congress commenced this day.

The Senators assembled in the Senate Chamber in the Capitol at Washington city.

PRAYER.

Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, it behooveth those who would have audience with Thee to come into Thy presence with reverence and godly fear. So would we come this morning.

It is remembered by Thy servants here convened that they represent the interests of a Christian people; and it is fitting that before engaging in the legislative business of the hour we should make glad recognition of the high claims of Him with whom we have to do.

In Thy hands are the issues of national as of individual life, and it is because of Thy favor that we have been spared and are yet numbered among the nations of the earth. Thou hast given us peace at home and made us at peace with all the world. Thou hast protected us from "the pestilence that walketh in darkness, and the destruction that wasteth at noonday." Thou hast maintained the high court of this nation in its judicial and its numerical integrity. For these and all Thy providential preservations be pleased, O God, this morning to accept our thanks.

Especially grateful are we for that kind providence that hath preserved the life and health of our Chief Executive. Be pleased to continue Thy defenses round about him. May he be shielded from all danger; may he be proof against all evil influences; and may he be spared to administer the will of the people in the fear of God.

It is of Thy mercy that so goodly a number of these Senators are permitted to occupy their places here this morning and address themselves to the high work for which they have been set apart. Be with them as by Thy grace they engage again in the exacting duties of a legislative session.

We grieve that since we last assembled in this room death has been so specially busy in the ranks of men and has recruited his grim armies from among the very chiefest of our people. He has knocked at the House of Representatives, and in recognition of his unwelcome visit the flags upon the Capitol have fluttered downward, signaling the earth to open and receive the nation's dead. Once and again has he demanded the unconditional surrender of those who had led our armies and who had ridden in safety through the wild storm of many a battle. But his summons was not to pass unheeded, and our heroic chieftains, laden with death's icy chains, are at last also numbered among his captives.

He has crowded his way into this Chamber, and at his stern behest the chief seat in the higher legislative body of the Republic has been declared vacant, and its occupant has been transported to "that undiscovered country from whose bourne no traveler returns." Encurtained by the shadows of this recent sad bereavement, enable us rightly to estimate the character and religiously to emulate the many virtues of the distinguished dead.

O God, death is Thy servant, yet while we pray he is pressing his relentless way toward other of these seats, which must also soon be hung with somber drapery except Thou do restrain. Bid him, oh bid him for a time, withdraw his withering gaze from our chief citizens, that they may recover strength before they go hence to be no more.

Our petition is before the God of Nations. Answer it, we pray Thee, according to Thy riches in glory, by Christ Jesus, our Redeemer. Amen.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The SECRETARY (ANSON G. MCCOOK). The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. Secretary, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Vermont offers a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk (CHARLES W. JOHNSON read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN SHERMAN, a Senator from the State of Ohio, be, and he hereby is, chosen President pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. Secretary, I am requested and instructed by my associates on this side of the Chamber to move to strike out "JOHN SHERMAN, a Senator from the State of Ohio," and insert "ISHAM G. HARRIS, a Senator from the State of Tennessee," in the resolution just offered.

The SECRETARY. The question will be first upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to the resolution of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. VOORHEES. On which I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out of the resolution the words "JOHN SHERMAN, a Senator from the State of Ohio," and insert in lieu thereof the words "ISHAM G. HARRIS, a Senator from the State of Tennessee."

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECK (when his name was called). I am paired on this question with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is detained from the Chamber by sickness. I should vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator will allow me to state that in view of the fact that the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] is not present, I have taken the liberty of transferring the pair of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] to the Senator from Florida, so that the Senator from West Virginia is at liberty to vote if he chooses.

Mr. CAMDEN. Very well; I vote "yea," then.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I agreed to pair with the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER], who is detained at home by sickness. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON] is also absent just now. I transfer the pair and withhold my vote.

Mr. CULLOM (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Nevada, was called). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is paired with his colleague [Mr. FAIR], both of whom are absent.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CALL. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida] is absent from the city, detained by illness.

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 34; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Berry,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Vest,
Brown,	George,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Gibson,	Morgan,	Walthall,
Call,	Gorman,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Camden,	Gray,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Jackson,	Ransom,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,

NAYS—34.

Aldrich,	Evarts,	Miller of N. Y.,	Sawyer,
Allison,	Frye,	Mitchell,	Sewell,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Morrill,	Spooner,
Chace,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Stanford,
Conger,	Hoar,	Pike,	Teller,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Platt,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	McMillan,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dolph,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Edmunds,	Manderson,	Sabin,

ABSENT—10.

Beck,	Hale,	Jones of Florida,	Sherman.
Bowen,	Hampton,	Jones of Nevada,
Fair,	Harris,	Miller of Cal.,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VOORHEES. That vote exhausts my call for the yeas and nays, and, of course, I do not renew it on the adoption of the main resolution.

The SECRETARY. The question recurs on the main resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

The resolution was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The Secretary requests the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] to escort the President pro tempore to the chair.

Mr. SHERMAN was escorted from his seat by Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. VOORHEES, and, the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him by Mr. EDMUNDS, he took the chair as President pro tempore of the Senate and said:

Senators, I return you my grateful thanks for the high honor you have conferred upon me.

In common with all the people of the United States I share in profound sorrow for the death of the Vice-President, specially designated by the Constitution to act as President of the Senate. It is an impressive lesson of the uncertain tenure by which we all hold office and life. The contingency has happened which compels you now at the beginning of the session to choose a President pro tempore.

In assuming this position without special aptitude or experience as a presiding officer, I feel that for a time at least I shall have often to appeal to the habitual courtesy and forbearance of Senators. Fortunately the rules of the Senate are simple and clear. My aim will be to secure the ready and kindly obedience and enforcement of them, so that in an orderly way the sense of the majority may be ascertained and the rights of the minority may be protected.

I can only say, Senators, that while I hold this position I will endeavor to the utmost of my ability to be just and impartial and I invoke from each of you assistance and forbearance.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented the credentials of JOHN A. LOGAN, chosen by the Legislature of Illinois a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1885; which were read.

Mr. PIKE presented the credentials of HENRY W. BLAIR, chosen by the Legislature of New Hampshire a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1885; which were read.

Mr. BLAIR and Mr. LOGAN advanced to the Vice-President's desk, escorted respectively by Mr. PIKE and Mr. CULLOM, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to them, they took their seats in the Senate.

SENATORS PRESENT.

The following Senators were present: From the State of—Alabama—John T. Morgan and James L. Pugh.
Arkansas—James H. Berry and James K. Jones.
California—Leland Stanford.
Colorado—Henry M. Teller.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of the daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock m; until otherwise ordered.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has chosen Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, a Senator from the State of Ohio, President of the Senate pro tempore, the office of Vice-President having become vacant by the death of the late Thomas A. Hendricks.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled, and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the President of the United States that the Senate has chosen Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, a Senator from the State of Ohio, President of the Senate pro tempore, the office of Vice-President having become vacant by the death of the late Thomas A. Hendricks.

Mr. EDMUNDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two members be appointed, to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the committee on the part of the Senate; and Messrs. EDMUNDS and HARRIS were appointed.

REPORT OF THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Comptroller of the Currency communicating the twenty-third annual report of that office in compliance with section 333 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The letter was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit to the Senate the question whether this communication shall be printed, or referred to the Committee on Printing. If no motion to refer be suggested, the Chair will put the question on printing the communication.

Mr. PLUMB. That which has been read is only a brief memorandum, as it were, and it seems to me hardly worth while to print it. The report itself is printed with the public documents of the United States in a form with which we are all familiar. I think it might as well go to the proper committee without printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the communication will lie on the table without any order for printing.

RECESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To await the action of the House of Representatives in completing its organization, I move that the Senate take a recess for one-half of one hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate now take a recess for one-half hour.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 1 o'clock, when the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, from information I have, I think there will be no occasion for the sitting of the Senate for say twenty minutes more, and I move a further recess of twenty minutes.

Mr. COCKRELL and others. Let it be half an hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, make it thirty minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate take a further recess until half past 1 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and at the expiration of the recess (at 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate reassembled.

Mr. EDMUNDS (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.). I am advised that it will be about an hour yet before we can receive a communication from the House of Representatives. I therefore move that a further recess of one hour be taken.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess, and at the expiration of the recess (at 2 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the President pro tempore resumed the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

Mr. CLARK, the Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared below the bar of the Senate and delivered the following message:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that there is a quorum of the House of Representatives present, and that JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, has been elected Speaker, and John B. Clark, jr., of the State of Missouri, has been chosen Clerk; and that the House of Representatives is now ready to proceed to business.

It has also resolved that a committee of three be appointed on the part of the House, to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make, and that Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. RANDALL, and Mr. REED have been appointed members of that committee on the part of the House.

DEATH OF VICE-PRESIDENT HENDRICKS.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, in the discharge of the saddest duty of my public life I beg leave to offer resolutions which I send to the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with profound sorrow the intelligence of the death of Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice-President of the United States, and for a number of years a distinguished member of this body.

Resolved, That the business of the Senate be suspended in order that the eminent public services and the private virtues of the deceased may be appropriately commemorated.

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be directed to communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. VOORHEES. I ask that the resolutions lie on the table subject to be called up at a future day, of which the Senate will have due and timely notice.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, out of respect to the memory of the late Vice-President I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will lie on the table. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 7, 1885.

When the State of Nebraska was reached in the call,

The CLERK said: The Clerk desires to state that he has some doubt as to whether the certificates from the State of Nebraska fully comply with the law, but as they are identical with the certificates filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses, and as there is no protest or contest, he has placed the names upon the roll.

The calling of the roll was concluded.

Mr. BENNETT. My colleague, Mr. JOHN S. HENDERSON, is detained at his room by illness.

Mr. DIBBLE. My colleague, Mr. AIKEN, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. LANHAM. My colleague, Mr. CRAIN, is sick and unable to be present.

Mr. VIELE. My colleague, Mr. MULLER, is detained at home by sickness.

The CLERK. Three hundred and nineteen members, more than a quorum, have answered to their names.

Of interest to members and as a matter of permanent record the Clerk presents in tabulated form the changes in the list of members since the election of the Forty-ninth Congress, and requests that it be incorporated in the RECORD. It is as follows:

List of changes since the election of Forty-ninth House of Representatives.

District.	Name.	Date of vacancy.	Successor.
Nineteenth Pennsylvania.	William A. Duncan*.	Nov. 14, 1884	John A. Swope.
Third Arkansas	James K. Jones†	March 4, 1885	Thomas C. McRae.
Eighth New York	Samuel S. Cox†	May 20, 1885	Timothy J. Campbell.
Fifth Illinois	Reuben Ellwood*	July 1, 1885	Albert J. Hopkins.

*Died. †Resigned.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that a quorum of the Senate had assembled, and that that body was now ready to proceed to the transaction of public business.

It further announced that the Senate had elected Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, a Senator from the State of Ohio, President pro tempore of the Senate, the office of Vice-President having become vacant by reason of the death of Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks.

It also announced that a committee, consisting of Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. HARRIS, had been appointed on the part of the Senate to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that Congress was ready to receive any communication he might be pleased to make.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER.

The CLERK. A quorum of members having appeared and answered to their names, the first business in order will be the election of a Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Forty-ninth Congress, and nominations for that office are now in order.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Clerk, I nominate for the office of Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Forty-ninth Congress Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative-elect from the State of Kentucky.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Clerk, I nominate for Speaker of this House the Hon. THOMAS B. REED, a Representative-elect from the State of Maine.

The CLERK. There being no other nominations the Clerk will request Mr. MORRISON of Illinois, Mr. TUCKER of Virginia, Mr. HISCOCK of New York, and Mr. BROWNE of Indiana to act as tellers; and the rules of the House providing that the vote shall be viva voce, the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The roll was called with the following result:

For Mr. John G. Carlisle, of Kentucky—178.

Crain,

Mr. BENNETT (when the name of Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, was called). My colleague, as I have already stated, is detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. VIELE (when the name of Mr. MULLER was called). Mr. MULLER is detained at his home by reason of a serious accident.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Clerk, on behalf of the tellers appointed to canvass the vote for Speaker, I am directed to report that they have agreed in their tally, with this result: Whole number of votes cast 316; of this number Mr. CARLISLE has received 178 votes, and Mr. REED 138.

The CLERK. The House has heard the report of the tellers, showing a total vote cast of 316; of which Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, a member-elect from the State of Kentucky, received 178 votes for the office of Speaker of this House, and Mr. THOMAS B. REED, a member-elect from the State of Maine, received 138. The Clerk therefore declares that Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative-elect from the State of Kentucky, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Forty-ninth Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. TUCKER, of Virginia, and Mr. REED, of Maine, will please escort the Speaker-elect to the chair.

Mr. TUCKER and Mr. REED conducted Mr. CARLISLE to the chair, when the Speaker-elect addressed the House as follows:

Gentlemen of the House of Representatives, in assuming the duties and responsibilities of this place for the second time I beg to return my most profound thanks for this manifestation of your continued confidence. It is a compliment which I shall always remember with pride and gratitude.

Nowhere else in the world can there be found a legislative assembly representing so great a constituency as that represented by this House, and certainly no similar body, consisting of an equal number of members, is its superior in point of ability and fidelity to the interests intrusted to it. The privilege of presiding over the deliberations of such a body is a very high and honorable distinction, the highest and most honorable it can confer upon any of its members, and I appreciate it as such.

But, gentlemen, my full appreciation of your action to-day can best be shown by a conscientious and impartial discharge of my official duties, and, although it may not be wise to make pledges in advance, I venture to promise that to the full extent of my ability the law governing the proceedings of the House shall be evenly administered, with a view to the preservation of order and decorum, the protection of the personal and representative rights of members, and the prompt transaction of the public business. None of these results, however, can be attained without your active co-operation and support.

In a body so large as this, and representing such vast and varied and sometimes conflicting interests, a constant observance of established rules and precedents is imperatively required, not only by considerations vitally affecting the public welfare, but in order to maintain the honor and dignity of the House itself. In the sharp contests for priority, which inevitably occur in such a body, the restraints imposed by fixed rules are sometimes quite severely felt, especially after there has been a large accumulation of business; but experience has shown that the necessity for order and regularity in the consideration of legislative measures is so fully appreciated by gentlemen on the floor that they can be always relied upon to sustain the presiding officer in every proper effort he may make to secure that result. In view of this fact, I feel much more confident of a reasonable degree of success in this trying position than would otherwise be justifiable. Questions of order must be decided promptly as they arise, generally without much opportunity for deliberation, and consequently whoever may be the occupant of this chair, and however careful he may be, mistakes must frequently be committed; but fortunately the House has at all times in its own hands the power to correct them, and preserve the integrity and consistency of its practice; and I am sure you will not hesitate to exercise that power whenever the occasion may demand it.

Gentlemen, we are about to enter upon the work of an important session, more important perhaps than any that has preceded it for many years. The political relations heretofore existing between the two sides of the House and the executive department of the Government have been reversed, and this of itself imposes new duties and obligations upon both.

Under a popular form of government like ours a political change in the executive branch necessarily, to a greater or less extent, involves altered methods of administration, inaugurates new legislative policies, and consequently presents new questions for the consideration of the people and their representatives. It is probable, therefore, that many subjects not heretofore prominent in our deliberations will engage a large share of your attention during the present Congress. It may reasonably be anticipated also that wide differences of opinion will exist upon many of these questions, resulting in long and perhaps exciting contests upon the floor; and it may be that these differences will not always be defined by recognized party lines. Under these circumstances, a proper appreciation of the integrity and patriotism of each other, a sincere respect for the honest opinions of opponents in debate, and the cultivation of a spirit of mutual forbearance and personal regard will be necessary to enable the House to conduct its proceedings with order and deliberation, and avoid unpleasant incidents, which are always most seriously regretted by those who actually participate in them. The House is the only custodian and guardian of its own peace and dignity, and without its cordial support no presiding officer can preserve either.

And now, gentlemen, before taking the oath of office allow me to renew the expression of my sincere acknowledgments for the great honor you have conferred and the great trust you have confided to my hands. I accept them both, I trust, with a proper sense of the important obligations they impose, and certainly with an earnest desire to discharge those obligations without prejudice to any public interest. [Loud applause from both sides of the House.]

Mr. KELLEY, having served longest continuously as a member of the House, administered to the Speaker-elect the oath prescribed.

SWEARING-IN OF MEMBERS.

The SPEAKER proceeded to administer to the members in attendance the oath of office. The Members and Delegates elect presented themselves as their names were called by States and Territories and took the oath prescribed by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes.

ELECTION OF CLERK, SERGEANT-AT-ARMS, ETC.

Mr. TUCKER. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That John B. Clark, jr., of the State of Missouri, be, and is hereby, elected Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress.

That John P. Leedom, of the State of Ohio, be, and is hereby, elected Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress.

That Lycurgus Dalton, of the State of Indiana, be, and is hereby, elected Postmaster of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress.

That Samuel Donelson, of the State of Tennessee, be, and is hereby, elected Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress; and

That Rev. W. H. Milburn, of the State of New York, be, and is hereby, elected Chaplain of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I offer as an amendment to the resolution what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the resolution the name of John B. Clark, jr., of the State of Missouri, and insert in lieu thereof the name of W. O. Crosby, of the State of Iowa.

For Sergeant-at-Arms, strike out the name of John P. Leedom, of the State of Ohio, and insert the name of Albert O. Marsh, of the State of Indiana.

For Postmaster, strike out the name of Lycurgus Dalton, of the State of Indiana, and insert the name of Charles W. Adams, of the State of Maryland.

For Doorkeeper, strike out the name of Samuel Donelson, of the State of Tennessee, and insert the name of Joseph Selden, of the State of Connecticut.

For Chaplain, strike out the name of Rev. W. H. Milburn, of the State of New York, and insert the name of Rev. F. L. Britt, of the State of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. If there be no demand for a division of the question it will be taken on the adoption as a whole of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON.] The Chair does not hear that demand made. The question, then, is upon the adoption of the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Illinois for the resolution offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question being taken, the substitute was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

The officers just elected, with the exception of the Chaplain-elect, who was not in attendance, then presented themselves and took the prescribed oath of office.

NOTIFICATION TO THE SENATE.

Mr. MORRISON. I offer for adoption the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a message be sent to the Senate informing that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that JOHN G. CARLISLE, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, has been elected Speaker, and that John B. Clark, jr., a citizen of the State of Missouri, has been chosen Clerk, and that the House of Representatives is ready to proceed to business.

The resolution was adopted.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. BLOUNT. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to wait on the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as the committee to join the committee on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President, Mr. BLOUNT of Georgia, Mr. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. REED of Maine.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I move that the daily hour of the meeting of the House each day, until further order, be at 12 o'clock m.

The resolution was agreed to.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Speaker, I move that this House do now take a recess until 3 p. m., to await the return of the committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States.

Several MEMBERS. No! No! Let us draw for seats.

Mr. WELLBORN. The House will hardly proceed to draw for seats while the members of the committee just appointed are absent in the discharge of their duty.

The question was taken on the motion for a recess until 3 o'clock p. m.; and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to the assignment of permanent seats of Members and Delegates, in pursuance of the rule of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress on that subject.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. DIBBLE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. AIKEN, being sick, I ask leave of the House to act for him in the selection of a seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] states that his colleague [Mr. AIKEN] is sick, and unable to be in attendance at this time, and therefore asks the privilege of selecting a seat for him when his name is called. Is there objection?

No objection was made, so the request was granted.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask a similar privilege on behalf of my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON of North Carolina.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I move that a like privilege be extended to the colleagues of all absent members.

Several MEMBERS. No! No!

Mr. SPRINGER. The House will desire to know who the gentlemen are that are to select seats for others, and I therefore think each case had better be taken up separately.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. DUNN, moves that the privilege of selecting seats for members not present be extended to the colleagues of all absent members.

A MEMBER. Absent on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER. That is not the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas, as the Chair understands it. The motion is to extend this privilege to the colleagues of all absent members.

Mr. SPRINGER. And Delegates.

The SPEAKER. And Delegates.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Speaker, was not the motion of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] confined to the colleagues of members who are absent by reason of sickness?

The SPEAKER. It was not so qualified.

A MEMBER. It should be so qualified, then.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. DUNN; and it was agreed to.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I move that, preceding the drawing for seats, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, be permitted, in accordance with the custom heretofore observed in his case, to choose his seat. That gentleman has been regarded for several years—I believe ever since the Fortieth Congress—as the Father of the House. Under the rules it has been his privilege and his duty to swear in each succeeding Speaker chosen since that time. The House has always accorded to him the privilege of selecting his seat in this way——

A MEMBER. Not always.

Mr. MILLS. Always, I think, since the time I have mentioned; at least that is my recollection. I think the House has for many years accorded to the gentleman from Pennsylvania the privilege of selecting his seat before the regular drawing, and I move that he be given that privilege now.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. MILLS, asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. KELLEY, may be permitted to select a seat before the regular drawing begins. Is there objection?

Mr. BENNETT. I object.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, we have no rules at present, and therefore, I think, a majority of the House ought to determine this question.

The SPEAKER. But the House has just adopted a resolution to proceed to the regular drawing of seats in accordance with the rule of the Forty-eighth Congress on that subject.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] will do as he did in a previous Congress, indicate what seat he desires, I have no doubt he can have it by the unanimous consent of the Republican side of the House. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed to execute the order of the House in relation to the drawing of seats. As preliminary thereto, the Chair will cause to be read the rule which under the resolution just adopted governs this proceeding.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXXII.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

At the commencement of each Congress, immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in, the Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls of marble or other material equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball, shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

2. Before said drawing shall commence, each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn, no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with this rule, the Chair requests members to retire to the lobbies in the rear of the seats. In order to prevent confusion hereafter, the Chair also suggests that members, as they select their seats, place their names upon the desks, so that the officers of the House may know to what member each seat has been assigned.

The drawing of seats was then proceeded with, commencing at twenty minutes after 2 o'clock and concluding at a quarter before 4 o'clock; the name of Mr. STAHLNECKER being first called, and that of Mr. ATKINSON being the last called.

DEATH OF VICE-PRESIDENT HENDRICKS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the melancholy duty has been assigned to me of announcing to the House that Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice-President of the United States, departed this life at his home in the city of Indianapolis, Ind., on the 25th day of last month. The death, after a long period of public service, of this eminent citizen, holding at the time the second office in the gift of the Republic, and with a reputation in public and private life of unsullied purity, has occasioned expressions of deep-felt grief throughout the whole country. Undoubtedly Congress, acting through both its Houses, will at an early moment set apart an occasion for a proper expression touching the life, character, and public services of the deceased. In view of this announcement, and out of respect for his memory, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 47 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARMER: Petition of Peter Woll & Sons, of the city of Philadelphia, Pa., asking for a refund of duties erroneously paid on importation of quitch-grass root—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition of Otho W. Trendle, for quartermaster's stores and supplies taken from him in Frederick County, Maryland, by the Army of the United States for army use during the war of 1861, and stated at $1,597—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Thomas E. Holmes, for stores and supplies taken or furnished for army use, and stated at $1,059—to the same committee.

Also, petition of William P. Leaman, for quartermaster's stores and supplies taken from him in Montgomery County, Maryland, by the United States Army during the war of 1861, and stated at $1,235.25—to the same committee.

Also, petition of Isabella Hance, for quartermaster's and commissary stores taken or furnished in Montgomery County, Maryland, stated at $7,081.35—to the same committee.

Also, petition of George Phelps, of the District of Columbia, for transportation, labor, and service furnished to the Quartermaster's Department, stated at $3,394.50—to the same committee.

Also, petition of H. N. Lansdale, for quartermaster's stores and supplies taken from him in Frederick County, Maryland, during the war of 1861, by the Army of the United States, stated at $2,312.70—to the same committee.

Also, petition of Samuel D. Piper, of Maryland, for quartermaster's and commissary supplies and stores, stated at $553.90, and request that same be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

Also, petition of Henry Piper, for commissary stores taken for the public service, stated at $652.80, and request that same be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. TUCKER: Petition of J. D. Morrison, of Virginia, for relief from unlawful assessment of taxes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

EUGENE HALE, a Senator from the State of Maine, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS and Mr. HARRIS, the committee appointed in conjunction with a similar committee of the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States, appeared below the bar, and

Mr. EDMUNDS said: Mr. President, the committee appointed by the two Houses of Congress to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House has assembled and organized, and that the two Houses are now ready to receive any communication he may have to make, have performed that duty, and the President of the United States replied that he would send a message in writing to Congress immediately.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

At 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m. Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of the secretaries of the President of the United States, appeared below the bar of the Senate and said:

Mr. President, I am directed by the President of the United States to deliver to the Senate a message in writing.

The message was received from the Secretary and handed to the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Secretary will read.

The Secretary of the Senate read the message, as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

Your assembling is clouded by a sense of public bereavement, caused by the recent and sudden death of Thomas A. Hendricks, Vice-President of the United States. His distinguished public services, his complete integrity and devotion to every duty, and his personal virtues will find honorable record in his country's history.

Ample and repeated proofs of the esteem and confidence in which he was held by his fellow-countrymen were manifested by his election to offices of the most important trust and highest dignity; and at length, full of years and honors, he has been laid at rest amid universal sorrow and benediction.

The Constitution which requires those chosen to legislate for the people to annually meet in the discharge of their solemn trust also requires the President to give to Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall deem necessary and expedient. At the threshold of a compliance with these constitutional directions, it is well for us to bear in mind that our usefulness to the people's interests will be promoted by a constant appreciation of the scope and character of our respective duties as they relate to Federal legislation. While the Executive may recommend such measures as he shall deem expedient, the responsibility for legislative action must and should rest upon those selected by the people to make their laws.

Contemplation of the grave and responsible functions assigned to the respective branches of the Government under the Constitution will disclose the partitions of power between our respective departments and their necessary independence, and also the need for the exercise of all the power intrusted to each in that spirit of comity and co-operation which is essential to the proper fulfillment of the patriotic obligations which rest upon us as faithful servants of the people.

The jealous watchfulness of our constituencies, great and small, supplements their suffrages, and before the tribunal they establish every public servant should be judged.

It is gratifying to announce that the relations of the United States with all foreign powers continue to be friendly. Our position after nearly a century of successful constitutional government, maintenance of good faith in all our engagements, the avoidance of complications with other nations, and our consistent and amicable attitude toward the strong and weak alike, furnish proof of a political disposition which renders professions of good will unnecessary. There are no questions of difficulty pending with any foreign government.

The Argentine Government has revived the long dormant question of the Falkland Islands, by claiming from the United States indemnity for their loss, attributed to the action of the commander of the sloop-of-war Lexington in breaking up a piratical colony on those islands in 1831, and their subsequent occupation by Great Britain. In view of the ample justification for the act of the Lexington and the derelict condition of the islands before and after their alleged occupation by Argentine colonists, this Government considers the claim as wholly groundless.

Question has arisen with the Government of Austria-Hungary touching the representation of the United States at Vienna. Having, under my constitutional prerogative, appointed an estimable citizen of unimpeached probity and competence as minister at that court, the Government of Austria-Hungary invited this Government to take cognizance of certain exceptions, based upon allegations against the personal acceptability of Mr. Keiley, the appointed envoy, asking that, in view thereof, the appointment should be withdrawn. The reasons advanced were such as could not be acquiesced in without violation of my oath of office and the precepts of the Constitution, since they necessarily involved a limitation in favor of a foreign government upon the right of selection by the Executive, and required such an application of a religious test as a qualification for office under the United States as would have resulted in the practical disfranchisement of a large class of our citizens and the abandonment of a vital principle in our Government. The Austro-Hungarian Government finally decided not to receive Mr. Keiley as the envoy of the United States, and that gentleman has since resigned his commission, leaving the post vacant. I have made no new nomination, and the interests of this Government at Vienna are now in the care of the secretary of legation, acting as chargé d'affaires ad interim.

Early in March last, war broke out in Central America, caused by the attempt of Guatemala to consolidate the several states into a single government. In these contests between our neighboring states the United States forebore to interfere actively, but lent the aid of their friendly offices in deprecation of war and to promote peace and concord among the belligerents, and by such counsel contributed importantly to the restoration of tranquillity in that locality.

Emergencies growing out of civil war in the United States of Colombia demanded of the Government at the beginning of this administration the employment of armed force to fulfill its guarantees under the thirty-fifth article of the treaty of 1816, in order to keep the transit open across the Isthmus of Panama. Desirous of exercising only the powers expressly reserved to us by the treaty, and mindful of the rights of Colombia, the forces sent to the Isthmus were instructed to confine their action to "positively and efficaciously" preventing the transit and its accessories from being "interrupted or embarrassed."

The execution of this delicate and responsible task necessarily involved police control where the local authority was temporarily powerless, but always in aid of the sovereignty of Colombia.

The prompt and successful fulfillment of its duty by this Government was highly appreciated by the Government of Colombia, and has been followed by expressions of its satisfaction.

High praise is due to the officers and men engaged in this service.

The restoration of peace on the Isthmus by the re-establishment of the constituted government there being thus accomplished, the forces of the United States were withdrawn.

Pending these occurrences a question of much importance was presented by decrees of the Colombian Government, proclaiming the closure of certain ports then in the hands of insurgents, and declaring vessels held by the revolutionists to be piratical and liable to capture by any power. To neither of these propositions could the United States assent. An effective closure of ports not in the possession of the government, but held by hostile partisans, could not be recognized; neither could the vessels of insurgents against the legitimate sovereignty be deemed hostes humani generis within the precepts of international law, whatever might be the definition and penalty of their acts under the municipal law of the state against whose authority they were in revolt. The denial by this Government of the Colombian propositions did not, however, imply the admission of a belligerent status on the part of the insurgents.

The Colombian Government has expressed its willingness to negotiate conventions for the adjustment by arbitration of claims by foreign citizens arising out of the destruction of the city of Aspinwall by the insurrectionary forces.

The interest of the United States in a practicable transit for ships across the strip of land separating the Atlantic from the Pacific has been repeatedly manifested during the last half-century.

My immediate predecessor caused to be negotiated with Nicaragua a treaty for the construction by and at the sole cost of the United States of a canal through Nicaraguan territory, and laid it before the Senate. Pending the action of that body thereon, I withdrew the treaty for reexamination. Attentive consideration of its provisions leads me to withhold it from resubmission to the Senate.

Maintaining, as I do, the tenets of a line of precedents from Washington's day, which proscribe entangling alliances with foreign states, I do not favor a policy of acquisition of new and distant territory or the incorporation of remote interests with our own.

The laws of progress are vital and organic, and we must be conscious of that irresistible tide of commercial expansion which, as the concomitant of our active civilization, day by day, is being urged onward by those increasing facilities of production, transportation, and communication to which steam and electricity have given birth; but our duty in the present instructs us to address ourselves mainly to the development of the vast resources of the great area committed to our charge, and to the cultivation of the arts of peace within our own borders, though jealously alert in preventing the American hemisphere from being involved in the political problems and complications of distant governments. Therefore, I am unable to recommend propositions involving paramount privileges of ownership or right outside of our own territory, when coupled with absolute and unlimited engagements to defend the territorial integrity of the state where such interests lie. While the general project of connecting the two oceans by means of a canal is to be encouraged, I am of opinion that any scheme to that end to be considered with favor should be free from the features alluded to.

The Tehuantepec route is declared by engineers of the highest repute and by competent scientists to afford an entirely practicable transit for vessels and cargoes, by means of a ship-railway, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The obvious advantages of such a route, if feasible, over others more remote from the axial lines of traffic between Europe and the Pacific, and particularly between the valley of the Mississippi and the western coast of North and South America, are deserving of consideration.

Whatever highway may be constructed across the barrier dividing the two greatest maritime areas of the world must be for the world's benefit, a trust for mankind, to be removed from the chance of domination by any single power, nor become a point of invitation for hostilities or a prize for warlike ambition. An engagement combining the construction, ownership, and operation of such a work by this Government, with an offensive and defensive alliance for its protection, with the foreign state whose responsibilities and rights we would share, is in my judgment inconsistent with such dedication to universal and neutral use, and would, moreover, entail measures for its realization beyond the scope of our national polity or present means.

The lapse of years has abundantly confirmed the wisdom and foresight of those earlier administrations which, long before the conditions of maritime intercourse were changed and enlarged by the progress of the age, proclaimed the vital need of interoceanic transit across the American Isthmus, and consecrated it in advance to the common use of mankind by their positive declarations and through the formal obligation of treaties. Toward such realization the efforts of my administration will be applied, ever bearing in mind the principles on which it must rest, and which were declared in no uncertain tones by Mr. Cass, who, while Secretary of State, in 1858, announced that "what the United States want in Central America, next to the happiness of its people, is the security and neutrality of the interoceanic routes which lead through it."

The construction of three transcontinental lines of railway, all in successful operation, wholly within our territory and uniting the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans, has been accompanied by results of a most interesting and impressive nature, and has created new conditions, not in the routes of commerce only, but in political geography, which powerfully affect our relations toward, and necessarily increase our interests in, any transisthmian route which may be opened and employed for the ends of peace and traffic, or, in other contingencies, for uses inimical to both.

Transportation is a factor in the cost of commodities scarcely second to that of their production, and weighs as heavily upon the consumer.

Our experience already has proven the great importance of having the competition between land carriage and water carriage fully developed, each acting as a protection to the public against the tendencies to monopoly which is inherent in the consolidation of wealth and power in the hands of vast corporations.

These suggestions may serve to emphasize what I have already said on the score of the necessity of a neutralization of any interoceanic transit; and this can only be accomplished by making the uses of the route open to all nations and subject to the ambitions and warlike necessities of none.

The drawings and report of a recent survey of the Nicaragua Canal route, made by Chief Engineer Menocal, will be communicated for your information.

The claims of citizens of the United States for losses by reason of the late military operations of Chile in Peru and Bolivia are the subject of negotiation for a claims convention with Chile, providing for their submission to arbitration.

The harmony of our relations with China is fully sustained.

In the application of the acts lately passed to execute the treaty of 1880, restrictive of the immigration of Chinese laborers into the United States, individual cases of hardship have occurred beyond the power of the Executive to remedy, and calling for judicial determination.

The condition of the Chinese question in the Western States and Territories is, despite this restrictive legislation, far from being satisfactory. The recent outbreak in Wyoming Territory, where numbers of unoffending Chinamen, indisputably within the protection of the treaties and the law, were murdered by a mob, and the still more recent threatened outbreak of the same character in Washington Territory, are fresh in the minds of all, and there is apprehension lest the bitterness of feeling against the Mongolian race on the Pacific slope may find vent in similar lawless demonstrations. All the power of this Government should be exerted to maintain the amplest good faith toward China in the treatment of these men, and the inflexible sternness of the law in bringing the wrongdoers to justice should be insisted upon.

Every effort has been made by this Government to prevent these violent outbreaks and to aid the representatives of China in their investigation of these outrages; and it is but just to say that they are traceable to the lawlessness of men not citizens of the United States engaged in competition with Chinese laborers.

Race prejudice is the chief factor in originating these disturbances, and it exists in a large part of our domain, jeopardizing our domestic peace and the good relationship we strive to maintain with China.

The admitted right of a government to prevent the influx of elements hostile to its internal peace and security may not be questioned, even where there is no treaty stipulation on the subject. That the exclusion of Chinese labor is demanded in other countries where like conditions prevail is strongly evidenced in the Dominion of Canada, where Chinese immigration is now regulated by laws more exclusive than our own. If existing laws are inadequate to compass the end in view, I shall be prepared to give earnest consideration to any further remedial measures, within the treaty limits, which the wisdom of Congress may devise.

The independent state of the Congo has been organized as a government, under the sovereignty of His Majesty the King of the Belgians, who assumes its chief magistracy in his personal character only, without making the new state a dependency of Belgium. It is fortunate that a benighted region, owing all it has of quickening civilization to the beneficence and philanthropic spirit of this monarch, should have the advantage and security of his benevolent supervision.

The action taken by this Government last year in being the first to recognize the flag of the International Association of the Congo has been followed by formal recognition of the new nationality which succeeds to its sovereign powers.

A conference of delegates of the principal commercial nations was held at Berlin last winter to discuss methods whereby the Congo Basin might be kept open to the world's trade. Delegates attended on behalf of the United States on the understanding that their part should be merely deliberative, without imparting to the results any binding character so far as the United States were concerned. This reserve was due to the indisposition of this Government to share in any disposal by an international congress of jurisdictional questions in remote foreign territories. The results of the conference were embodied in a formal act of the nature of an international convention, which laid down certain obligations purporting to be binding on the signatories, subject to ratification within one year. Notwithstanding the reservation under which the delegates of the United States attended, their signatures were attached to the general act in the same manner as those of the plenipotentiaries of other governments, thus making the United States appear, without reserve or qualification, as signatories to a joint international engagement imposing on the signers the conservation of the territorial integrity of distant regions where we have no established interests or control.

This Government does not, however, regard its reservation of liberty of action in the premises as at all impaired; and holding that an engagement to share in the obligation of enforcing neutrality in the remote valley of the Congo would be an alliance whose responsibilities we are not in a position to assume, I abstain from asking the sanction of the Senate to that general act.

The correspondence will be laid before you, and the instructive and interesting report of the agent sent by this Government to the Congo country and his recommendations for the establishment of commercial agencies on the African coast are also submitted for your consideration.

The commission appointed by my predecessor last winter to visit the Central and South American countries and report on the methods of enlarging the commercial relations of the United States therewith has submitted reports, which will be laid before you.

No opportunity has been omitted to testify the friendliness of this Government toward Corea, whose entrance into the family of treaty powers the United States were the first to recognize. I regard with favor the application made by the Corean Government to be allowed to employ American officers as military instructors, to which the assent of Congress becomes necessary, and I am happy to say this request has the concurrent sanction of China and Japan.

The arrest and imprisonment of Julio R. Santos, a citizen of the United States, by the authorities of Ecuador, gave rise to a contention with that government, in which his right to be released or to have a speedy and impartial trial on announced charges, and with all guarantees of defense stipulated by treaty, was insisted upon by us. After an elaborate correspondence, and repeated and earnest representations on our part, Mr. Santos was, after an alleged trial and conviction, eventually included in a general decree of amnesty and pardoned by the Ecuadorian Executive and released, leaving the question of his American citizenship denied by the Ecuadorian Government but insisted upon by our own.

The amount adjudged by the late French and American Claims Commission to be due from the United States to French claimants on account of injuries suffered by them during the war of secession, having been appropriated by the last Congress, has been duly paid to the French Government.

The act of February 25, 1885, provided for a preliminary search of the records of French prize-courts for evidence bearing on the claims of American citizens against France for spoliations committed prior to 1801. The duty has been performed, and the report of the agent will be laid before you.

I regret to say that the restrictions upon the importation of our pork into France continue, notwithstanding the abundant demonstration of the absence of sanitary danger in its use; but I entertain strong hopes that, with a better understanding of the matter, this vexatious prohibition will be removed. It would be pleasing to be able to say as much with respect to Germany, Austria, and other countries, where such food-products are absolutely excluded without present prospect of reasonable change.

The interpretation of our existing treaties of naturalization by Germany during the past year has attracted attention by reason of an apparent tendency on the part of the imperial government to extend the scope of the residential restrictions to which returning naturalized citizens of German origin are asserted to be liable under the laws of the empire. The temperate and just attitude taken by this Government with regard to this class of questions will doubtless lead to a satisfactory understanding.

The dispute of Germany and Spain relative to the domination of the Caroline Islands has attracted the attention of this Government, by reason of extensive interests of American citizens having grown up in those parts during the past thirty years, and because the question of ownership involves jurisdiction of matters affecting the status of our citizens under civil and criminal law. Whilst standing wholly aloof from the proprietary issues raised between powers to both of which the United States are friendly, this Government expects that nothing in the present contention shall unfavorably affect our citizens carrying on a peaceful commerce or there domiciled, and has so informed the Governments of Spain and Germany.

The marked good will between the United States and Great Britain has been maintained during the past year.

The termination of the fishing clauses of the treaty of Washington, in pursuance of the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, must have resulted in the abrupt cessation on the 1st of July of this year, in the midst of their ventures, of the operations of citizens of the United States engaged in fishing in British-American waters, but for a diplomatic understanding reached with Her Majesty's Government in June last, whereby assurance was obtained that no interruption of those operations should take place during the current fishing season.

In the interest of good neighborhood and of the commercial intercourse of adjacent communities, the question of the North American fisheries is one of much importance. Following out the intimation given by me when the extensory arrangement above described was negotiated, I recommend that the Congress provide for the appointment of a commission in which the Governments of the United States and Great Britain shall be respectively represented, charged with the consideration and settlement, upon a just, equitable, and honorable basis, of the entire question of the fishing rights of the two governments and their respective citizens on the coasts of the United States and British North America. The fishing interests being intimately related to other general questions dependent upon contiguity and intercourse, consideration thereof, in all their equities, might also properly come within the purview of such a commission, and the fullest latitude of expression on both sides should be permitted.

The correspondence in relation to the fishing rights will be submitted.

The Arctic exploring steamer Alert, which was generously given by Her Majesty's Government to aid in the relief of the Greely expedition, was, after the successful attainment of that humane purpose, returned to Great Britain, in pursuance of the authority conferred by the act of March 3, 1885.

The inadequacy of the existing engagements for extradition between the United States and Great Britain has been long apparent. The tenth article of the treaty of 1842, one of the earliest compacts in this regard entered into by us, stipulated for surrender in respect of a limited number of offenses. Other crimes, no less inimical to the social welfare, should be embraced, and the procedure of extradition brought in harmony with present international practice. Negotiations with Her Majesty's Government for an enlarged treaty of extradition have been pending since 1870, and I entertain strong hopes that a satisfactory result may be soon attained.

The frontier line between Alaska and British Columbia, as defined by the treaty of cession with Russia, follows the demarkation assigned in a prior treaty between Great Britain and Russia. Modern exploration discloses that this ancient boundary is impracticable as a geographical fact. In the unsettled condition of that region the question has lacked importance, but the discovery of mineral wealth in the territory the line is supposed to traverse admonishes that the time has come when an accurate knowledge of the boundary is needful to avert jurisdictional complications. I recommend, therefore, that provision be made for a preliminary reconnaissance by officers of the United States, to the end of acquiring more precise information on the subject. I have invited Her Majesty's Government to consider with us the adoption of a more convenient line, to be established by meridian observations or by known geographical features without the necessity of an expensive survey of the whole.

The late insurrectionary movements in Hayti having been quelled, the government of that republic has made prompt provision for adjudicating the losses suffered by foreigners because of hostilities there, and the claims of certain citizens of the United States will be in this manner determined.

The long-pending claims of two citizens of the United States, Pelletier and Lazare, have been disposed of by arbitration, and an award in favor of each claimant has been made, which, by the terms of the engagement, is final. It remains for Congress to provide for the payment of the stipulated moiety of the expenses.

A question arose with Hayti during the past year, by reason of the exceptional treatment of an American citizen, Mr. Van Bokkelen, a resident of Port-au-Prince, who, on suit by creditors residing in the United States, was sentenced to imprisonment, and, under the operation of a Haytian statute, was denied relief secured to a native Haytian. This Government asserted his treaty right to equal treatment with natives of Hayti in all suits at law. Our contention was denied by the Haytian Government, which, however, while still professing to maintain the ground taken against Mr. Van Bokkelen's right, terminated the controversy by setting him at liberty without explanation.

An international conference to consider the means of arresting the spread of cholera and other epidemic diseases was held at Rome in May last, and adjourned to meet again on further notice. An expert delegate on behalf of the United States has attended its sessions and will submit a report.

Our relations with Mexico continue to be most cordial, as befits those of neighbors between whom the strongest ties of friendship and commercial intimacy exist, as the natural and growing consequence of our similarity of institutions and geographical propinquity.

The relocation of the boundary line between the United States and Mexico westward of the Rio Grande, under the convention of July 29, 1882, has been unavoidably delayed; but I apprehend no difficulty in securing a prolongation of the period for its accomplishment.

The lately concluded commercial treaty with Mexico still awaits the stipulated legislation to carry its provisions into effect, for which one year's additional time has been secured by a supplementary article signed in February last and since ratified on both sides.

As this convention, so important to the commercial welfare of the two adjoining countries, has been constitutionally confirmed by the treaty-making branch, I express the hope that legislation needed to make it effective may not be long delayed.

The large influx of capital and enterprise to Mexico from the United States continues to aid in the development of the resources and in augmenting the material well-being of our sister republic. Lines of railway, penetrating to the heart and capital of the country, bring the two peoples into mutually beneficial intercourse, and enlarged facilities of transit add to profitable commerce, create new markets, and furnish avenues to otherwise isolated communities.

I have already adverted to the suggested construction of a ship-railway across the narrow formation of the territory of Mexico at Tehuantepec.

With the gradual recovery of Peru from the effects of her late disastrous conflict which Chile, and with the restoration of civil authority in that distracted country, it is hoped that pending war claims of our citizens will be adjusted.

In conformity with notification given by the Government of Peru, the existing treaties of commerce and extradition between the United States and that country will terminate March 31, 1886.

Our good relationship with Russia continues.

An officer of the Navy, detailed for the purpose, is now on his way to Siberia, bearing the testimonials voted by Congress to those who generously succored the survivors of the unfortunate Jeannette expedition.

It is gratifying to advert to the cordiality of our intercourse with Spain.

The long-pending claim of the owners of the ship Masonic, for loss suffered through the admitted dereliction of the Spanish authorities in the Philippine Islands, has been adjusted by arbitration, and an indemnity awarded. The principle of arbitration in such cases, to which the United States have long and consistently adhered, thus receives a fresh and gratifying confirmation.

Other questions with Spain have been disposed of, or are under diplomatic consideration with a view to just and honorable settlement.

The operation of the commercial agreement with Spain, of January 2–February 13, 1884, has been found inadequate to the commercial needs of the United States and the Spanish Antilles, and the terms of the agreement are subjected to conflicting interpretations in those islands.

Negotiations have been instituted at Madrid for a full treaty, not open to these objections, and in the line of the general policy touching the neighborly intercourse of proximate communities, to which I elsewhere advert, and aiming moreover at the removal of existing burdens and annoying restrictions; and although a satisfactory termination is promised, I am compelled to delay its announcement.

An international copyright conference was held at Berne in September, on the invitation of the Swiss Government. The envoy of the United States attended as a delegate, but refrained from committing this Government to the results, even by signing the recommendatory protocol adopted. The interesting and important subject of international copyright has been before you for several years. Action is certainly desirable to effect the object in view. And while there may be question as to the relative advantage of treating it by legislation or by specific treaty, the matured views of the Berne conference can not fail to aid your consideration of the subject.

The termination of the commercial treaty of 1862 between the United States and Turkey has been sought by that government. While there is question as to the sufficiency of the notice of termination given, yet as the commercial rights of our citizens in Turkey come under the favored-nation guarantees of the prior treaty of 1830, and as equal treatment is admitted by the Porte, no inconvenience can result from the assent of this Government to the revision of the Ottoman tariffs, in which the treaty powers have been invited to join.

Questions concerning our citizens in Turkey may be affected by the Porte's non-acquiescence in the right of expatriation and by the imposition of religious tests as a condition of residence, in which this Government can not concur. The United States must hold, in their intercourse with every power, that the status of their citizens is to be respected and equal civil privileges accorded to them without regard to creed, and affected by no considerations save those growing out of domiciliary return to the land of original allegiance, or of unfulfilled personal obligations which may survive, under municipal laws, after such voluntary return.

The negotiation with Venezuela relative to the rehearing of the awards of the Mixed Commission constituted under the treaty of 1866 was resumed in view of the recent acquiescence of the Venezuelan envoy in the principal point advanced by this Government, that the effects of the old treaty could only be set aside by the operation of a new convention. A result in substantial accord with the advisory suggestions contained in the joint resolution of March 3, 1883, has been agreed upon and will shortly be submitted to the Senate for ratification.

Under section 3659 of the Revised Statutes, all funds held in trust by the United States and the annual interest accruing thereon when not otherwise required by treaty, are to be invested in stocks of the United States bearing a rate of interest not less than 5 per cent. per annum. There being now no procurable stocks paying so high a rate of interest, the letter of the statute is at present inapplicable, but its spirit is subserved by continuing to make investments of this nature in current stocks bearing the highest interest now paid. The statute, however, makes no provision for the disposal of such accretions. It being contrary to the general rule of this Government to allow interest on claims, I recommend the repeal of the provision in question, and the disposition, under a uniform rule, of the present accumulations from investment of trust funds.

The inadequacy of existing legislation touching citizenship and naturalization demands your consideration.

While recognizing the right of expatriation, no statutory provision exists providing means for renouncing citizenship by an American citizen, native-born or naturalized, nor for terminating and vacating an improper acquisition of citizenship. Even a fraudulent decree of naturalization can not now be canceled. The privilege and franchise of American citizenship should be granted with care, and extended to those only who intend in good faith to assume its duties and responsibilities when attaining its privileges and benefits; it should be withheld from those who merely go through the forms of naturalization with the intent of escaping the duties of their original allegiance without taking upon themselves those of their new status, or who may acquire the rights of American citizenship for no other than a hostile purpose toward their original governments. These evils have had many flagrant illustrations.

I regard with favor the suggestion put forth by one of my predecessors that provision be made for a central bureau of record of the decrees of naturalization granted by the various courts throughout the United States now invested with that power.

The rights which spring from domicile in the United States, especially when coupled with a declaration of intention to become a citizen, are worthy of definition by statute. The stranger coming hither with intent to remain, establishing his residence in our midst, contributing to the general welfare, and, by his voluntary act, declaring his purpose to assume the responsibilities of citizenship, thereby gains an inchoate status which legislation may properly define. The laws of certain States and Territories admit a domiciled alien to the local franchise, conferring on him the rights of citizenship to a degree which places him in the anomalous position of being a citizen of a State, and yet not of the United States, within the purview of Federal and international law.

It is important within the scope of national legislation to define this right of alien domicile as distinguished from Federal naturalization.

The commercial relations of the United States with their immediate neighbors and with important areas of traffic near our shores suggest especially liberal intercourse between them and us.

Following the treaty of 1883 with Mexico, which rested on the basis of a reciprocal exemption from customs duties, other similar treaties were initiated by my predecessor.

Recognizing the need of less obstructed traffic with Cuba and Porto Rico, and met by the desire of Spain to succor languishing interests in the Antilles, steps were taken to attain those ends by a treaty of commerce. A similar treaty was afterward signed by the Dominican Republic. Subsequently overtures were made by Her Britannic Majesty's Government for a like mutual extension of commercial intercourse with the British West Indian and South American dependencies, but without result.

On taking office, I withdrew for re-examination the treaties signed with Spain and Santo Domingo, then pending before the Senate. The result has been to satisfy me of the inexpediency of entering into engagements of this character not covering the entire traffic.

These treaties contemplated the surrender by the United States of large revenues for inadequate considerations. Upon sugar alone duties were surrendered to an amount far exceeding all the advantages offered in exchange. Even were it intended to relieve our consumers, it was evident that, so long as the exemption but partially covered our importation, such relief would be illusory. To relinquish a revenue so essential seemed highly improvident at a time when new and large drains upon the Treasury were contemplated. Moreover, embarrassing questions would have arisen under the favored-nation clauses of treaties with other nations.

As a further objection, it is evident that tariff regulation by treaty diminishes that independent control over its own revenues which is essential for the safety and welfare of any government. Emergency calling for an increase of taxation may at any time arise, and no engagement with a foreign power should exist to hamper the action of the Government.

By the fourteenth section of the shipping act, approved June 26, 1884, certain reductions and contingent exemptions from tonnage dues were made as to vessels entering ports of the United States from any foreign port in North and Central America, the West India Islands, the Bahamas and Bermudas, Mexico, and the Isthmus as far as Aspinwall and Panama. The Governments of Belgium, Denmark, Germany, Portugal, and Sweden and Norway have asserted, under the favored-nation clause in their treaties with the United States, a claim to like treatment in respect of vessels coming to the United States from their home ports. This Government, however, holds that the privileges granted by the act are purely geographical, enuring to any vessel of any foreign power that may choose to engage in traffic between this country and any port within the defined zone, and no warrant exists under the most-favored-nation clause for the extension of the privileges in question to vessels sailing to this country from ports outside the limitation of the act.

Undoubtedly the relations of commerce with our near neighbors, whose territories form so long a frontier line difficult to be guarded, and who find in our country, and equally offer to us, natural markets, demand special and considerate treatment. It rests with Congress to consider what legislative action may increase facilities of intercourse which contiguity makes natural and desirable.

I earnestly urge that Congress recast the appropriations for the maintenance of the diplomatic and consular service on a footing commensurate with the importance of our national interests. At every post where a representative is necessary, the salary should be so graded as to permit him to live with comfort. With the assignment of adequate salaries the so-called notarial extra-official fees, which our officers abroad are now permitted to treat as personal perquisites, should be done away with. Every act requiring the certification and seal of the officer should be taxable at schedule rates, and the fee therefor returned to the Treasury.

By restoring these revenues to the public use the consular service would be self-supporting, even with a liberal increase of the present low salaries.

In further prevention of abuses, a system of consular inspection should be instituted.

The appointment of a limited number of secretaries of legation at large, to be assigned to duty wherever necessary, and in particular for temporary service at missions which for any cause may be without a head, should also be authorized.

I favor, also, authorization for the detail of officers of the regular service as military or naval attachés at legations.

Some foreign governments do not recognize the union of consular with diplomatic functions. Italy and Venezuela will only receive the appointee in one of his two capacities, but this does not prevent the requirement of a bond and submission to the responsibilities of an office whose duties he can not discharge. The superadded title of consul-general should be abandoned at all missions.

I deem it expedient that a well-devised measure for the reorganization of the extraterritorial courts in Oriental countries should replace the present system, which labors under the disadvantage of combining judicial and executive functions in the same office.

In several Oriental countries generous offers have been made of premises for housing the legations of the United States. A grant of land for that purpose was made some years since by Japan, and has been referred to in the annual messages of my predecessor. The Siamese Government has made a gift to the United States of commodious quarters in Bangkok. In Corea, the late minister was permitted to purchase a building from the government for legation use. In China, the premises rented for the legation are favored as to local charges. At Tangier, the house occupied by our representative has been for many years the property of this Government, having been given for that purpose in 1822 by the Sultan of Morocco. I approve the suggestion heretofore made, that, in view of the conditions of life and administration in the Eastern countries, the legation buildings in China, Japan, Corea, Siam, and perhaps Persia, should be owned and furnished by the Government, with a view to permanency and security. To this end I recommend that authority be given to accept the gifts adverted to in Japan and Siam, and to purchase in the other countries named, with provision for furniture and repairs. A considerable saving in rentals would result.

The World's Industrial Exposition, held at New Orleans last winter, with the assistance of the Federal Government, attracted a large number of foreign exhibits, and proved of great value in spreading among the concourse of visitors from Mexico and Central and South America a wider knowledge of the varied manufactures and productions of this country and their availability in exchange for the productions of those regions.

Past Congresses have had under consideration the advisability of abolishing the discrimination made by the tariff laws in favor of the works of American artists. The odium of the policy which subjects to a high rate of duty the paintings of foreign artists and exempts the productions of American artists residing abroad, and who receive gratuitously advantages and instruction, is visited upon our citizens engaged in art culture in Europe, and has caused them, with practical unanimity, to favor the abolition of such an ungracious distinction; and in their interest, and for other obvious reasons, I strongly recommend it.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury fully exhibits the condition of the public finances and of the several branches of the Government connected with his Department. The suggestions of the Secretary relating to the practical operations of this important Department, and his recommendations in the direction of simplification and economy, particularly in the work of collecting customs duties, are especially urged upon the attention of Congress.

The ordinary receipts from all sources for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, were $322,690,706.38. Of this sum $181,471,939.34 was received from customs and $112,498,725.54 from internal revenue. The total receipts, as given above, were $24,829,163.54 less than those for the year ended June 30, 1884. This diminution embraces a falling off of $13,595,550.42 in the receipts from customs and $9,687,346.97 in the receipts from internal revenue.

The total ordinary expenditures of the Government for the fiscal year were $260,226,935.50, leaving a surplus in the Treasury at the close of the year of $63,463,771.27. This is $40,929,854.32 less than the surplus reported at the close of the previous year.

The expenditures are classified as follows:

For civil expenses	$23,826,942 11
For foreign intercourse	5,439,609 11
For Indians	6,552,494 63
For pensions	56,102,267 49
For the military, including river and harbor improvements and arsenals	42,670,578 47
For the Navy, including vessels, machinery, and improvements of navy-yards	16,021,079 69
For interest on the public debt	51,386,256 47
For the District of Columbia	3,499,650 95
For miscellaneous expenditures, including public buildings, light-houses, and collecting the revenue	54,728,056 21

The amount paid on the public debt during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, was $45,993,235.43; and there has been paid since that date and up to November 1, 1885, the sum of $369,828, leaving the amount of the debt at the last-named date $1,514,475,860.47. There was, however, at that time in the Treasury, applicable to the general purposes of the Government, the sum of $66,818,292.38.

The total receipts for the current fiscal year, ending June 30, 1886, ascertained to October 1, 1885, and estimated for the remainder of the year, are $315,000,000. The expenditures ascertained and estimated for the same time are $245,000,000, leaving a surplus at the close of the year estimated at $70,000,000.

The value of the exports from the United States to foreign countries during the last fiscal year was as follows:

Domestic merchandise	$726,682,946
Foreign merchandise	15,506,809
	742,189,755
Gold	8,477,892
Silver	33,753,633
	784,421,280

Some of the principal exports, with their values and the percentage they respectively bear to the total exportation, are given as follows:

Articles.	Value.	Percentage.
Cotton and cotton manufactures	$213,799,049	29.42
Breadstuffs	160,370,821	22.07
Provisions	107,332,456	14.77
Oils—mineral, vegetable, and animal	54,326,202	7.48
Tobacco and its manufactures	24,767,305	3.41
Wood and its manufactures	21,464,322	2.95

Our imports during the year were as follows:

Merchandise	$579,580,053 80
Gold	26,691,696 00
Silver	16,550,627 00
	622,822,376 80

The following are given as prominent articles of imports during the year, with their values and the percentage they bear to the total importation:

Articles.	Value.	Percentage.
Sugar and molasses	$76,738,713	13.29
Coffee	46,723,318	8.09
Wool and its manufactures	44,656,482	7.73
Silk and its manufactures	40,393,002	6.99
Chemicals, dyes, drugs, and medicines	35,070,816	6.07
Iron and steel and their manufactures	34,563,689	5.98
Flax, hemp, jute, and their manufactures	32,854,874	5.69
Cotton and its manufactures	28,152,001	4.88
Hides and skins other than fur skins	20,586,443	3.56

Of the entire amount of duties collected 70 per cent. was collected from the following articles of import:

	Percentage.
Sugar and molasses	29
Wool and its manufactures	15
Silk and its manufactures	8
Iron and steel and their manufactures	7
Cotton manufactures	6
Flax, hemp, and jute, and their manufactures	5

The fact that our revenues are in excess of the actual needs of an economical administration of the Government justifies a reduction in the amount exacted from the people for its support. Our Government is but the means established by the will of a free people, by which certain principles are applied which they have adopted for their benefit and protection; and it is never better administered and its true spirit is never better observed than when the people's taxation for its support is scrupulously limited to the actual necessity of expenditure, and distributed according to a just and equitable plan.

The proposition with which we have to deal is the reduction of the revenue received by the Government, and indirectly paid by the people from customs duties. The question of free trade is not involved, nor is there now any occasion for the general discussion of the wisdom or expediency of a protective system.

Justice and fairness dictate that in any modification of our present laws relating to revenue the industries and interests which have been encouraged by such laws, and in which our citizens have large investments, should not be ruthlessly injured or destroyed. We should also deal with the subject in such manner as to protect the interests of American labor, which is the capital of our workingmen; its stability and proper remuneration furnish the most justifiable pretext for a protective policy.

Within these limitations a certain reduction should be made in our customs revenue. The amount of such reduction having been determined, the inquiry follows, where can it best be remitted and what articles can best be released from duty, in the interest of our citizens?

I think the reduction should be made in the revenue derived from a tax upon the imported necessaries of life. We thus directly lessen the cost of living in every family of the land, and release to the people in every humble home a larger measure of the rewards of frugal industry.

During the year ended November 1, 1885, one hundred and forty-five national banks were organized, with an aggregate capital of $16,938,000, and circulating notes have been issued to them amounting to $4,274,910. The whole number of these banks in existence on the day above mentioned was 2,727.

The very limited amount of circulating notes issued by our national banks compared with the amount the law permits them to issue, upon a deposit of bonds for their redemption, indicates that the volume of our circulating medium may be largely increased through this instrumentality.

Nothing more important than the present condition of our currency and coinage can claim your attention.

Since February, 1878, the Government has, under the compulsory provisions of law, purchased silver bullion and coined the same at the rate of more than $2,000,000 every month. By this process up to the present date 215,759,431 silver dollars have been coined.

A reasonable appreciation of a delegation of power to the General Government would limit its exercise without express restrictive words to the people's needs and the requirements of the public welfare.

Upon this theory, the authority to "coin money" given to Congress by the Constitution, if it permits the purchase by the Government of bullion for coinage in any event, does not justify such purchase and coinage to an extent beyond the amount needed for a sufficient circulating medium.

The desire to utilize the silver product of the country should not lead to a misuse or the perversion of this power.

The necessity for such an addition to the silver currency of the nation as is compelled by the silver-coinage act is negatived by the fact that up to the present time only about fifty millions of the silver dollars so coined have actually found their way into circulation, leaving more than one hundred and sixty-five millions in the possession of the Government, the custody of which has entailed a considerable expense for the construction of vaults for its deposit. Against this latter amount there are outstanding silver certificates amounting to about $93,000,000.

Every month two millions of gold in the public Treasury are paid out for two millions or more of silver dollars, to be added to the idle mass already accumulated.

If continued long enough, this operation will result in the substitution of silver for all the gold the Government owns applicable to its general purposes. It will not do to rely upon the customs receipts of the Government to make good this drain of gold, because the silver thus coined having been made legal tender for all debts and dues, public and private, at times during the last six months 58 per cent. of the receipts for duties have been in silver or silver certificates, while the average within that period has been 20 per cent. The proportion of silver and its certificates received by the Government will probably increase as time goes on, for the reason that the nearer the period approaches when it will be obliged to offer silver in payment of its obligations, the greater inducement there will be to hoard gold against depreciation in the value of silver, or for the purpose of speculating.

This hoarding of gold has already begun.

When the time comes that gold has been withdrawn from circulation, then will be apparent the difference between the real value of the silver dollar and a dollar in gold, and the two coins will part company. Gold, still the standard of value, and necessary in our dealings with other countries, will be at a premium over silver; banks which have substituted gold for the deposits of their customers may pay them with silver bought with such gold, thus making a handsome profit; rich speculators will sell their hoarded gold to their neighbors, who need it to liquidate their foreign debts, at a ruinous premium over silver, and the laboring men and women of the land, most defenseless of all, will find that the dollar received for the wage of their toil has sadly shrunk in its purchasing power. It may be said that the latter result will be but temporary, and that ultimately the price of labor will be adjusted to the change; but even if this takes place the wage worker can not possibly gain, but must inevitably lose, since the price he is compelled to pay for his living will not only be measured in a coin heavily depreciated, and fluctuating and uncertain in its value, but this uncertainty in the value of the purchasing medium will be made the pretext for an advance in prices beyond that justified by actual depreciation.

The words uttered in 1834 by Daniel Webster in the Senate of the United States are true to-day: "The very man of all others who has the deepest interest in a sound currency, and who suffers most by mischievous legislation in money matters, is the man who earns his daily bread by his daily toil."

The most distinguished advocate of bimetallism, discussing our silver coinage, has lately written:

"No American citizen's hand has yet felt the sensation of cheapness, either in receiving or expending the silver-act dollars."

And those who live by labor or legitimate trade never will feel that sensation of cheapness. However plenty silver dollars may become, they will not be distributed as gifts among the people; and if the laboring man should receive four depreciated dollars where he now receives but two, he will pay in the depreciated coin more than double the price he now pays for all the necessaries and comforts of life.

Those who do not fear any disastrous consequences arising from the continued compulsory coinage of silver as now directed by law, and who suppose that the addition to the currency of the country intended as its result will be a public benefit, are reminded that history demonstrates that the point is easily reached in the attempt to float at the same time two sorts of money of different excellence, when the better will cease to be in general circulation. The hoarding of gold, which has already taken place, indicates that we shall not escape the usual experience in such cases. So if this silver coinage be continued we may reasonably expect that gold and its equivalent will abandon the field of circulation to silver alone. This, of course, must produce a severe contraction of our circulating medium, instead of adding to it.

It will not be disputed that any attempt on the part of the Government to cause the circulation of silver dollars worth eighty cents, side by side with gold dollars worth one hundred cents, even within the limit that legislation does not run counter to the laws of trade, to be successful must be seconded by the confidence of the people that both coins will retain the same purchasing power and be interchangeable at will. A special effort has been made by the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the amount of our silver coin in circulation; but the fact that a large share of the limited amount thus put out has soon returned to the public Treasury in payment of duties, leads to the belief that the people do not now desire to keep it in hand; and this, with the evident disposition to hoard gold, gives rise to the suspicion that there already exists a lack of confidence among the people touching our financial processes. There is certainly not enough silver now in circulation to cause uneasiness; and the whole amount coined and now on hand might after a time be absorbed by the people without apprehension; but it is the ceaseless stream that threatens to overflow the land which causes fear and uncertainty.

What has been thus far submitted upon this subject relates almost entirely to considerations of a home nature, unconnected with the bearing which the policies of other nations have upon the question. But it is perfectly apparent that a line of action in regard to our currency can not wisely be settled upon or persisted in without considering the attitude on the subject of other countries with whom we maintain intercourse through commerce, trade, and travel. An acknowledgment of this fact is found in the act by virtue of which our silver is compulsorily coined. It provides that "the President shall invite the governments of the countries composing the Latin Union, so called, and of such other European nations as he may deem advisable, to join the United States in a conference to adopt a common ratio between gold and silver for the purpose of establishing internationally the use of bimetallic money and securing fixity of relative value between these metals."

This conference absolutely failed, and a similar fate has awaited all subsequent efforts in the same direction. And still we continue our coinage of silver at a ratio different from that of any other nation. The most vital part of the silver-coinage act remains inoperative and unexecuted, and, without an ally or friend, we battle upon the silver field in an illogical and losing contest.

To give full effect to the design of Congress on this subject I have made careful and earnest endeavor since the adjournment of the last Congress.

To this end I delegated a gentleman well instructed in fiscal science to proceed to the financial centers of Europe, and, in conjunction with our ministers to England, France, and Germany, to obtain a full knowledge of the attitude and intent of those governments in respect of the establishment of such an international ratio as would procure free coinage of both metals at the mints of those countries and our own. By my direction our consul-general at Paris has given close attention to the proceedings of the congress of the Latin Union, in order to indicate our interest in its objects and report its action.

It may be said, in brief, as the result of these efforts, that the attitude of the leading powers remains substantially unchanged since the monetary conference of 1881, nor is it to be questioned that the views of these governments are in each instance supported by the weight of public opinion.

The steps thus taken have therefore only more fully demonstrated the uselessness of further attempts at present to arrive at any agreement on the subject with other nations.

In the mean time we are accumulating silver coin, based upon our own peculiar ratio, to such an extent, and assuming so heavy a burden to be provided for in any international negotiations, as will render us an undesirable party to any future monetary conference of nations.

It is a significant fact that four of the five countries composing the Latin Union mentioned in our coinage act, embarrassed with their silver currency, have just completed an agreement among themselves that no more silver shall be coined by their respective governments, and that such as has been already coined and in circulation shall be redeemed in gold by the country of its coinage. The resort to this expedient by these countries may well arrest the attention of those who suppose that we can succeed without shock or injury in the attempt to circulate upon its merits all the silver we may coin under the provisions of our silver-coinage act.

The condition in which our treasury may be placed by a persistence in our present course is a matter of concern to every patriotic citizen who does not desire his Government to pay in silver such of its obligations as should be paid in gold. Nor should our condition be such as to oblige us, in a prudent management of our affairs, to discontinue the calling in and payment of interest-bearing obligations which we have the right now to discharge, and thus avoid the payment of further interest thereon.

The so-called debtor class, for whose benefit the continued compulsory coinage of silver is insisted upon, are not dishonest because they are in debt; and they should not be suspected of a desire to jeopardize the financial safety of the country in order that they may cancel their present debts by paying the same in depreciated dollars. Nor should it be forgotten that it is not the rich nor the money-lender alone that must submit to such a readjustment, enforced by the Government and their debtors. The pittance of the widow and the orphan, and the incomes of helpless beneficiaries of all kinds, would be disastrously reduced. The depositors in savings banks and in other institutions which hold in trust the savings of the poor, when their little accumulations are scaled down to meet the new order of things, would, in their distress, painfully realize the delusion of the promise made to them that plentiful money would improve their condition.

We have now on hand all the silver dollars necessary to supply the present needs of the people, and to satisfy those who from sentiment wish to see them in circulation; and if their coinage is suspended they can be readily obtained by all who desire them. If the need of more is any time apparent, their coinage may be renewed.

That disaster has not already overtaken us furnishes no proof that danger does not wait upon a continuation of the present silver coinage. We have been saved by the most careful management and unusual expedients, by a combination of fortunate conditions, and by a confident expectation that the course of the Government in regard to silver coinage would be speedly changed by the action of Congress.

Prosperity hesitates upon our threshold because of the dangers and uncertainties surrounding this question. Capital timidly shrinks from trade, and investors are unwilling to take the chance of the questionable shape in which their money will be returned to them, while enterprise halts at a risk against which care and sagacious management do not protect.

As a necessary consequence labor lacks employment, and suffering and distress are visited upon a portion of our fellow-citizens especially entitled to the careful consideration of those charged with the duties of legislation. No interest appeals to us so strongly for a safe and stable currency as the vast army of the unemployed.

I recommend the suspension of the compulsory coinage of silver dollars, directed by the law passed in February, 1878.

The steamboat inspection service on the 30th day of June, 1885, was composed of one hundred and forty persons, including officers, clerks, and messengers. The expenses of the service over the receipts were $138,822.22 during the fiscal year. The special inspection of foreign steam vessels, organized under a law passed in 1882, was maintained during the year at an expense of $36,641.63. Since the close of the fiscal year reductions have been made in the force employed which will result in a saving during the current year of $17,000 without affecting the efficiency of the service.

The Supervising Surgeon-General reports that during the fiscal year 41,714 patients have received relief through the Marine-Hospital Service, of whom 12,803 were treated in hospitals and 28,911 at the dispensaries.

Active and effective efforts have been made, through the medium of this service, to protect the country against an invasion of cholera, which has prevailed in Spain and France, and the small-pox, which recently broke out in Canada.

The most gratifying results have attended the operations of the Life-Saving Service during the last fiscal year. The observance of the provision of law requiring the appointment of the force employed in this service to be made "solely with reference to their fitness, and without reference to their political or party affiliation," has secured the result which may confidently be expected in any branch of public employment where such a rule is applied. As a consequence, this service is composed of men well qualified for the performance of their dangerous and exceptionally important duties.

The number of stations in commission at the close of the year was 203. The number of disasters to vessels and craft of all kinds within their field of action was 371. The number of persons endangered in such disasters was 2,439, of whom 2,428 were saved and only 11 lost. Other lives which were imperiled, though not by disasters to shipping, were also rescued, and a large amount of property was saved through the aid of this service. The cost of its maintenance during the year was $828,474.43.

The work of the Coast and Geodetic Survey was, during the last fiscal year, carried on within the boundaries and off the coasts of thirty-two States, two Territories, and the District of Columbia. In July last certain irregularities were found to exist in the management of this bureau, which led to a prompt investigation of its methods. The abuses which were brought to light by this examination, and the reckless disregard of duty and the interests of the Government developed on the part of some of those connected with the service, made a change of superintendency and a few of its other officers necessary. Since the bureau has been in new hands an introduction of economies and the application of business methods have produced an important saving to the Government and a promise of more useful results.

This service has never been regulated by anything but the most indefinite legal enactments and the most unsatisfactory rules. It was many years ago sanctioned apparently for a purpose regarded as temporary, and related to a survey of our coast. Having gained a place in the appropriations made by Congress, it has gradually taken to itself powers and objects not contemplated in its creation, and extended its operations, until it sadly needs legislative attention.

So far as a further survey of our coast is concerned, there seems to be a propriety in transferring that work to the Navy Department. The other duties now in charge of this establishment, if they can not be profitably attached to some existing Department or other bureau, should be prosecuted under a law exactly defining their scope and purpose, and with a careful discrimination between the scientific inquiries which may properly be assumed by the Government and those which should be undertaken by State authority or by individual enterprise.

It is hoped that the report of the Congressional committee heretofore appointed to investigate this and other like matters will aid in the accomplishment of proper legislation on this subject.

The report of the Secretary of War is herewith submitted. The attention of Congress is invited to the detailed account which it contains of the administration of his Department, and his recommendations and suggestions for the improvement of the service.

The Army consisted at the date of the last consolidated returns of 2,154 officers and 24,705 enlisted men.

The expenses of the Departments for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, including $13,164,394.60 for public works and river and harbor improvements, were $45,850,999.54.

Beside the troops which were dispatched in pursuit of the small band of Indians who left their reservation in Arizona and committed murders and outrages, two regiments of cavalry and one of infantry were sent last July to the Indian Territory to prevent an outbreak which seemed imminent. They remained to aid if necessary in the expulsion of intruders upon the reservation, who seemed to have caused the discontent among the Indians, but the Executive proclamation warning them to remove was complied with without their interference.

Troops were also sent to Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, after the massacre of Chinese there, to prevent further disturbance, and afterward to Seattle, in Washington Territory, to avert a threatened attack upon Chinese laborers and domestic violence there. In both cases the mere presence of the troops had the desired effect.

It appears that the number of desertions have diminished, but that during the last fiscal year they numbered 2,927; and one instance is given by the Lieutenant-General of six desertions by the same recruit. I am convinced that this number of desertions can be much diminished by better discipline and treatment; but the punishment should be increased for repeated offenses.

These desertions might also be reduced by lessening the term of first enlistments, thus allowing a discontented recruit to contemplate a nearer discharge and the Army a profitable riddance. After one term of service a re-enlistment would be quite apt to secure a contented recruit and a good soldier.

The Acting Judge-Advocate-General reports that the number of trials by general courts-martial during the year was 2,328, and that 11,851 trials took place before garrison and regimental courts-martial. The suggestion that probably more than half the Army have been tried for offenses, great and small, in one year, may well arrest attention. Of course many of these trials before garrison and regimental courts-martial were for offenses almost frivolous; and there should, I think, be a way devised to dispose of these in a more summary and less inconvenient manner than by court-martial.

If some of the proceedings of courts-martial which I have had occasion to examine present the ideas of justice which generally prevail in these tribunals, I am satisfied that they should be much reformed, if the honor and honesty of the Army and Navy are by their instrumentality to be vindicated and protected.

The board on fortifications or other defenses, appointed in pursuance of the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, will in a short time present their report; and it is hoped that this may greatly aid the legislation so necessary to remedy the present defenseless condition of our seacoasts.

The work of the Signal Service has been prosecuted during the last year with results of increasing benefit to the country. The field of instruction has been enlarged with a view of adding to its usefulness. The number of stations in operation June 30, 1885, was 489. Telegraphic reports are received daily from 160 stations. Reports are also received from 25 Canadian stations, 375 volunteer observers, 52 Army surgeons at military posts, and 333 foreign stations. The expense of the service during the fiscal year, after deducting receipts from military telegraph lines, was $792,592.97. In view of the fact referred to by the Secretary of War, that the work of this service ordinarily is of a scientific nature, and the further fact that it is assuming larger proportions constantly, and becoming more and more unsuited to the fixed rules which must govern the Army, I am inclined to agree with him in the opinion that it should be separately established. If this is done the scope and extent of its operations should, as nearly as possible, be definitely prescribed by law, and always capable of exact ascertainment.

The Military Academy at West Point is reported as being in a high state of efficiency, and well equipped for the satisfactory accomplishment of the purposes of its maintenance.

The fact that the class which graduates next year is an unusually large one has constrained me to decline to make appointments to second lieutenancies in the Army from civil life, so that such vacancies as exist in these places may be reserved for such graduates; and yet it is not probable that there will be enough vacancies to provide positions for them all when they leave the military school. Under the prevailing law and usage those not thus assigned to duty never actively enter the military service. It is suggested that the law on this subject be changed, so that such of these young men as are not at once assigned to duty after graduation may be retained as second lieutenants in the Army if they desire it, subject to assignment when opportunity occurs, and under proper rules as to priority of selection.

The expenditures on account of the Military Academy for the last fiscal year, exclusive of the sum taken for its purposes from appropriations for the support of the Army, were $290,712.07.

The act approved March 3, 1885, designed to compensate officers and enlisted men for loss of private property while in the service of the United States, is so indefinite in its terms, and apparently admits so many claims the adjustment of which could not have been contemplated, that if it is to remain upon the statute-book it needs amendment.

There should be a general law of Congress prohibiting the construction of bridges over navigable waters in such manner as to obstruct navigation, with provisions for preventing the same. It seems that under existing statutes the Government can not intervene to prevent such a construction when entered upon without its consent, though when such consent is asked and granted upon condition, the authority to insist upon such condition is clear. Thus it is represented that while the officers of the Government are with great care guarding against the obstruction of navigation by a bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Paul, a large pier for a bridge has been built just below this place directly in the navigable channel of the river. If such things are to be permitted, a strong argument is presented against the appropriation of large sums of money to improve the navigation of this and other important highways of commerce.

The report of the Secretary of the Navy gives a history of the operations of his Department and the present condition of the work committed to his charge.

He details in full the course pursued by him to protect the rights of the Government in respect of certain vessels unfinished at the time of his accession to office, and also concerning the dispatch-boat Dolphin, claimed to be completed and awaiting the acceptance of the Department. No one can fail to see, from recitals contained in this report, that only the application of business principles has been insisted upon in the treatment of these subjects, and that whatever controversy has arisen was caused by the exaction on the part of the Department of contract obligations as they were legally construed. In the case of the Dolphin, with entire justice to the contractor, an agreement has been entered into providing for the ascertainment by a judicial inquiry of the complete or partial compliance with the contract in her construction, and further providing for the assessment of any damages to which the Government may be entitled on account of a partial failure to perform such contract, or the payment of the sum still remaining unpaid upon her price, in case a full performance is adjudged.

The contractor, by reason of his failure in business, being unable to complete the other three vessels, they were taken possession of by the Government in their unfinished state, under a clause in the contract permitting such a course, and are now in process of completion in the yard of the contractor, but under the supervision of the Navy Department.

Congress at its last session authorized the construction of two additional new cruisers and two gunboats, at a cost not exceeding in the aggregate $2,995,000. The appropriation for this purpose having become available on the 1st day of July last, steps were at once taken for the procurement of such plans for the construction of these vessels as would be likely to insure their usefulness when completed. These are of the utmost importance, considering the constant advance in the art of building vessels of this character, and the time is not lost which is spent in their careful consideration and selection.

All must admit the importance of an effective navy to a nation like ours, having such an extended seacoast to protect. And yet we have not a single vessel of war that could keep the seas against a first-class vessel of any important power. Such a condition ought not longer to continue. The nation that can not resist aggression is constantly exposed to it. Its foreign policy is of necessity weak, and its negotiations are conducted with disadvantage, because it is not in condition to enforce the terms dictated by its sense of right and justice.

Inspired, as I am, by the hope, shared by all patriotic citizens, that the day is not very far distant when our Navy will be such as befits our standing among the nations of the earth, and rejoiced at every step that leads in the direction of such a consummation, I deem it my duty to especially direct the attention of Congress to the close of the report of the Secretary of the Navy, in which the humiliating weakness of the present organization of his Department is exhibited, and the startling abuses and waste of its present methods are exposed. The conviction is forced upon us, with the certainty of mathematical demonstration, that before we proceed further in the restoration of a navy we need a thoroughly reorganized Navy Department. The fact that within seventeen years more than $75,000,000 have been spent in the construction, repair, equipment, and armament of vessels, and the further fact that, instead of an effective and creditable fleet, we have only the discontent and apprehension of a nation undefended by war vessels, added to the disclosures now made, do not permit us to doubt that every attempt to revive our Navy has thus far, for the most part, been misdirected, and all our efforts in that direction have been little better than blind gropings and expensive, aimless follies.

Unquestionably, if we are content with the maintenance of a Navy Department simply as a shabby ornament to the Government, a constant watchfulness may prevent some of the scandal and abuse which have found their way into our present organization, and its incurable waste may be reduced to the minimum. But if we desire to build ships for present usefulness, instead of naval reminders of the days that are past, we must have a department organized for the work, supplied with all the talent and ingenuity our country affords, prepared to take advantage of the experience of other nations, systematized so that all effort shall unite and lead in one direction, and fully imbued with the conviction that war vessels, though new, are useless unless they combine all that the ingenuity of man has up to this day brought forth relating to their construction.

I earnestly commend the portion of the Secretary's report devoted to this subject to the attention of Congress, in the hope that his suggestions touching the reorganization of his Department may be adopted as the first step toward the reconstruction of our Navy.

The affairs of the postal service are exhibited by the report of the Postmaster-General, which will be laid before you.

The postal revenue, whose ratio of gain upon the rising prosperity of 1882 and 1883 outstripped the increasing expenses of our growing service, was checked by the reduction in the rate of letter postage, which took effect with the beginning of October in the latter year; and it diminished during the two past fiscal years $2,790,000, in about the proportion of $2,270,000 in 1884 to $520,000 in 1885. Natural growth and development have meantime increased expenditure, resulting in a deficiency in the revenue to meet the expenses of the Department of five and a quarter million dollars for the year 1884, and eight and a third million in the last fiscal year. The anticipated and natural revival of the revenue has been oppressed and retarded by the unfavorable business condition of the country, of which the postal service is a faithful indicator. The gratifying fact is shown, however, by the report, that our returning prosperity is marked by a gain of $380,000 in the revenue of the latter half of the last year over the corresponding period of the preceding year.

The change in the weight of first-class matter which may be carried for a single rate of postage, from a half ounce to an ounce, and the reduction by one-half of the rate of newspaper postage, which, under recent legislation, begun with the current year, will operate to restrain the augmentation of receipts which otherwise might have been expected, to such a degree that the scale of expense may gain upon the revenue and cause an increased deficiency to be shown at its close. Yet, after no long period of reawakened prosperity, by proper economy, it is confidently anticipated that even the present low rates, now as favorable as any country affords, will be adequate to sustain the cost of the service.

The operation of the Post-Office Department is for the convenience and benefit of the people; and the method by which they pay the charges of this useful arm of their public service, so that it be just and impartial, is of less importance to them than the economical expenditure of the means they provide for its maintenance and the due improvement of its agencies, so that they may enjoy its highest usefulness.

A proper attention has been directed to the prevention of waste or extravagance, and good results appear from the report to have already been accomplished.

I approve the recommendation of the Postmaster-General to reduce the charges on domestic money-orders of $5 and less from 8 to 5 cents. This change will materially aid those of our people who most of all avail themselves of this instrumentality, but to whom the element of cheapness is of the greatest importance. With this reduction the system would still remain self-supporting.

The free-delivery system has been extended to nineteen additional cities during the year, and one hundred and seventy-eight now enjoy its conveniencies. Experience has commended it to those who enjoy its benefits, and further enlargement of its facilities is due to other communities to which it is adapted. In the cities where it has been established, taken together, the local postage exceeds its maintenance by nearly $1,300,000. The limit to which this system is now confined by law has been nearly reached, and the reasons given justify its extension, which is proposed.

It was decided, with my approbation, after a sufficient examination, to be inexpedient for the Post-Office Department to contract for carrying our foreign mails under the additional authority given by the last Congress. The amount limited was inadequate to pay all within the purview of the law the full rate of 50 cents per mile, and it would have been unjust and unwise to have given it to some and denied it to others. Nor could contracts have been let under the law to all at a rate to have brought the aggregate within the appropriation, without such practical prearrangement of terms as would have violated it.

The rate of sea and inland postage, which was proffered under another statute, clearly appears to be a fair compensation for the desired service, being three times the price necessary to secure transportation by other vessels upon any route, and much beyond the charges made to private persons for services not less burdensome.

Some of the steamship companies, upon the refusal of the Postmaster-General to attempt, by the means provided, the distribution of the sum appropriated as an extra compensation, withdrew the services of their vessels and thereby occasioned slight inconvenience, though no considerable injury, the mails having been dispatched by other means.

Whatever may be thought of the policy of subsidizing any line of public conveyance or travel, I am satisfied that it should not be done under cover of an expenditure incident to the administration of a Department, nor should there be any uncertainty as to the recipients of the subsidy, or any discretion left to an executive officer as to its distribution. If such gifts of the public money are to be made for the purpose of aiding any enterprise, in the supposed interest of the public, I can not but think that the amount to be paid, and the beneficiary, might better be determined by Congress than in any other way.

The international congress of delegates from the Postal-Union countries convened at Lisbon, in Portugal, in February last, and after a session of some weeks the delegates signed a convention amendatory of the present Postal-Union convention in some particulars designed to advance its purposes. This additional act has had my approval and will be laid before you with the departmental report.

I approve the recommendation of the Postmaster-General that another assistant be provided for his Department. I invite your consideration to the several other recommendations contained in his report.

The report of the Attorney-General contains a history of the conduct of the Department of Justice during the last year, and a number of valuable suggestions as to needed legislation; and I invite your careful attention to the same.

The condition of business in the courts of the United States is such that there seems to be an imperative necessity for remedial legislation on the subject. Some of these courts are so overburdened with pending causes that the delays in determining litigation amount often to a denial of justice. Among the plans suggested for relief is one submitted by the Attorney-General. Its main features are: The transfer of all the original jurisdiction of the circuit courts to the district courts and an increase of judges for the latter where necessary; an addition of judges to the circuit courts and constituting them exclusively courts of appeal, and reasonably limiting appeals thereto; further restrictions of the right to remove causes from the State to Federal courts; permitting appeals to the Supreme Court from the courts of the District of Columbia and the Territories only in the same cases as they are allowed from State courts, and guarding against an unnecessary number of appeals from the circuit courts.

I approve the plan thus outlined, and recommend the legislation necessary for its application to our judicial system.

The present mode of compensating United States marshals and district attorneys should in my opinion be changed. They are allowed to charge against the Government certain fees for services, their income being measured by the amount of such fees within a fixed limit as to their annual aggregate. This is a direct inducement for them to make their fees in criminal cases as large as possible in an effort to reach the maximum sum permitted. As an entirely natural consequence, unscrupulous marshals are found encouraging frivolous prosecutions, arresting people on petty charges of crime and transporting them to distant places for examination and trial, for the purpose of earning mileage and other fees; and district attorneys uselessly attend criminal examinations far from their places of residence, for the express purpose of swelling their accounts against the Government. The actual expenses incurred in these transactions are also charged against the Government.

Thus the rights and freedom of our citizens are outraged, and public expenditures increased, for the purpose of furnishing public officers pretexts for increasing the measure of their compensation.

I think marshals and district attorneys should be paid salaries, adjusted by a rule which will make them commensurate with services fairly rendered.

In connection with this subject I desire to suggest the advisability, if it be found not obnoxious to constitutional objection, of investing United States commissioners with the power to try and determine certain violations of law within the grade of misdemeanors. Such trials might be made to depend upon the option of the accused. The multiplication of small and technical offenses, especially under the provisions of our internal-revenue law, render some change in our present system very desirable, in the interests of humanity as well as economy.

The district courts are now crowded with petty prosecutions, involving a punishment, in cases of conviction, of only a slight fine, while the parties accused are harassed by an enforced attendance upon courts held hundreds of miles from their homes. If poor and friendless they are obliged to remain in jail during months, perhaps, that elapse before a session of the court is held, and are finally brought to trial surrounded by strangers and with but little real opportunity for defense. In the mean time frequently the marshal has charged against the Government his fees for an arrest, the transportation of the accused and the expense of the same, and for summoning witnesses before a commissioner, a grand jury, and a court; the witnesses have been paid from the public funds large fees and traveling expenses, and the commissioner and district attorney have also made their charges against the Government.

This abuse in the administration of our criminal law should be remedied; and if the plan above suggested is not practicable, some other should be devised.

The report of the Secretary of the Interior, containing an account of the operations of this important Department and much interesting information, will be submitted for your consideration.

The most intricate and difficult subject in charge of this Department is the treatment and management of the Indians. I am satisfied that some progress may be noted in their condition as a result of a prudent administration of the present laws and regulations for their control.

But it is submitted that there is lack of a fixed purpose or policy on this subject, which should be supplied. It is useless to dilate upon the wrongs of the Indians, and as useless to indulge in the heartless belief that because their wrongs are revenged in their own atrocious manner therefore they should be exterminated.

They are within the care of our Government, and their rights are, or should be, protected from invasion by the most solemn obligations. They are properly enough called the wards of the Government; and it should be borne in mind that this guardianship involves, on our part, efforts for the improvement of their condition and the enforcement of their rights. There seems to be general concurrence in the proposition that the ultimate object of their treatment should be their civilization and citizenship. Fitted by these to keep pace in the march of progress with the advanced civilization about them, they will readily assimilate with the mass of our population, assuming the responsibilities and receiving the protection incident to this condition.

The difficulty appears to be in the selection of the means to be at present employed toward the attainment of this result.

Our Indian population, exclusive of those in Alaska, is reported as numbering 260,000, nearly all being located on lands set apart for their use and occupation aggregating over 134,000,000 acres. These lands are included in the boundaries of one hundred and seventy-one reservations of different dimensions scattered in twenty-one States and Territories, presenting great variations in climate and in the kind and quality of their soils. Among the Indians upon these several reservations there exists the most marked differences in natural traits and disposition and in their progress toward civilization. While some are lazy, vicious, and stupid, others are industrious, peaceful, and intelligent; while a portion of them are self-supporting and independent, and have so far advanced in civilization that they make their own laws, administered through officers of their own choice, and educate their children in schools of their own establishment and maintenance, others still retain, in squalor and dependence, almost the savagery of their natural state.

In dealing with this question the desires manifested by the Indians should not be ignored. Here, again, we find a great diversity. With some the tribal relation is cherished with the utmost tenacity, while its hold upon others is considerably relaxed; the love of home is strong with all, and yet there are those whose attachment to a particular locality is by no means unyielding; the ownership of their lands in severalty is much desired by some, while by others, and sometimes among the most civilized, such a distribution would be bitterly opposed.

The variation of their wants, growing out of and connected with the character of their several locations, should be regarded. Some are upon reservations most fit for grazing, but without flocks or herds; and some, on arable land, have no agricultural implements. While some of the reservations are double the size necessary to maintain the number of Indians now upon them, in a few cases, perhaps, they should be enlarged.

Add to all this the difference in the administration of the agencies. While the same duties are devolved upon all, the disposition of the agents and the manner of their contact with the Indians have much to do with their condition and welfare. The agent who perfunctorily performs his duty and slothfully neglects all opportunity to advance their moral and physical improvement, and fails to inspire them with a desire for better things, will accomplish nothing in the direction of their civilization; while he who feels the burden of an important trust, and has an interest in his work, will, by consistent example, firm yet considerate treatment, and well-directed aid and encouragement, constantly lead those under his charge toward the light of their enfranchisement.

The history of all the progress which has been made in the civilization of the Indian I think will disclose the fact that the beginning has been religious teaching, followed by or accompanying secular education. While the self-sacrificing and pious men and women who have aided in this good work by their independent endeavor have for their reward the beneficent results of their labor and consciousness of Christian duty well performed, their valuable services should be fully acknowledged by all who, under the law, are charged with the control and management of our Indian wards.

What has been said indicates that, in the present condition of the Indians, no attempt should be made to apply a fixed and unyielding plan of action to their varied and varying needs and circumstances.

The Indian Bureau, burdened as it is with their general oversight and with the details of the establishment, can hardly possess itself of the minute phases of the particular cases needing treatment; and thus the propriety of creating an instrumentality auxiliary to those already established for the care of the Indians suggests itself.

I recommend the passage of a law authorizing the appointment of six commissioners, three of whom shall be detailed from the Army, to be charged with the duty of a careful inspection, from time to time, of all the Indians upon our reservations or subject to the care and control of the Government, with a view of discovering their exact condition and needs, and determining what steps shall be taken on behalf of the Government to improve their situation in the direction of their self-support and complete civilization; that they may ascertain from such inspection what, if any, of the reservations may be reduced in area, and in such cases what part, not needed for Indian occupation, may be purchased by the Government from the Indians and disposed of for their benefit; what, if any, Indians may, with their consent, be removed to other reservations, with a view of their concentration and the sale on their behalf of their abandoned reservations; what Indian lands now held in common should be allotted in severalty; in what manner and to what extent the Indians upon the reservations can be placed under the protection of our laws and subjected to their penalties; and which, if any, Indians should be invested with the right of citizenship. The powers and functions of the commissioners in regard to these subjects should be clearly defined, though they should, in conjunction with the Secretary of the Interior, be given all the authority to deal definitely with the questions presented deemed safe and consistent.

They should be also charged with the duty of ascertaining the Indians who might properly be furnished with implements of agriculture, and of what kind; in what cases the support of the Government should be withdrawn; where the present plan of distributing Indian supplies should be changed; where schools may be established and where discontinued; the conduct, methods, and fitness of agents in charge of reservations; the extent to which such reservations are occupied or intruded upon by unauthorized persons; and generally all matters related to the welfare and improvement of the Indian.

They should advise with the Secretary of the Interior concerning these matters of detail in management, and he should be given power to deal with them fully, if he is not now invested with such power.

This plan contemplates the selection of persons for commissioners who are interested in the Indian question, and who have practical ideas upon the subject of their treatment.

The expense of the Indian Bureau during the last fiscal year was more than six and a half million dollars. I believe much of this expenditure might be saved under the plan proposed; that its economical effects would be increased with its continuance; that the safety of our frontier settlers would be subserved under its operation, and that the nation would be saved through its results from the imputation of inhumanity, injustice, and mismanagement.

In order to carry out the policy of allotment of Indian lands in severalty, when deemed expedient, it will be necessary to have surveys completed of the reservations, and I hope that provision will be made for the prosecution of this work.

In May of the present year a small portion of the Chiricahua Apaches on the White Mountain reservation in Arizona left the reservation and committed a number of murders and depredations upon settlers in that neighborhood. Though prompt and energetic action was taken by the military, the renegades eluded capture and escaped into Mexico. The formation of the country through which these Indians passed, their thorough acquaintance with the same, the speed of their escape, and the manner in which they scattered and concealed themselves among the mountains near the scene of their outrages put our soldiers at a great disadvantage in their efforts to capture them, though the expectation is still entertained that they will be ultimately taken and punished for their crimes.

The threatening and disorderly conduct of the Cheyennes in the Indian Territory early last summer caused considerable alarm and uneasiness. Investigation proved that their threatening attitude was due in a great measure to the occupation of the land of their reservation by immense herds of cattle, which their owners claimed were rightfully there under certain leases made by the Indians. Such occupation appearing upon examination to be unlawful, notwithstanding these leases, the intruders were ordered to remove with their cattle from the lands of the Indians by executive proclamation. The enforcement of this proclamation had the effect of restoring peace and order among the Indians, and they are now quiet and well-behaved.

By an executive order issued on February 27, 1885, by my predecessor, a portion of the tract of country in the territory known as the Old Winnebago and Crow Creek reservations was directed to be restored to the public domain and opened to settlement under the land laws of the United States, and a large number of persons entered upon those lands. This action alarmed the Sioux Indians, who claimed the territory as belonging to their reservation under the treaty of 1868. This claim was determined, after careful investigation, to be well-founded; and consequently the executive order referred to was by proclamation of April 17, 1885, declared to be inoperative and of no effect, and all persons upon the land were warned to leave. This warning has been substantially complied with.

The public domain had its origin in cessions of land by the States to the General Government. The first cession was made by the State of New York, and the largest, which in area exceeded all the others, by the State of Virginia. The territory, the proprietorship of which became thus vested in the General Government, extended from the western line of Pennsylvania to the Mississippi River. These patriotic donations of the States were encumbered with no condition, except that they should be held and used "for the common benefit of the United States." By purchase, with the common fund of all the people, additions were made to this domain until it extended to the northern line of Mexico, the Pacific Ocean, and the Polar Sea. The original trust, "for the common benefit of the United States," attached to all. In the execution of that trust the policy of many homes, rather than large estates, was adopted by the Government. That these might be easily obtained, and be the abode of security and contentment, the laws for their acquisition were few, easily understood, and general in their character. But the pressure of local interests, combined with a speculative spirit, have in many instances procured the passage of laws which marred the harmony of the general plan, and encumbered the system with a multitude of general and special enactments, which render the land laws complicated, subject the titles to uncertainty, and the purchasers often to oppression and wrong. Laws which were intended for the "common benefit" have been perverted so that large quantities of land are vesting in single ownerships. From the multitude and character of the laws, this consequence seems incapable of correction by mere administration.

It is not for the "common benefit of the United States" that a large area of the public lands should be acquired, directly or through fraud, in the hands of a single individual. The nation's strength is in the people. The nation's prosperity is in their prosperity. The nation's glory is in the equality of her justice. The nation's perpetuity is in the patriotism of all her people. Hence, as far as practicable, the plan adopted in the disposal of the public lands should have in view the original policy, which encouraged many purchasers of these lands for homes and discouraged the massing of large areas. Exclusive of Alaska, about three-fifths of the national domain has been sold or subjected to contract or grant. Of the remaining two-fifths a considerable portion is either mountain or desert. A rapidly increasing population creates a growing demand for homes, and the accumulation of wealth inspires an eager competition to obtain the public land for speculative purposes. In the future this collision of interests will be more marked than in the past, and the execution of the nation's trust in behalf of our settlers will be more difficult. I therefore commend to your attention the recommendations contained in the report of the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the repeal and modification of certain of our land laws.

The nation has made princely grants and subsidies to a system of railroads projected as great national highways to connect the Pacific States with the East. It has been charged that these donations from the people have been diverted to private gain and corrupt uses, and thus public indignation has been aroused and suspicion engendered. Our great nation does not begrudge its generosity, but it abhors peculation and fraud; and the favorable regard of our people for the great corporations to which these grants were made can only be revived by a restoration of confidence, to be secured by their constant, unequivocal, and clearly manifested integrity. A faithful application of the undiminished proceeds of the grants to the construction and perfecting of their roads, an honest discharge of their obligations, and entire justice to all the people in the enjoyment of their rights on these highways of travel, is all the public asks, and it will be content with no less. To secure these things should be the common purpose of the officers of the Government, as well as of the corporations. With this accomplishment, prosperity would be permanently secured to the roads, and national pride would take the place of national complaint.

It appears from the report of the Commissioner of Pensions that there were on the 1st day of July, 1885, 345,125 persons borne upon the pension-rolls, who were classified as follows: Army invalids, 241,456; widows, minor children, and dependent relatives of deceased soldiers, 78,841; Navy invalids, 2,745; Navy widows, minor children, and dependents, 1,926; survivors of the war of 1812, 2,945; and widows of those who served in that war, 17,212. About one man in ten of all those who enlisted in the late war are reported as receiving pensions, exclusive of the dependents of deceased soldiers. On the 1st of July, 1875, the number of pensioners was 234,821, and the increase within the ten years next thereafter was 110,304.

While there is no expenditure of the public funds which the people more cheerfully approve than that made in recognition of the services of our soldiers, living and dead, the sentiment underlying the subject should not be vitiated by the introduction of any fraudulent practices. Therefore it is fully as important that the rolls should be cleansed of all those who by fraud have secured a place thereon as that meritorious claims should be speedily examined and adjusted. The reforms in the methods of doing the business of this bureau which have lately been inaugurated promise better results in both these directions.

The operations of the Patent Office demonstrate the activity of the inventive genius of the country. For the year ended June 30, 1885, the applications for patents, including reissues, and for the registration of trade-marks and labels, numbered 35,688. During the same period there were 22,928 patents granted and reissued, and 1,429 trade-marks and labels registered. The number of patents issued in the year 1875 was 14,387. The receipts during the last fiscal year were $1,074,974.35, and the total expenditures, not including contingent expenses, $934,-123.11.

There were 9,788 applications for patents pending on the 1st day of July, 1884, and 5,786 on the same date in the year 1885. There has been considerable improvement made in the prompt determination of applications and a consequent relief to expectant inventors.

A number of suggestions and recommendations are contained in the report of the Commissioner of Patents which are well entitled to the consideration of Congress.

In the Territory of Utah the law of the United States passed for the suppression of polygamy has been energetically and faithfully executed during the past year, with measurably good results. A number of convictions have been secured for unlawful cohabitation, and in some cases pleas of guilty have been entered and a slight punishment imposed upon a promise by the accused that they would not again offend against the law, nor advise, counsel, aid, or abet, in any way, its violation by others.

The Utah Commissioners express the opinion, based upon such information as they are able to obtain, that but few polygamous marriages have taken place in the Territory during the last year. They further report that while there can not be found upon the registration lists of voters the name of a man actually guilty of polygamy, and while none of that class are holding office, yet at the last election in the Territory all the officers elected except in one county were men who, though not actually living in the practice of polygamy, subscribe to the doctrine of polygamous marriages as a divine revelation and a law unto all higher and more binding upon the conscience than any human law, local or national. Thus is the strange spectacle presented of a community protected by a republican form of government, to which they owe allegiance, sustaining by their suffrages a principle and a belief which sets at naught that obligation of absolute obedience to the law of the land which lies at the foundation of republican institutions.

The strength, the perpetuity, and the destiny of the nation rest upon our homes, established by the law of God, guarded by parental care, regulated by parental authority, and sanctified by parental love.

These are not the homes of polygamy.

The mothers of our land, who rule the nation as they mold the characters and guide the actions of their sons, live according to God's holy ordinances, and each, secure and happy in the exclusive love of the father of her children, sheds the warm light of true womanhood, unperverted and unpolluted, upon all within her pure and wholesome family circle.

These are not the cheerless, crushed, and unwomanly mothers of polygamy.

The fathers of our families are the best citizens of the Republic. Wife and children are the sources of patriotism, and conjugal and parental affection beget devotion to the country. The man who, undefiled with plural marriage, is surrounded in his single home with his wife and children, has a stake in the country which inspires him with respect for its laws and courage for its defense.

These are not the fathers of polygamous families.

There is no feature of this practice, or the system which sanctions it, which is not opposed to all that is of value in our institutions.

There should be no relaxation in the firm but just execution of the law now in operation, and I should be glad to approve such further discreet legislation as will rid the country of this blot upon its fair fame.

Since the people upholding polygamy in our Territories are re-enforced by immigration from other lands, I recommend that a law be passed to prevent the importation of Mormons into the country.

The agricultural interest of the country demands just recognition and liberal encouragement. It sustains with certainty and unfailing strength our nation's prosperity by the products of its steady toil, and bears its full share of the burden of taxation without complaint. Our agriculturists have but slight personal representation in the councils of the nation, and are generally content with the humbler duties of citizenship and willing to trust to the bounty of nature for a reward of their labor. But the magnitude and value of this industry is appreciated when the statement is made that of our total annuul exports more than three-fourths are the products of agriculture, and of our total population nearly one-half are exclusively engaged in that occupation.

The Department of Agriculture was created for the purpose of acquiring and diffusing among the people useful information respecting the subjects it has in charge, and aiding in the cause of intelligent and progressive farming by the collection of statistics, by testing the value and usefulness of new seeds and plants, and distributing such as are found desirable among agriculturists. This and other powers and duties with which this Department is invested are of the utmost importance, and if wisely exercised must be of great benefit to the country. The aim of our beneficent Government is the improvement of the people in every station and the amelioration of their condition. Surely our agriculturists should not be neglected. The instrumentality established in aid of the farmers of the land should not only be well equipped for the accomplishment of its purpose, but those for whose benefit it has been adopted should be encouraged to avail themselves fully of its advantages.

The prohibition of the importation into several countries of certain of our animals and their products, based upon the suspicion that health is endangered in their use and consumption, suggests the importance of such precautions for the protection of our stock of all kinds against disease as will disarm suspicion of danger and cause the removal of such an injurious prohibition.

If the laws now in operation are insufficient to accomplish this protection, I recommend their amendment to meet the necessities of the situation, and I commend to the consideration of Congress the suggestions contained in the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture calculated to increase the value and efficiency of this Department.

The report of the Civil Service Commission, which will be submitted, contains an account of the manner in which the civil-service law has been executed during the last year, and much valuable information on this important subject.

I am inclined to think that there is no sentiment more general in the minds of the people of our country than a conviction of the correctness of the principle upon which the law enforcing civil-service reform is based. In its present condition the law regulates only a part of the subordinate public positions throughout the country. It applies the test of fitness to applicants for these places by means of a competitive examination, and gives large discretion to the commissioners as to the character of the examination and many other matters connected with its execution. Thus the rules and regulations adopted by the commission have much to do with the practical usefulness of the statute and with the results of its application.

The people may well trust the commission to execute the law with perfect fairness and with as little irritation as is possible. But of course no relaxation of the principle which underlies it and no weakening of the safeguards which surround it can be expected. Experience in its administration will probably suggest amendment of the methods of its execution, but I venture to hope that we shall never again be remitted to the system which distributes public positions purely as rewards for partisan service. Doubts may well be entertained whether our Government could survive the strain of a continuance of this system, which upon every change of administration inspires an immense army of claimants for office to lay siege to the patronage of Government, engrossing the time of public officers with their importunities, spreading abroad the contagion of their disappointment, and filling the air with the tumult of their discontent.

The allurements of an immense number of offices and places, exhibited to the voters of the land, and the promise of their bestowal in recognition of partisan activity, debauch the suffrage and rob political action of its thoughtful and deliberative character. The evil would increase with the multiplication of offices consequent upon our extension, and the mania for office-holding, growing from its indulgence, would pervade our population so generally that patriotic purpose, the support of principle, the desire for the public good, and solicitude for the nation's welfare would be nearly banished from the activity of our party contests and cause them to degenerate into ignoble, selfish, and disgraceful struggles for the possession of office and public place.

Civil-service reform enforced by law came none too soon to check the progress of demoralization.

One of its effects, not enough regarded, is the freedom it brings to the political action of those conservative and sober men who, in fear of the confusion and risk attending an arbitrary and sudden change in all the public offices with a change of party rule, cast their ballots against such a chance.

Parties seem to be necessary, and will long continue to exist; nor can it be now denied that there are legitimate advantages, not disconnected with office-holding, which follow party supremacy. While partisanship continues bitter and pronounced, and supplies so much of motive to sentiment and action, it is not fair to hold public officials in charge of important trusts responsible for the best results in the performance of their duties, and yet insist that they shall rely, in confidential and important places, upon the work of those not only opposed to them in political affiliation, but so steeped in partisan prejudice and rancor that they have no loyalty to their chiefs and no desire for their success. Civil-service reform does not exact this, nor does it require that those in subordinate positions who fail in yielding their best service, or who are incompetent, should be retained simply because they are in place. The whining of a clerk discharged for indolence or incompetency, who, though he gained his place by the worst possible operation of the spoils system, suddenly discovers that he is entitled to protection under the sanction of civil-service reform, represents an idea no less absurd than the clamor of the applicant who claims the vacant position as his compensation for the most questionable party work.

The civil-service law does not prevent the discharge of the indolent or incompetent clerk, but it does prevent supplying his place with the unfit party worker. Thus, in both these phases, is seen benefit to the public service. And the people who desire good government having secured this statute will not relinquish its benefits without protest. Nor are they unmindful of the fact that its full advantages can only be gained through the complete good faith of those having its execution in charge. And this they will insist upon.

I recommend that the salaries of the Civil Service Commissioners be increased to a sum more nearly commensurate to their important duties.

It is a source of considerable and not unnatural discontent that no adequate provision has yet been made for accommodating the principal library of the Government. Of the vast collection of books and pamphlets gathered at the Capitol, numbering some seven hundred thousand, exclusive of manuscripts, maps, and the products of the graphic arts, also of great volume and value, only about three hundred thousand volumes, or less than half the collection, are provided with shelf room. The others, which are increasing at the rate of from twenty-five to thirty thousand volumes a year, are not only inaccessible to the public, but are subject to serious damage and deterioration from other causes in their present situation.

A consideration of the fact that the Library of the Capitol has twice been destroyed or damaged by fire, its daily increasing value, and its importance as a place of deposit of books under the law relating to copyright, make manifest the necessity of prompt action to insure its proper accommodation and protection.

My attention has been called to a controversy which has arisen from the condition of the law relating to railroad facilities in the city of Washington, which has involved the commissioners of the District in much annoyance and trouble. I hope this difficulty will be promptly settled by appropriate legislation.

The commissioners represent that enough of the revenues of the District are now on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to repay the sum advanced by the Government for sewer improvements under the act of June 30, 1884. They desire now an advance of the share which ultimately should be borne by the District of the cost of extensive improvements to the streets of the city. The total expense of these contemplated improvements is estimated at $1,000,000, and they are of the opinion that a considerable sum could be saved if they had all the money in hand, so that contracts for the whole work could be made at the same time. They express confidence that if the advance asked for should be made the Government would be reimbursed the same within a reasonable time. I have no doubt that these improvements could be made much cheaper if undertaken together and prosecuted according to a general plan.

The license law now in force within the District is deficient and uncertain in some of its provisions, and ought to be amended. The commissioners urge, with good reason, the necessity of providing a building for the use of the District government which shall better secure the safety and preservation of its valuable books and records.

The present condition of the law relating to the succession to the Presidency in the event of the death, disability, or removal of both the President and Vice-President is such as to require immediate amendment. This subject has repeatedly been considered by Congress, but no result has been reached. The recent lamentable death of the Vice-President, and vacancies at the same time in all other offices the incumbents of which might immediately exercise the functions of the Presidential office, have caused public anxiety and a just demand that a recurrence of such a condition of affairs should not be permitted.

In conclusion, I commend to the wise care and thoughtful attention of Congress the needs, the welfare, and the aspirations of an intelligent and generous nation. To subordinate these to the narrow advantages of partisanship, or the accomplishment of selfish aims, is to violate the people's trust and betray the people's interests. But an individual sense of responsibility on the part of each of us, and a stern determination to perform our duty well, must give us place among those who have added in their day and generation to the glory and prosperity of our beloved land.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

WASHINGTON, December 8, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the message of the President and the accompanying documents will lie on the table and be ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the usual morning call for petitions, bills, &c., may proceed until it is concluded, notwithstanding it is past 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that under the rules it is the duty of the Senate to proceed in that order, unless otherwise ordered, there being no Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. Very well.

FINANCE REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances for the year 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

COURT OF CLAIMS REPORT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the report of the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, communicating, in obedience to law, a statement of the judgments rendered by that court during the year ending November 30, 1885, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF SECRETARY OF SENATE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the report of the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Senate from July 1, 1884, to June 30, 1885; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore also laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a full and complete statement of all property in his possession belonging to the United States December 7, 1885, and of the amounts received from the sale of waste paper; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of New Hampshire; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
In the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-five.

Joint resolution in relation to our national domain.

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives in general court convened, That whereas more than twenty million acres of the lands of the United States are now held by non-resident aliens, and in great measure by the titled and governing class of Great Britain; and

Whereas this non-resident ownership of lands in the United States may eventually lead to a system of alien landlordism, of which the unhappy condition of Ireland is a lamentable example; and

Whereas this system of ownership, whereby immense landed estates are in possession of a few individuals, to the exclusion of actual settlers, is incompatible with the best interests of the people, and antagonistic to our free institutions; and

Whereas our remaining public lands, so far as they are adapted to agriculture, ought to be granted as homesteads, or sold in small quantities to actual settlers only, citizens of the United States or those intending to become such: Therefore,

Resolved, That American soil is for Americans, and should be exclusively owned and controlled by American citizens, and those intending to become such; and

Resolved, That our Senators in Congress be instructed and our Representatives be requested to use their utmost endeavors in that body to secure the speedy enactment of such laws as will secure exclusively to the American people the public lands of the United States, and prevent sales to, or the vesting of title to the public lands in, any but citizens of this country or those intending to become such, to be held by individuals only in moderate quantities, reserving all the unsold agricultural lands for homesteads for actual settlers; and

Resolved, That the governor be requested to send a copy of this joint resolution to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress, to the President of the Senate, and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, at the opening of the next session of Congress.

EDGAR ALDRICH,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
CHESTER PIKE,
President of the Senate.

Approved August 28, 1885.

MOODY CURRIER, Governor.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Concord, November 11, 1885.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a correct copy of the orginal joint resolution.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto subscribed my official signature and affixed the seal of the State.

[SEAL.]

A. P. THOMPSON,
Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial from the Choctaw Nation favoring the establishment of certain courts, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Louisiana Educational Society favoring national aid to education; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a preamble and resolutions adopted at a meeting of the merchants of New Orleans favoring the construction of a ship-railway across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL. I present the petition of C. C. Bayley, of Wisconsin, praying legislation providing for the Presidential succession in case of a vacancy by continuing the office of Presidential electors for four years. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That proposes to change the Constitution, I think. Therefore it ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is proposed to refer the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary. That order will be made if there is no objection.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of Capt. George B. Proctor and others, who were commissioned officers of the Thirty-sixth Regiment United States Colored Troops, praying compensation for services rendered from April to September, 1864; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of the board of managers of the National Temperance Society, officially signed, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating beverages; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. VEST. I present various resolutions of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri upon different subjects. I will not ask that they be read at length, but I will ask that the Secretary shall read them by title and that they be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri presents certain resolutions of the Legislature of Missouri and asks that they be read by their titles and printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to my friend from Missouri that the printing of memorials, petitions, &c., in the RECORD is expensive.

Mr. ALLISON. These are memorials of a State Legislature.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know it; but the memorial of a Legislature, although read at the desk, I believe does not usually go into the RECORD in full unless it is so ordered. The printing of these things in the RECORD swells it to an enormous size, and makes it inconvenient. It should be a record of proceedings and debates. Unless it is specially desirable in this instance to print the resolutions at length, I should rather hear them read all the way through than to have them printed in the RECORD without reading; but if the Senator from Missouri thinks it of much public importance that the course he proposes ought to be taken, I shall not object on this occasion.

Mr. VEST. I have known the practice to obtain in both directions in this body. I have known resolutions of the General Assemblies of States to be printed in the RECORD, at the request of a Senator, without being read, in the interest of economy of time. I want the Legislature of my State to be treated with entire respect. I do not care about these resolutions being read at length, but if there is any objection to their being printed, then I do ask that they be read, as is customary in this body, by the Secretary. They are very lengthy, and for that reason I preferred to have them printed without being read at the desk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As I understand, they will go in the RECORD if they are read. I do not object to the Senator's suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the memorials be printed in the RECORD without being read. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made.

Mr. VEST. Let them be read by title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be read by their titles.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions by their titles; and they were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint and concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for an appropriation or appropriations for the protection of the bottom lands in the southeastern part of the State of Missouri from annual inundations from the Mississippi River and other sources.

Whereas there is lying in the southeastern part of the State of Missouri a vast domain of over one and one-fourth millions of acres of the most fertile and heavily timbered lands to be found in the great valley of the Mississippi, or upon the continent of North America; and

Whereas during the years 1882, 1883, and 1884 the inundations from the Mississippi River were greater than were ever before known in the history of the country, while the destruction of property, both private and public, amounted to millions of dollars, and a general desolation marked the whole face of the country; and

Whereas these bottom lands, if protected from the inundations from the Mississippi River and rain-water overflows, would in a short period of time be converted into the thrifty homes of thousands of hardy yeomanry, yielding to the Government millions of dollars for revenue, and supplying to the markets of the world untold treasures in the products of the soil; and

Whereas the bottom lands in the southeastern part of the State of Missouri and northeastern part of the State of Arkansas mainly depend for drainage upon the river Saint Francis and tributaries thereto, now greatly obstructed by rafts, drift-wood, fallen timber, sand, and mud-bars, thereby impeding the natural flow of the water and causing it to overflow vast areas of country; and

Whereas these vast bodies of fertile lands now subject to annual inundations from the Mississippi River and overflows from local rains and heavy rainfall running from the water-sheds of the hill country north and west of them, so as to prevent the settling up and cultivation of their greater part, may be thoroughly reclaimed by a judicious system of levees along the western bank of the Mississippi River, and by removing obstructions from, cutting the bends, and deepening the channel of the river Saint Francis and its small tributaries; and

Whereas, for the purpose of obtaining relief from the annual floods which devastate and depopulate the territory in this preamble mentioned, and for the purpose of permanently reclaiming the same: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein):

First. That our Senators from this State be instructed, and our Representatives in Congress be requested, to urge upon Congress the necessity of speedily enacting such laws and making such appropriations as shall be adequate to free from obstructions, cut the bends, and deepen, where necessary, the channel of the Saint Francis River and smaller streams tributary thereto, which form the natural water ways for the drainage of the southeastern part of the State of Missouri and adjacent territory in the northeastern part of the State of Arkansas, known as the "sunk or low lands," and to erect a levee along the bank of the Mississippi River sufficient to protect said territory from inundations of that vast stream.

Second. That in order to promote the objects hereinbefore mentioned, and that speedy action may be had in the premises, our Senators are further instructed, and our Representatives are further requested, to urge upon the Mississippi River Commission the necessity of using all honorable means in its power to secure from Congress the passage of the laws and appropriations herein contemplated, and the recommendation of a well-devised system of improvements, consisting of dikes, levees, and drainage, in order that these rich bottom lands, now unfit for the habitation of man, lying in the southeastern part of our State, may be permanently reclaimed.

Third. Upon the adoption of these resolutions, the secretary of state is required to forward a copy thereof to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Fourth. That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to the Legislature of the State of Arkansas, and that said body be respectfully requested to join with the State of Missouri and make common cause with her in urging upon the attention of Congress the importance of the work and material aid herein solicited.

Approved March 18, 1885.

Joint and concurrent resolution instructing our Senators and requesting our Representatives in Congress to procure legislation authorizing receivers of railroad companies appointed by Federal courts to be sued in local State courts, and preserve the right of trial by jury in such suits.

Whereas the circuit courts of the United States, in the exercise of their powers as courts of equity jurisdiction, have, of late, adopted the extraordinary practice of taking charge of and for years operating and managing railroads, oftentimes embracing a system of roads hundreds of miles in length and extending into different and distinct States; and

Whereas for the purposes aforesaid such courts appoint receivers with authority to make contracts and incur liabilities, but have refused and do refuse to permit suits to be brought against the receivers in the local courts along the line of such roads at such places as the claims accrue for supplies, damages, and other demands, but require all litigants, however small their demands, to attend with witnesses and litigate at the place of sitting of such Federal courts, and at the same time deny them the right of trial by jury, thereby entailing on small claimants an expense oftentimes largely in excess of their demands and practically denying them any trial, and expressly denying the common-law right of trial: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to procure such legislation as shall be necessary to secure to all persons the right to sue receivers of railroad companies appointed by Federal courts in the same places and courts of the States, and to prosecute to judgment, under the same forms of law as is provided by State laws for suits against the companies, and for such further legislation therein as will properly regulate and limit the powers of the Federal courts in their equitable interference with and control over railroad companies, so as to preserve to the people their common law and constitutional rights.

Approved March 19, 1885.

Joint and concurrent resolution instructing our Senators and requesting our Representatives in Congress to favor the passage of an act giving pensions to the surviving soldiers of the Mexican war.

Whereas the soldiers of the Mexican war have ever been held in grateful remembrance by the people of this Republic, and who, through their great achievements, won not only honor for the nation but placed within its control unlimited wealth in precious metals and an area of territory fit for a mighty empire; and

Whereas the fruits of their labor and victories have been too long intrusted to the annals of military renown, without due and considerate regard for their advanced age and increased necessities, and for the means of a livelihood be [ne]-fitting the last years of a surviving soldier of the Mexican war; and

Whereas it has been the policy of the Government of the United States to grant pensions as a reward to those who have faithfully served it in the hour of danger: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our Representatives requested, to urge upon Congress the passage of a bill granting pensions to surviving soldiers of the Mexican war and to the widows of those who are dead.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to furnish a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States.

Approved March 19, 1885.

Joint and concurrent resolution instructing our Senators and Representatives in Congress to vote against and use all honorable means to defeat the passage of the Buckner bill to suspend the further coinage of silver.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress be instructed to vote against and use all honorable means to defeat the passage of the Buckner bill to suspend the further coinage of silver.

Resolved, That the secretary of state be requested to furnish a copy of these resolutions to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved April 3, 1885.

Joint and concurrent resolution asking Congress to provide for the auditing and adjusting the war debt of Missouri, and the appointment of a commissioner, whose duty it shall be to hear and determine the validity of the same, as recited in section 52 of the constitution of State of Missouri, on the limitation of legislative powers, which reads as follows: "Sec. 52. The General Assembly shall have no power to make any appropriation of money, or to issue any bonds or other evidence for the payment on account or in recognition of any claims audited or that may hereafter be audited by virtue of an act entitled 'An act to adjust the war debt of the State,' approved March 19, 1874, or any act of a similar nature, until after the claim so audited shall have been presented to and paid by the Government of the United States to the State of Missouri."

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That our Senators be instructed, and our Representatives in Congress be requested, to use all honorable means to secure the appointment of a commissioner, whose duty it shall be to audit such claims as are just and equitable, as contemplated in section 52 of the constitution of the State of Missouri as above removed [cited].

Approved April 3, 1885.

Joint and concurrent resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States for an appropriation for the building of a levee on the west side of the Mississippi River, extending from the city of Clarksville, Mo., to the mouth of the Missouri River.

Whereas there is in the counties of Pike, Lincoln, and Saint Charles a vast domain of over 50,000 acres of the most fertile lands found in the great valley of the Mississippi; and

Whereas said lands are subject to overflow and inundation by the waters from the Mississippi River; and

Whereas said lands can be redeemed by the building of a levee from the city of Clarksville, Mo., to the mouth of the Missouri River, a distance of only about 50 miles: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), First. That our Senators from this State be instructed, and our Representatives in Congress be requested, to urge upon Congress the necessity of speedily securing such legislation and such appropriations as will be sufficient to permanently reclaim the above-mentioned vast body of land.

Second. Upon the adoption of these resolutions the secretary of state is required to forward a copy thereof to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Approved April 3, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri move any reference of the resolutions?

Mr. VEST. No, sir; let them lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present similar resolutions, copies having been sent to each Senator and Representative from Missouri. Let them lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The duplicates will also lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented the petition of Harmon Conley, of Joplin, Mo., praying to be reimbursed for certain losses sustained by him during the war of the rebellion; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MANDERSON presented the petition of John C. Myers, formerly consul-general at Shanghai, China, praying reimbursement of moneys expended in exposing alleged frauds and irregularities in office of Oliver B. Bradford and George F. Seward; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of John Stafford, of Chicago, Ill., praying for an appropriation of $15,000 for the purchase of Thomas Le Clear's portrait of General U. S. Grant; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the Trinity Baptist church, of New York city, signed by the pastor and officers, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Friends' Temperance Union, of New York, officially signed, praying for an amendment of the Constitution of the United States to prohibit the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic beverages throughout the national domain; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented the petition of William Trefethen, of New Castle, N. H., praying to be reimbursed for injury alleged to have been suffered by him in consequence of carelessness of United States colored troops stationed at Fort Sullivan, Portsmouth Harbor, New Hampshire, in 1883; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the board of managers of the National Temperance Society, officially signed, praying for a national commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 1) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to introduce a bill concerning Federal elections and to state before the title of the bill is read that it is a bill which I introduce at the request of certain persons who are interested in one of the numerous patent ballot-boxes. I am not myself acquainted with all the details of the bill—I introduce it at the request of these persons—but I generally favor some scheme of the kind and I have entire confidence in the purity of the public purpose of the persons who have drafted the bill, but I do not deem myself responsible for its details.

The bill (S. 2) concerning Federal elections was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. HOAR also introduced a bill (S. 3) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4) to permit the owners of certain vessels and the owners or underwriters of cargoes laden thereon to sue the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 7) making appropriation for the relief of the First National Bank of Newton, Mass; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 18) for the relief of Pearson C. Montgomery, of Memphis, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 19) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 20) for the relief of Mrs. Julia Elliott, widow of Newell D. Elliott, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committe on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 21) for the relief of Adelicia Cheatham; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 22) for the relief of Martin and P. B. Murphy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 23) giving a military record to Thomas Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 24) for the relief of Samuel B. Seat, administrator of Christian Kropp, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 25) for the relief of the personal representatives of Frank Williams, late postmaster at Paris, Tenn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 26) for the relief of Reuben S. Jones; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 27) for the removal of all disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 28) to authorize the payment of customs duties in legal-tender notes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 29) to repeal certain laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 30) for the relief of Harry I. Todd, late keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 31) for the relief of Warren Mitchell; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 32) for the relief of Mrs. Lizzie D. Clarke, of New Orleans; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 33) for the relief of the Madison Female Institute, located at Richmond, Ky.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 85) for the relief of B. Jennings; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 86) to provide for the construction of a public building at Portland, Oreg.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 87) for the relief of Thomas J. Miller, of Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 88) for the relief of Ben Holladay; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 89) for the adjustment of the claim of the State of Arkansas against the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 90) to grant to the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway the right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. MAXEY introduced a bill (S. 91) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to a question with regard to the reference just made. It seems to me that those bills granting rights of way through the Indian Territory should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs and not to the Committee on Railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana make that motion?

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest it to the Senators who introduced the bills. All the questions involved relate to the rights of those Indian tribes and the method of dealing with them, and the bills involve questions of intercourse with them and not questions relating to ordinary railroad traffic. Unless the Senators concede a reference to the Committee on Indian Affairs, I shall make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill just introduced will be again reported so that the Senate may understand it.

Mr. MAXEY. I can make a statement which I think will be satisfactory to the Senator from Indiana. This is merely a proposed amendatory bill to an act which was reported from the Committee on Railroads, and that committee is in possession of all the facts in connection with the original bill, having reported it. Therefore I had this bill referred to the Committee on Railroads as the proper committee, and I think so yet. That is the only committee which has really had charge of the subject-matter.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall ask a reconsideration of the reference of the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] with a view of making the same motion in relation to that measure. It is obvious that this question ought to be dealt with by the Committee on Indian Affairs. That is the committee which is charged with the care of legislation relating to those tribes. All these bills present the question of our treaty relations with those tribes, and it is the proper reference undoubtedly.

Waiving this point for a moment, if the Senator from Texas will allow me, I ask for a reconsideration of the reference of the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas in order that I may make a motion that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MAXEY. I wish to make one additional statement for the benefit of the Senator from Indiana. The bill which I now present is a mere reintroduction of a bill which was referred without objection to the Committee on Railroads at the last Congress and reported unanimously from that committee. That committee has examined this identical bill, and hence it is the proper committee to take control of it.

Supposing this explanation to be satisfactory, I now propose to introduce another bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be acted on before other business is entertained. The question is on the reconsideration of the vote referring to the Committee on Railroads the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

Mr. HARRISON. I suppose that will be done informally and then the vote be taken on the proposition of reference directly. I suppose the Senator from Arkansas will not object to that. Let it be formally reconsidered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas is now before the Senate on the motion to reconsider its reference to the Committee on Railroads; and it will be reported by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 90) to grant to the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway the right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say that the Railroad Committee of the Senate is one of the largest bodies of that kind, and it is probably one of the best equipped for taking into consideration a subject of this nature. I acknowledge, though, that the bill involves the rights of the Indians and possibly it ought to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs for the purpose of finding out whether by the granting of a charter we should interfere with any of our present treaties; but I desire to give notice that when the bill is reported from that committee I shall ask to have it referred to the Railroad Committee for their consideration so far as the railroad part of it is concerned.

Mr. HARRISON. To that proposition I should offer no objection at all; but it does seem to me too plain for argument that as this question involves our treaty relations with Indian tribes, the bill should be considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs; and if then the Senate should desire that the guards relating to railroad management and railroad rights should be considered by the Committee on Railroads, I should deem it very appropriate.

Mr. MAXEY. I will ask the Senator from Indiana if he makes his motion in reference to the bill I offered as well as the one introduced by the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARRISON. I intended to do so, but I asked to take up the question of the reference of the other bill first as it was first introduced.

Mr. MAXEY. I hope the Senator from Indiana will not insist upon that after the statement which I have made in regard to what was done heretofore.

Mr. VEST. If the subject-matter of this bill came before the Senate now for the first time, there would be a good deal of force in the remarks of the Senator from Indiana. I believe that I had the honor of introducing the bill which passed the Senate and became a law and to which the bill now offered by the Senator from Texas is amendatory. If my memory serves me correctly (and I think the record will substantiate what I state), that bill was reported by the Committee on Railroads, and was elaborately discussed in the Senate, my friend from Indiana opposing its passage. The entire bearing of the various treaty stipulations was discussed at length. The whole subject-matter which comes up now in regard to this proposed amendatory act was discussed to a threadbare extent upon the passage of the original bill.

Why the necessity now of taking this bill and sending it before a new committee, when the Committee on Railroads have examined the question and passed their judgment upon it and the Senate confirmed that judgment? I belong to neither of these committees and have no special interest in the matter, but it seems to me that for the economy of time and for the expedition of public business the bill ought to go to the committee that has already examined the subject and is familiar with it.

I hope the motion to reconsider will be voted down.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me that if the bill is to go to two committees the order ought to be reversed from what is here proposed. The first thing to be determined is the necessity or desirability of the building of the suggested railroad. If in the discussion of that question it shall transpire that the railroad is proposed to be built over somebody's land, there being a question about the propriety or legality of taking that land, it is a question to come up afterward; and it would be proper enough for the Senator from Indiana (who of course is opposed to this bill as he has been to all bills of a similar character on perfectly well-understood grounds) to move at the time when it shall be reported from the Railroad Committee, if it shall be so reported, that it shall go to the Committee on Indian Affairs for the purpose of the special inquiry which he desires to have made by that committee, and which it is proper enough, of course, to have made by that committee, if in the mean time it shall be determined by the Senate, or there shall seem to be even reasonable ground for supposing, that these questions have not been authentically settled by the action of the Senate heretofore taken. But

I submit that the first question to be determined is, is there a necessity for a railroad and for the chartering or the building of that railroad by the action of Congress? After that comes the question as to the protection of private or other rights.

Mr. DAWES. I was out when the bill was introduced and would like to hear the title of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be again read. The bill has been by order of the Senate referred to the Committee on Railroads and the motion is to reconsider that reference.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 90) to grant to the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway the right of way through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

Mr. DAWES. I have no desire to try to gather under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs anything that I could avoid sending there; but it does not seem to me that the question is whether a particular railroad shall be built. The whole purpose of the bill, I think, is to authorize the construction of a railroad through the Indian Territory; and why should not that go to the Committee on Indian Affairs? Why should not the question whether we shall depart from the policy of the Government in the establishment of that Territory, and in the treaty obligations we have with those Indians, be considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs?

My own opinion is that railroads must be built through the Indian Territory in various ways. I have stated that already to the Senate many times, and I have not opposed the building of railroads through the Indian Territory. The difficulty in my mind is in what manner we can justly and properly authorize the building of those railroads, and I have no other point to consider.

The question of the Indian Territory is assuming every day more interesting phases and features, and has to come before Congress, will certainly come before this Congress, in a way that must arrest our attention. I do not want to see the broad question of what we are going to do with the Indian Territory in the future disturbed by any minor question, which I think this must be, in comparison with the broad question, it being the construction of one particular railroad through that Territory.

If there is any difficulty to-day in dealing with the Indian Territory question, it has arisen from what I regard as the inconsiderate manner of legislation heretofore in respect to railroads through that Territory. I think if it had not been for some, I may be permitted to say, unwise provisions in existing railroad charters in that Territory, the whole Territory, or certainly that part of it under the control of the five civilized nations, would be ready to come under the immediate and direct jurisdiction of the United States, and be legislated for and about as other territory in the United States is. I do not know that there is anything in this bill which will operate against that, but I desire myself to see that legislation in reference to the Indian Territory shall all contribute to that end. There has been legislation heretofore in reference to railroads in that Territory which has had precisely the opposite direction. The alienation of the Indians and the hostility to the United States policy in reference to Indians generally and that Territory in particular, which exists there, has its foundation in our lack of regard for some treaty obligations we have with regard to that Territory, in reference to railroads.

Now, that the Territory can remain there as a barrier in the way of railroads, nobody who looks at it, it seems to me, can for a moment contend. The railroads must go through, but they ought to go through with great care, not only in reference to treaty rights but in reference to existing prejudices in that Territory growing out of mistaken ideas the Indians have of the purport and extent of legislation heretofore upon the subject. I wish, therefore, that the Senator from Arkansas would consent that this bill might go to the Committee on Indian Affairs that they might have as much as possible the legislation in reference to that Territory before them when they come to consider, as they must, the future policy of the Government in reference to those Indians and what measures will most contribute to make them a part of the United States in fact as they are now in their territorial location.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator from Texas proceeds, the Chair feels it his duty to remind the Senate that a motion to reconsider is not debatable except by unanimous consent, and that this debate is going on by unanimous consent. The Senator from Texas has the floor.

Mr. MAXEY. I will then ask unanimous consent to say now what I wish to say, because I want the Senate to understand the question perfectly. My object in rising is to keep in the minds of Senators the distinction which separates the bill introduced by me from that which was offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. Had we not better dispose of the bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas, which is the one now before the Senate, and then let the Senator from Texas state the distinction between that case and his? We shall in that way keep the bills separate.

Mr. MAXEY. That is what I want to do, and I wish to do it now for the reason that Senators may understand my position.

The original act to which the bill offered by me is a proposed amendment was referred to the Committee on Railroads without a dissenting voice; it was reported by that committee, and after a long discussion involving every question of constitutional law, of treaty, and of the rights of the Indians, was passed by the Senate by over two-thirds majority. It went to the House—I can speak of that now for it was in a past Congress—and was passed there by over three-fourths majority after discussion.

The bill which is now introduced by me was offered at the last, the Forty-eighth, Congress, and was referred to the Committee on Railroads, the same committee which reported the original bill. It was by that committee examined and reported to the Senate in the Forty-eighth Congress unanimously so far as the report goes, but was not passed at the last session for want of time. There was no objection to the original bill being referred to the Committee on Railroads, and there was no objection at the last Congress to the very bill which I now introduce being referred to the Committee on Railroads. So I say that committee already has possession of every fact not only in regard to the original bill but every fact in regard to this proposed amendment, and hence it is the proper and right committee, in my judgment, for the reference.

I say all this having the highest respect for the Committee on Indian Affairs, having no fear about that committee. I am myself a member of that committee, and I think I could take care of the bill there very well; but it is right for this bill to go to the Committee on Railroads. They have all the facts now. It will expedite time, and bring the bill back much earlier, because they have already made the investigation.

In taking a vote on the reference of the bill introduced by my friend from Arkansas, which is a different bill, I beg that the Senate will bear in mind that the bill introduced by me is simply the reoffering of a bill which was once reported by the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. BROWN. I ask the consent of the Senate, as I believe I can only proceed by unanimous consent, to make a few remarks on this question.

If the question were an open one now as to the propriety of building railroads through the Indian Territory, it might be proper to refer this bill and all other bills of like character to the Committee on Indian Affairs; but the champion of the Indian cause—and I think I justly call him so—my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], admits that railroads must be built through that Territory. I think he is right. He admits that the Indians can not occupy that vast territory and prevent the connections of the great highways of commerce being made through the Territory, and therefore it is proper that railroads should be built there. So the Senate has determined on two or three occasions. Either in the Forty-sixth Congress, or at the first session of the Forty-seventh, the first act was passed incorporating a railroad company there or giving it the right to build through that Territory. At the last Congress there were one or two other charters granted, clearly establishing the policy of building railroads through the Territory. The propriety of the policy is admitted by the strongest advocate of the Indian cause. The Committee on Railroads are entirely familiar with this question. They have looked into it in all its bearings. It has been discussed extensively here in the Senate. The champions of the Indian cause have had much to say on that subject, and why should we at this stage change the rule upon it? What is there in the conduct of the Committee on Railroads that has been condemned by the body? Why should the question be now withdrawn from the Committee on Railroads and referred to another committee, to wit, the Committee on Indian Affairs?

As I have said, if it were a question whether we would build railroads across the Territory or not, then all these suggestions as to treaty stipulations might come up and be proper for consideration; but those questions having been decided over and over again by the Senate, I can see no reason now for an implied reflection upon the conduct of the Committee on Railroads by taking a bill like this from them and referring it to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

I think, therefore, that both bills should be referred, as heretofore, to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, the question is not so much whether railroads shall be built through that Territory, but as to how and on what terms. It is more desirable, it seems to me, that they shall be so built through that Territory as to have the Indians desire to have them through the Territory. Whatever course in the building of these railroads will tend to make the Indians desire to have railroads built through that Territory will contribute more to the solution of the question than any other policy which we could adopt, and that is all I care for. I want——

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him one moment? Will the Senator please explain to the Senate how it would better conciliate the Indians to have a bill recommended by the Indian Committee passed to build a railroad across the Territory than it would if it were recommended by the Railroad or any other committee?

Mr. DAWES. I am not here to criticise the Railroad Committee or its policy. I am here to suggest that possibly the Indian Committee understand—they certainly ought to understand—the best method of adapting legislation on this subject to the Indian Territory, or the best method of authorizing the building of a railroad through that Territory. They ought to understand it better. The Senator from Texas, who introduced one of these bills, is, as he says, a member of the Indian Committee. I do not know but that he is also of the Railroad Committee.

Mr. MAXEY. I am not.

Mr. DAWES. I have no criticism to make on the Senator's position in this matter. I know he is familiar with what are the views, what are the wants, and what are the necessities of the Indians in the Indian Territory. I have been there with him myself; and I have no doubt that he is as familiar as any Senator in this body with the feelings of those Indians in reference to existing railroads running through that Territory, all growing out of a mistake, as I think every one will say, in the manner of authorizing existing railroads to be built. Now that the railroad is built, the building of the railroad is a great blessing to the Indians; but they do not see it; they are blinded by a fear that something in the manner of authorizing that railroad will ultimately work great wrong to them.

Mr. MAXEY. Allow me to interrupt the Senator a moment. I am familiar, as the Senator states, with the status of the Indian Territory, I think, not only on the question of railroads, but pretty well all about their general ideas. I have lived near them a long time. I know the objections which they have to the measure to which the gentleman refers, involving land grants. I also know their views in regard to this road; and their views are not inimical to, on the contrary they are in favor of, the measure I propose.

Mr. DAWES. I do not understand that they are opposed to it; but I understand that some of the details of machinery in the act which authorized the other road to which the Senator has alluded were such as to make a good deal of friction and complaint on the part of the Indians as to the manner of adjusting the land damages and so on.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator mean the manner or the amount?

Mr. DAWES. The manner of adjusting the damages.

Mr. BROWN. What was the manner?

Mr. DAWES. I can not go into the details. I know of the existence of complaint. I have no doubt that the Indians can be brought to be made friends of railroad enterprises there just as easily as they were made hostile by the legislation which has gone before. I desire to have this bill referred to the Indian Committee because I believe the Indian Committee could adjust those questions with the Indian Territorial government and the Indian Territory itself better than the Railroad Committee could do it.

I agree heartily with all these Senators, as I said before, in the idea that railroads in some form and by some authority have got to cross and recross that Territory as all other parts of the territory within the limits of the United States. I think the Indians are beginning to see that fact, but the Indians at the same time feel that there is a desire to get this authority and the necessary land for the building of railroads in a way different from that which seems to them to be just. I do not think the intention is to do that; but there is often more in the way you deal with an Indian than in the substance of what you do with him. Those who know the Indians best, unless they are hostile to the thing itself, are the best persons to consider the question. I do not myself claim any such thing, but aside from myself the members of the Indian Committee who have lived with or in the vicinity of the Indians, and have had more to do with them than anybody else, are well informed on these questions. Men upon that committee have recently had considerable knowledge of their attitude toward the railroads, certainly more than the Railroad Committee can possibly have, and the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs are, in my opinion, better capable of considering the questions of detail about these railroads than the Railroad Committee. That is all I have to say.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is not a question of the construction of railroads over the public domain of the United States. The proposed road is not to cross one foot of the public domain. It is to be built through territory that we have by treaty set apart to the use in fee of certain Indian tribes. It is not our property. It is not a question of chartering a railroad, under our general laws, through the public domain, giving certain rights of way; but it is a question of giving a right of way over territory that we have ceded away to certain Indian tribes. Now, the very first question that is presented by such a bill is, have we reserved by treaty a right to grant such charters to railroads to run across these lands thus ceded to the Indian tribes?

The gentlemen say railroads must be built. I am not inimical to the building of them anywhere; but I do not believe that broken faith makes a good substructure for a railroad company or any other organization, and I think for one that this involves the question of the treaty rights of these Indians first, and in the second place involves negotiation with them, or some provision of law by which they are to be compensated for the land that is taken for this railroad company; and as it involves further provisions in the bill as to the intercourse of the laborers, white men who are to be brought into the Territory in the construction and operation of this railroad, I say it must be plain to every Senator that these are topics the decision of which should be committed to the committee of this body that is charged with legislation in relation to the Indian tribes.

I understand that during the last summer a subcommittee of that committee have been among these tribes. They have been making careful inquiry as to their wants; they have been considering some change of relation between the General Government and the tribes; and I do not hesitate to announce for myself that substantial changes must be made and made speedily, but they should be made by treaty; they should be made by the concurrence of both parties; and if we are to come upon a fair basis and a fair and amicable relation with these people in these negotiations we should not attempt ruthlessly to deal with their rights without consulting them.

For one, I hold that if our present treaties stand in the way, then we can only grant these rights after negotiation with the tribes, and we should be particularly careful that all the legislation upon this subject secures all their rights.

But I have been told by the Senator from Kansas that I opposed these bills on the floor of the Senate. So I did. For one thing I was opposed to these bills because they neither granted to the legislature of these tribes in the Territory any powers to impose taxes upon the corporate property within the Territory, but the bills did not provide themselves for any such taxation. They allowed these corporations to build the railroads, and simply contained a provision that at some time in the future, when it might please Congress, Congress might provide for taxation for the benefit of the treasury of the tribe. That was one reason why I opposed them, and I stand still upon the proposition that they should pay a fair price for the lands they take, that it should be a matter of kind negotiation with these people, and that as to taxation, the corporate property that is invested there should at least be subject to like burdens with those which it bears in the States of the Union.

I want to raise no controversy with the Committee on Railroads, but I do think it must be obvious to every Senator that it is clearly the function of the Committee on Indian Affairs to consider these incidents of this legislation to which I have referred.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, my distinguished friend, the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], observed that this bill had been reported with substantial unanimity, or had been unanimously reported by the Committee on Railroads, at a former session. I do not wish to be misunderstood; so I will make a partial correction, at least, of that statement.

I have the honor to be a member of the Committee on Railroads and have served there now some four or five years. I have never liked these railroad bills, and have opposed them in committee, and have suggested many minor amendments, some of which have been adopted; but the fundamental defect has been in each of the bills as they have been successively reported and some of them passed, that they totally disregard this fact: The Indian Territory exists by treaty; every right these Indians have there is created by treaties with the various tribes; and yet these railroad bills proceed with total disregard of treaty rights. I say "total." They do not ask the Indians to make a treaty with regard to them; they create the road, and set apart what may appear to be a reasonable sum as compensation, something to be set aside as a permanent fund for the benefit of the Indians; but it is not because the Indians have agreed to it, it is because we in our judgment think it is about a fair thing to give the Indians.

Either the Territory in question is a creature of treaty or it is not. Let us come to some conclusion about it. Let us make a new arrangement with the Indians for the future, if you choose, by which they shall waive all treaty rights and start upon some new basis; but for the present I see no way of dealing with them, at least in a matter so serious as this, taking away their lands, except by fair agreement. There may be a natural fear there—they may be entirely at sea—if this is to be the way the Federal Congress is to deal with their property.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, time and again we hear in this body about making new treaties with Indian tribes. The Congress of the United States has legislated upon that subject, and forbidden any more treaties with any Indian tribe at all; and in order to make a treaty we must first get rid of the existing legislation.

Again, we have heard to-day from the Senator from Indiana that the five civilized tribes of Indians hold their lands in fee. Mr. President, they hold no lands in fee, unless the Cherokees may be said to have that sort of title. The other tribes in the Indian Territory hold simply a determinable fee, an incomplete title to their lands, and by the language of the treaties themselves it is provided that they only hold those lands so long as they maintain their tribal autonomy and remain in actual pedis possessio. I have read these treaties in the Senate time and again.

Mr. DAWES. Allow me to say that that very element in the title to the land which the other tribes held, except the Cherokees, is the element of distrust on their part and hostility on their part to these railroads. They have got the impression, growing out of the phraseology contained in the charters, that every one of these efforts tends to and will ultimately result in wresting their lands from them. Now, a little negotiation, a little fair and square talk with them, and a little reasoning with them, will bring the Indians to see what is for their interest in reference to these railroads and what is the best way to adjust their claims upon those who build the railroads.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts will do me the justice to admit that he has never heard me raise my voice on this floor and has never heard me give a vote in favor of violating any treaty stipulation with any Indian tribe. Upon the other hand I have persistently and consistently maintained that these helpless and almost hopeless people should be treated with the largest justice and charity.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will allow me, I wish to say in corroboration of what has been said by the Senator from Missouri that the original bill to which the bill I propose is an amendment makes provision completely for the payment of every foot of the right of way and a very large price was imposed, and not only so but before that took effect the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations had sixty days within which to file a protest if they saw proper to do so.

On the other point raised by the Senator from Indiana, whether the fee-simple is in the United States or in the Indian nation, let me say that it was originally in the United States; the right of eminent domain is in the United States, and the jurisdiction being in the United States a railroad authorized by the United States has as much right to pass over that country as a road has to pass over Missouri under a charter from that State.

Mr. VEST. I was about to remark, Mr. President, that if a railroad company sees proper to apply to a circuit court in the State of Missouri to run over my farm and through my house, that court appoints commissioners, who condemn my land against my protest and take it for the use of that corporation, and that is done by the statutory law of each of the States. Are the Indians in this country to be placed upon a pedestal above the law? Are we to be told that this domain is so sacred that no railroad shall run through it in the interest of commerce and civilization? I say, sir, that that is a distinction of privilege to the Indian to which he has never arrived, and which I pray God he may never reach. I propose to treat these Indians as I would treat white men. Whether the land be held in fee or not, they should be amenable to the same laws and to the same course as the other people of the United States.

The Railroad Committee having investigated this subject, why the necessity of putting it before any other tribunal? Does the Senator from Indiana want to amend the bill when it is reported, or the Senator from Connecticut? Of course that right will be retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INGALLS in the chair). Will the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Railroads?

Mr. HARRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. TELLER. Which bill is this?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill introduced by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY].

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. HAMPTON. I was paired with the Senator from California [Mr. MILLER]. I do not know whether it was a permanent pair or not. I should like to ask his colleague what the understanding was. I have voted on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary did not understand whether the Senator from South Carolina wished to withdraw his vote.

Mr. HAMPTON. It will depend on what is said by the colleague of the Senator from California. I do not know whether or not the pair was a permanent one. I am perfectly willing to pair with him permanently. I do not know how the pair affects this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As there is no response the Senator will be compelled to decide for himself.

Mr. HAMPTON. Then I shall let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Logan,	Platt,
Allison,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Manderson,	Stanford,

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the motion made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] to refer the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Indiana to make the proposition to refer this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs because he is apprehensive of some ruthless invasion of the Indian Territory by this endeavor to construct a railroad. I also understand from what he says that he is opposed to the construction of a railroad through the Indian Territory. That is what this motion to reconsider means, to refer this bill to a committee other than a committee that has once reported upon it after having heard the subject discussed at two sessions of the last Congress.

Now, sir, I undertake to say that if the Senator from Indiana be correct in his proposition that these Indians have a fee-simple title, they are to all intents and purposes a separate government and the United States Government as such can exercise no jurisdiction over their lands, and therefore can not exert the right of eminent domain. Then there is no reason, no sense, in referring this bill to either of the committees named or to any committee. But, sir, the Committee on Railroads do believe differently. If I can accept what they have done in reporting this and similar bills heretofore they believe that this Government can exercise that right over the Indian Territory, that this Government can condemn lands there for the purpose of constructing one or more railroads. The Committee on Railroads as such has reported that this Government can go there and exercise the same authority as a State government exercises over private property when it condemns private property for public uses and pays compensation therefor.

If this bill is to go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, there can be no reason assigned for it except that the Senate has changed its view in reference to the construction of a railroad across the Indian Territory, that the Senate has not the confidence in the Railroad Committee that it has in other committees; because the insinuation is broadly cast out here that we have not that respect for treaty obligations which the Indian Committee itself has. I may not have that respect for the Indians which some Senators have, but I really think I do have respect for all the treaty obligations made with the Indians.

I say first that it is the right of this Government to condemn land in the Indian Territory; and I believe it will conserve a great public purpose to construct the proposed railroad; and for that reason I can honestly say while I am a member of the Railroad Committee that I believe the bill ought to remain in the hands of that committee, and they ought to have the entire control of it and report it back here either favorably or adversely. It is a proposition to construct a railroad, and not to make a treaty with the Indians. It is a proposition to construct a railroad across the Indian Territory, to be sure; but the Railroad Committee has passed upon it and Congress has passed upon it, and I do not see how the Senator can becomingly ask that the bill shall be taken from its proper committee and referred to another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as proposed by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I believe the order of business is still the introduction of bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A bill has been introduced by the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], being a bill (S. 91) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant the right of way for a railroad and telegraph line through the land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes." The Senator from Texas has moved that this bill be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. MAXEY. I have moved that the bill be referred to the Committee on Railroads and I simply want to call the attention of the Senate in a word to the difference between the bill just voted on and this. The original act of which this is an amendment came from the Committee on Railroads, having been referred there without any objection, and this bill is an amendment of that. At the last session it went to the Committee on Railroads and was reported from that committee, as I said, without objection so far as the record shows. If there was any objection the record does not show it. The record shows the report and no minority report. That committee having investigated this whole matter, having had charge of the original act, having had charge of this very bill at the last session, I say that it is useless and idle to take it away from that committee and refer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I do not think it would be just to the Committee on Railroads, I do not think it would be just to me. I have had the matter investigated, and all the testimony brought in that could be, and the Senate has passed upon the question by over a two-thirds majority.

Mr. HARRISON. I certainly have no disposition to do anything that might seem unkind to the Senator from Texas, but I think he will advance his own bill if he will acquiesce in the vote of the Senate just taken and let this bill go to the Committee on Indian Affairs with the other. I assure him that so far as I am concerned I have only a disposition that these bills proceed conformably to law and treaty, and that I have every disposition in the world to advance the building of railroads there upon fair and just terms when it can be done conformably to the treaties and law. Nor have I any objection in the world to the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] that after the Committee on Indian Affairs have considered this phase of the question the bill shall then go to the Committee on Railroads. I really think the Senator from Texas would advance the interests of his bill by acquiescing in the vote of the Senate and letting it take the course I have proposed.

Mr. MAXEY. I insist, sir, on the bill being referred where it properly belongs, to the Committee on Railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Texas to refer this bill to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. HARRISON. I move to amend by substituting the Committee on Indian Affairs. If we are to have another roll-call, let us try it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must hold that the pending motion is not amendable. If it be voted down, then the motion of the Senator from Indiana would be in order.

Mr. CULLOM. There seems to be a good deal of conflict over this question of references which I think might be got along without. In the first place, the Railroad Committee, as has been stated, has had control of this subject in the case of the bills which have been passed by the Senate. Now, I suggest to the Senator from Indiana and the Senate that this bill be allowed to go to the Committee on Railroads, that that committee be permitted to investigate it and report it back if it sees proper, after which, so far as I am concerned as a part of that committee, I shall be perfectly willing to have it referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, to be dealt with, that it may be seen whether there is any real conflict.

Mr. MAXEY. I have no objection to that, but the original reference should be where the bill went before.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that will be agreed to without further objection.

Mr. HARRISON. As the Senator from Texas claims that this is a mere amendment of a bill considered and reported by the Railroad Committee, with the understanding just stated, and acknowledging that difference—a slight one, but perhaps enough to take it out of the fate of the other bill—I shall be content.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. MAXEY introduced a bill (S. 92) for the relief of William Franklin Grounds; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 164) to prohibit the judges and courts of the United States from authorizing the borrowing of money by receivers on the security of railroad or other corporate property beyond the amount of the annual net income; also from appointing receivers of railroads without satisfactory evidence of the condition of said company upon an examination of its books and the person in charge of its receipts and expenditures; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I ask that this bill may lie on the table, and I give notice that I will ask the consent of the Senate to take it up at an early day that I may submit some remarks upon it before referring it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The courts of the United States are being made the frequent and convenient instruments of the most apparent frauds, having no other foundation than fraudulent collusion between the officials of corporations and parties having a merely nominal interest, without reference to the interests of the State or the people of the States by whom the franchises were granted and to the loss or detriment of all honest and bona fide creditors, and of the domestic creditors and the people whose labor has been made use of by them.

The record of a case now pending in the State of Florida and of those which have preceded it will conclusively establish this statement, and the necessity of legislation not only in the interests of common honesty and justice but to preserve the good reputation of the courts of the United States and to prevent them from becoming the synonym of fraud and robbery.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be considered read the second time, and lie on the table.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 165) for the relief of William H. Gray, of Kentucky; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 166) for the relief of Perry G. Wall and the executors of O. B. Hart, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 185) to provide for the erection of a public building at the town of Houlton, Me.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 186) for the relief of Samuel D. Bailey; Samuel D. Bailey, administrator of the estate of B. C. Bailey, and Nancy S. Ballard, administratrix of the estate of Calvin Ballard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 187) for the relief of Frederick W. Ruggles, of Westport, Nova Scotia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 188) to prevent the acquisition of real property by aliens, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. PLUMB. That is the same bill which was introduced by me at the last session of Congress, and reported by the Committee on Public Lands. I move its reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 189) granting the right of way through the Fort Selden military reservation, New Mexico, to the Rio Grande, Mexico and Pacific Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 190) to establish a court of appeals; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 194) to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also introduced a bill (S. 195) to provide for the study of physiology, and the effect of intoxicating, narcotic, and poisonous substances upon life, health, and welfare, by the pupils in the public schools of the Territories and the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 196) for the relief of Willis N. Arnold; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 197) to increase the pension of Florence Murray; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 198) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to state in connection with the introduction of the bill that it is the same one which was passed by the Senate during the last Congress but which did not become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. I introduced the same bill as the chairman of the committee has introduced, and I wish to withdraw the introduction of the bill of the same title.

Mr. MITCHELL. Had I known that fact I should not have introduced my bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I prefer that it should be introduced by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks leave to withdraw a bill introduced by him in respect to pensions. If there is no objection, it may be withdrawn.

Mr. BLAIR. There is no difference except a slight difference in the title. I inserted "the late civil war," and I suggest to the chairman that possibly that amendment to the title of his bill will be no injury to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senator from New Hampshire will have leave to withdraw his bill.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 221) for the relief of Alexander Smiley; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 1) filling existing vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; which was read twice by its title, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TELLER introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 2) directing the cancellation of the one and two dollar United States notes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to have the joint resolution lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will lie on the table.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 3) for the relief of the widow and children of John W. Judson, late agent of the United States at Oswego, N. Y., for public works on Lake Ontario; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB. I have introduced heretofore at different Congresses a joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States. By the request of the same parties who induced me to present the former amendment, I introduce now the same joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. R. 4) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States in relation to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. DOLPH, it was Ordered, That the papers of Ben Holladay be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. JACKSON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the cases of Alfred G. Hatfield, Mrs. Eliza E. Hebert, William H. Crook, Frank and Surah Della Torre, and John Leathers be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, there being no adverse reports.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of William Wheeler Hubbell be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of William E. Woodbridge be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Patents, there being no adverse report.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Maj. William M. Maynadier be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, there being no adverse report.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of Egbert Thompson be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, there being no adverse report.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that the same order be made in regard to the various private bills I introduced, that the papers on file in each case be withdrawn and referred to the proper committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made unless there be objection.

JOINT RULES FOR THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the following be the joint rules of the two Houses.

JOINT RULES OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

I.—ORGANIZATION.

At the commencement of each Congress, and of each session thereafter, it shall, on motion, be the duty of the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to communicate promptly to the other House notice of the appearance of a quorum and of the organization of their respective Houses for the transaction of business, which notice shall be in writing and be duly attested by each of said officers.

II.—MESSAGES.

1. All messages between the two Houses shall be communicated by the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, or by clerks designated by them for that purpose, which messages shall be announced at the door of each House by the Doorkeeper or his assistant, and shall be communicated to the Chair by the person by whom they may be sent.

2. All messages from the President of the United States or the other House, all reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and all communications addressed to the Senate or House of Representatives, shall be placed in order on the table of the presiding officer of each House.

3. It shall be the duty of the presiding officer of each House, immediately after the reading and approval of the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting, to lay before the Senate or House of Representatives, as the case may be, all messages on their respective tables, for reference to appropriate committees, or for such other action as may be deemed proper.

4. All bills, joint and concurrent resolutions, referred to committees under the foregoing clause, shall be printed, unless otherwise ordered at the time of reference.

III.—COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

All bills, joint resolutions, or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill or joint resolution has commenced.

IV.—GENERAL APPROPRIATION BILLS.

1. No amendment shall be in order to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be to carry out the provisions of existing law, or treaty stipulation, or in pursuance of a resolution of the House having the bill under consideration, unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee.

2. No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto, and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be decided without debate.

V.—ENGROSSED BILLS.

Bills, joint and concurrent resolutions, which have passed either House, and amendments thereto which shall have passed the other House, shall be engrossed on paper and attested by the signature of the Secretary of the Senate or Clerk of the House of Representatives, respectively, as the case may be.

VI.—ENROLLED BILLS.

1. After a bill or joint resolution shall have passed both Houses, it shall be duly enrolled on parchment by the Secretary or Clerk of the House in which said bill or joint resolution originated; shall be examined by a member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of said House, who shall carefully examine and compare the enrolled with the engrossed bill as passed by both Houses, and, correcting all errors, if any be found, report the said bill or joint resolution forthwith for signature, as hereinafter provided.

2. After examination of any bill or joint resolution by a member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of either House, it shall be reported, first to the House of Representatives, where it shall be signed by the Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, and be communicated forthwith to the Senate for the signature of its President or President pro tempore, as the case may be in either House.

3. After a bill or joint resolution shall have been thus signed in each House, it shall be presented to the President of the United States by a member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the House in which it originated, which fact shall be indorsed on the back of said bill or joint resolution, and be duly attested by the Secretary or Clerk, as the case may be, of the House in which it did originate.

4. The member of the Committee on Enrolled Bills presenting to the President an enrolled bill or joint resolution, shall certify to the Secretary or Clerk of the House in which the same originated the date of such presentation, which shall be entered on the Journal of said House.

VII.—RESOLUTIONS.

All resolutions which are to be presented to the President of the United States or head of a Department shall be duly engrossed, attested by the Secretary or Clerk of the House adopting [or agreeing to] the same, and by him be presented to the President or head of a Department as the case may be.

VIII.—BILLS, JOINT AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS.

1. Each House shall transmit to the other all papers on which any bill, joint or concurrent resolution shall be founded, and when a bill, joint or concurrent resolution which has passed one House shall be rejected in [by] the other, it shall not be introduced or submitted again during the same session without a notice of ten days and leave of two-thirds of the House in which it shall be renewed.

2. When a bill, joint or concurrent resolution, which shall have passed one House, is rejected by the other, notice thereof shall be given to the House passing the same.

3. After each House shall have adhered to their disagreement, a bill, joint or concurrent resolution shall be lost.

IX.—CONFERENCES.

1. When a bill, joint or concurrent resolution has passed one House and been amended in the other, it shall be in order for the amending House to at once insist on its amendment or amendments, and ask a conference thereon with the other House, or in case it does not so insist, and the originating House disagrees to said amendment or amendments, it shall be in order at the time of such disagreement to move a conference thereon with the other House. If a conference be ordered, the presiding officer shall appoint three members as managers at the said conference on the part of the dissenting House, which action shall be promptly communicated to the other House. If that House insist on its amendment or amendments, and agree to the proposed conference, the presiding officer thereof shall thereupon appoint three Senators or Representatives, as the case may be, to represent said House at said conference, which action shall be promptly communicated to the other House.

2. All committees of conference shall meet at the call of their chairman, and shall state verbally or in writing, as they may choose, the reasons for the actions of their respective Houses touching the amendment or amendments in dispute between the two Houses. It shall not be in order for a conference committee to consider or include in their report matter or subjects not in dispute between their respective Houses, nor shall the committee change the text of a bill, joint or concurrent resolution to which both Houses have agreed, unless it becomes necessary to change the text in order to perfect the bill after amendment.

3. The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, while either House is dividing, or pending a motion to adjourn, and a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the two Houses what effect the report will have upon the subjects or propositions to which they relate shall accompany every conference report.

X.—CALENDARS.

During the last ten days of a session, when either House has proceeded to the consideration of business on a calendar, bills, joint and concurrent resolutions of the other House shall be given precedence, and shall be taken up and disposed of in regular order unless otherwise ordered.

XI.—JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE LIBRARY.

There shall be a Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, to consist of three members on the part of each House, to which shall be referred all proposed legislation or matters touching said Library, and all matters relating to statuary or pictures or works of art which may come before either House. It shall also superintend and direct the expenditure of all moneys appropriated therefor, and shall perform such other duties as are or may be directed by law or order of the two Houses, and during the period between the end [expiration] of a Congress and the commencement of the next, all duties devolving by law or otherwise on the Joint Committee on the Library shall be performed by the members of said committee on the part of the Senate of the preceding Congress.

XII.—JOINT ADDRESS TO THE PRESIDENT.

When the two Houses shall judge it proper to make a joint address to the President it shall be presented to him at such place and time as he may designate by the President or President pro tempore of the Senate in the presence of the Speaker or Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives, and both Houses.

XIII.—SALE OF LIQUORS FORBIDDEN.

No spirituous or malt liquors shall be offered for sale, exhibited, or kept within the Capitol, or in any room or building connected therewith, or on the public grounds adjacent thereto; and it shall be the duty of the Sergeants-at-Arms of the two Houses, under the supervision of the presiding officers thereof, respectively, to strictly enforce the foregoing provisions, and any officer or employé of either House who shall in any manner violate or connive at the violation of this rule shall be dismissed from office.

TARIF DUTIES.

Mr. CAMERON submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Finance:

Resolved, That inasmuch as the business industries of the country at present seem to be reviving, it is inexpedient during this Congress to pass upon any measure looking to a reduction of tariff duties.

Resolved, That any future reduction of the tariff should be based upon information common to the country, as shown by complete census returns, and at such definite periods as can be readily anticipated and met by the different producing interests of the country.

IMPROVEMENT OF BROAD CREEK, DELAWARE.

Mr. GRAY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to communicate to the Senate information as to the state of the work done by the United States Government in 1881 and 1882 for the improvement of the navigation of Broad Creek, in Delaware, and what is necessary to complete said work, and the amount of money required therefor.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of the annual message of the President and the reports proper of the heads of Departments, Comptroller of the Currency, Director of the Mint, and Treasurer of the United States, not including appendices.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to state that unless this resolution shall pass at the present time, or soon, we shall be delayed in receiving these reports of the different Departments for about ninety days. This is intended to obviate the delay so that we can have these documents, as they are already in type, printed at once. I think there will be no objection. I believe the Committee on Printing are in favor of the resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. I understand that this is the usual resolution passed for the printing of the President's message and accompanying reports.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to have the resolution again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. MANDERSON. All the matter is in type, I understand, and the cost of printing this thousand copies will be quite small. I should like to know, however, from the Senator from Vermont whether he desires by this resolution to place the message and accompanying reports under one cover.

Mr. MORRILL. No, to have each separately, as the various reports will be called for by Senators and their constituents. It is a great convenience to have them early in the session, instead of waiting until next March for them.

Mr. PLUMB. There is a provision of the Revised Statutes, section 3798, which provides for the printing of all the documents ordinarily known as documents accompanying the President's message, and I want to know something about what we are to get as the result of this apparent duplication. The section provides:

Of the documents named in this section there shall be printed and bound, in addition to the usual number for Congress, the following numbers of copies, namely:

First. Of the documents accompanying the annual reports of the Executive Departments, 1,000 copies for the use of the members of the Senate, and 2,000 copies for the use of the members of the House of Representatives.

Second. Of the President's message, the annual reports of the Executive Departments, and the abridgment of accompanying documents, unless otherwise ordered by either House, 10,000 copies for the use of the members of the Senate, and 25,000 copies for the use of the members of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MANDERSON. The Senator from Kansas will permit me to interrupt him. That, as I understand it, provides for printing the reports of the heads of Departments and all the accompanying documents in extenso. This resolution provides, not for the accompanying documents, but simply for the reports of the Department chiefs, each of which is but a small pamphlet.

Mr. MORRILL. Each with a paper cover.

Mr. MANDERSON. In the natural order of printing we shall not get the reports called for by the statute until late in February or early in March.

Mr. PLUMB. I wanted to know what the purpose of this was, whether we were to have a double number printed of the reports. It seems to me provision has already been made for printing all these documents; but if any more are necessary, of course the resolution is proper.

Mr. MANDERSON. This does not call for the printing of the accompanying documents, but simply the reports proper.

Mr. ALLISON. I notice that this only provides for the printing of the report of the Director of the Mint, the Treasurer of the United States, and one or two other subordinate officers in the Treasury.

Mr. MORRILL. And the reports of all the heads of Departments.

Mr. ALLISON. And of all the heads of Departments. I do not know whether that distinction has been kept up hitherto, or whether we have been in the habit of printing also the report, for instance, of the Commissioner of Pensions and of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and other subordinate officers, which of course are in substance repeated in the reports of the heads of Departments. In other words, I do not see any special reason why we should print the report of the Director of the Mint and the report of the Treasurer of the United States which would not apply at least to the reports of some of the other heads of bureaus in our Government. There may be some reason, and, if so, I should be glad to know what it is.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not find upon a casual inspection of the Journals of some preceding sessions that similar action has been taken; and while it will be a very great affliction to be deprived of the perusal of these messages and reports for a brief time, inasmuch as there is evidently a misunderstanding about what has been done and what is now wanted to be done, I will move the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Printing, so that we may have a report to-morrow or at such early day as they may see fit to act on the subject.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection, if the Senator from Kansas thinks that the proper thing to be done. I will say, however, that I think precisely this was done at the last session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want respectfully to ask to be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Railroads. I do not make the request because I feel any very severe rebuke from the vote of the Senate to-day; but I have served on that committee for two years and I do not think I have been of much consequence to it. I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to allow me to withdraw from it. The committee at best is not a very desirable one to be upon, and especially so if it is simply to hear arguments and discussions and hold interminable sessions and then to have nothing else to do but hear. I prefer that some other Senator who comes from some section of the country that understands the peculiar questions which come before that committee shall occupy the place I now do on it.

Mr. INGALLS. The subject to which the Senator from Virginia refers is under consideration at the present time, and I will therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not want to occupy the floor; but I hope the Senator from Kansas will not compel me to do what the Presiding Officer of this body did on another occasion—simply decline to serve. I respectfully ask to be excused. I think the Senator from Kansas can afford to allow me to do that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas withdraw his motion?

Mr. INGALLS. I did not understand that the Senator from Virginia desired immediate action on the suggestion he made. He declines to serve on the committee. I do not understand that the fact of my making the motion to adjourn will interfere with his wishes.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I merely ask the Senator out of courtesy to allow the Senate to excuse me now. I know they will not hesitate to do it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas insist on his motion to adjourn?

Mr. INGALLS. I think I shall ask a vote on my motion to adjourn now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 14 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 8, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain-elect of the House, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God! Shrouded in the mystery of the solemn event, we stand in thought with love and sorrow by a new-made grave, the grave of our Vice-President, praying Thee to help us to lay to heart the lesson of his life, that sobriety, courtesy, honor, magnanimity, coupled with unflinching courage and fidelity to conviction, with virtue and religion, are true sucess. Help us likewise to lay to heart the lesson of his life's end, that there is but a step betwixt us and death; that when our last hour shall come we too may depart in peace, having a good conscience toward God and man. To the widow who sits in her desolation we pray Thee come with comfort and consolation. These and all other things necessary for life and godliness we humbly ask in the name and through the merits of Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

QUALIFICATIONS OF MEMBERS-ELECT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that some Representatives-elect who were not present in their seats yesterday are now in the Hall. If so, they will now come forward and take the oath of office.

Mr. THOMAS CROXTON of Virginia, Mr. RICHARD GUENTHER of Wisconsin, and Mr. JOHN S. HENDERSON of North Carolina presented themselves and were duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed in section 1757 of the Revised Statutes.

QUALIFICATION OF CHAPLAIN-ELECT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will also administer the oath of office to the Chaplain-elect.

Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., was then duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

COMMITTEE ON MILEAGE.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will appoint temporarily a special committee on mileage, in order that the accounts of members may be adjusted. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints as the committee the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. ROGERS, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. WELLBORN, the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOWARD, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. RANNEY, and the gentleman from California, Mr. FELTON.

PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE.

Mr. BLOUNT (appearing at the bar of the House in company with Mr. RANDALL and Mr. REED) said: Mr. Speaker, the committee appointed by the two Houses of Congress to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him of their organization for business, and their readiness to receive any communications he might be pleased to make, have discharged that duty; and the President has replied that he would immediately communicate with the two Houses in writing.

[A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the annual message of the President of the United States, which the Clerk will proceed to read.

[The message, which will be found in another part of to-day's RECORD, was read.]

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the message just read be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. REUBEN ELLWOOD.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to perform the sad duty of announcing to the House the death of my predecessor, Hon. REUBEN ELLWOOD, late a member of this House from the State of Illinois, who died at his home in the city of Sycamore on the 1st day of July last. I desire also to express in some slight degree the profound sorrow of the people of the fifth district of the State of Illinois in the death of their able and distinguished Representative.

I ask to have read the resolutions which I send to the desk, and beg leave to state that at some future and more convenient time the House will be called upon to further consider them and to accord to members the privilege of expressing the esteem in which the memory of the deceased is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That this House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. REUBEN ELLWOOD, late a member of this House from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted by the Clerk of the House to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate a copy of these proceedings to the Senate, and that as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased this House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] asks that the resolutions just read lie on the table for the present, and states that he will request the House at some future time to designate a day for their consideration. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued as to the resolutions proper. The last resolution proposes that the House do now adjourn; and the question is upon that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

Also, petition of William Hoyt and 35 others, citizens of New York city, asking that Congress shall place the coinage of silver upon equal footing with gold, provide for the issue of coin certificates of $5 and less, and that one and two dollar bills be kept in circulation and that they be issued in quantities equal to the demands of business—to the same committee.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of James McPeters, for reference of his claim to the Court of Claims under act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on Claims.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 9, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of March 3, 1885, certain information in regard to the boundary lines of the reservation heretofore occupied by the Sioux Indians at the Crow Creek agency, in Dakota; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be printed and with the accompanying papers referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. What is the pleasure of the Senate as to printing the accompanying papers?

Mr. ALLISON. I think they all ought to be printed.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to have them printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The document is quite a large one, with maps, &c.

Mr. DAWES. It certainly ought to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the accompanying papers be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY. My impression at the moment is that that order would provide for the usual 1,950 copies only, which would give a very small surplus for distribution. If the Senator from Massachusetts will allow the matter to lie without sending the document to the Printing Office, I will cause inquiry to be made by the clerk of the Printing Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Connecticut desire the motion to print to lie on the table for the present?

Mr. HAWLEY. Informally let the package remain, and the Senator from Massachusetts can make the motion afterward.

Mr. DAWES. Very well, let the entire package lie on the table. The motion to print may be made just as well after it has been examined by the Committee on Printing. If there is anything there that it is not necessary to have printed as part of the history of the matter, of course I do not desire to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication with the accompanying papers will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. DAWES. I think, on reflection, it would be better that a motion be made to print the documents and have that motion referred to the Committee on Printing. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the communication and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Printing, the Chair understands.

Mr. DAWES. No; I move that the accompanying papers be printed and that that motion be referred to the Committee on Printing so that they may report upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to print will be referred to the Committee on Printing, if there be no objection.

REPORT OF SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a full and complete statement of all the property in his possession belonging to the United States December 8, 1885; also a statement of the amount received from the sale of waste paper, old carpets, and condemned furniture; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SEWELL presented the petition of Elisha M. Luckett, of Camden, N. J., praying to be allowed arrears of pension for his service during the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JACKSON presented the petition of George L. Gray, of Franklin County, Tennessee, praying that his claim for supplies furnished the Federal Army be referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of the Tennessee State Teachers' Association, praying that national aid be granted to education; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HARRIS. I present the petition of C. B. Bryan & Co., of Memphis, Tenn., praying that a claim of theirs against the Government for the loss of a steamboat be referred to the Court of Claims. Upon the same subject I present a resolution, and I ask the reference of both the petition and the resolution to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Claims. The resolution itself is not in order at this moment. It will lie over, and the reference of it will be made at the proper time.

Mr. BROWN presented the petition of Andrew J. Cheney, of Cobb County, Georgia, praying that his claim for supplies furnished the Federal Army during the war be referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL presented resolutions of O. P. Morton Post, No. 14, Department of Missouri, Grand Army of the Republic, Joplin, Mo., favoring the passage of an amended Mexican war pension bill similar to that which was pending in the Forty-eighth Congress; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BROWN. Yesterday I introduced a bill to remove the political disabilities under which General A. R. Lawton, of Georgia, labors, if there be any disabilities under which he labors, under the fourteenth amendment. I now have his petition and present it, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, to accompany the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 319) to forfeit the unearned lands granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company "to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the States of Missouri and Arkansas to the Pacific coast," and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 320) to confirm the title of the residents thereof to the town or community grant of the town of Albuquerque, N. Mex., and for the allotment and disposition of the lands in said grant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 321) to provide for contesting surveys of private land grants, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 322) for the relief of S. N. Wood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 323) to remove the charge of desertion against David Wood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 324) for the erection of a public building at Opelousas, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 325) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza E. Hebert, widow of Jules J. Hebert, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 326) conferring authority upon the Court of Claims to review the case of Charles H. Adams vs. The United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 327) granting a pension to James E. O'Shea; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 332) for the relief of John Fraser; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 333) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 334) to declare certain lands subject to taxation and to release and quitclaim to any State, county, or municipality all equity and interest that the United States may have by reason of the neglect or refusal of any railroad company to pay costs of locating and selecting lands donated by act of Congress in and to lands sold and to be sold by States, counties, or municipalities for non-payment of taxes by any railroad company; also when costs of surveying and locating lands shall be due and payable by corporations entitled to the same; and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RANSOM introduced a bill (S. 335) to provide for protecting the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. RANSOM. This is the same bill which under a resolution of the Senate at the last Congress was reported by the Judiciary Committee to this body. It did not then pass, and I introduce it now and ask that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be so referred.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 336) to relieve certain appointed or enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps from the charge of desertion; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR. I will state in connection with this bill that it was prepared by the Navy Department, the design of it being to extend to so-called deserters from the Navy the same relief from disabilities incurred thereby which has already been extended to deserters from the Army by legislation—in the Forty-seventh Congress, I think. I move that the bill with the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. At the request and in behalf of the National Woman's Suffrage Association I introduce a joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. R. 5) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article be proposed to the Legislatures of the several States as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States; which, when ratified by three-fourths of the said Legislatures, shall be valid as part of said Constitution, namely:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

SEC. 2. The Congress shall have power, by appropriate legislation, to enforce the provisions of this article.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 6) proposing an amendment to the Constitution in relation to alcoholic liquors and other poisonous beverages; which was read twice by its title, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following amendment to the Constitution be, and hereby is, proposed to the States, to become valid when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, as provided in the Constitution:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. From and after the year of our Lord 1900 the manufacture and sale of distilled alcoholic intoxicating liquors, or alcoholic liquors any part of which is obtained by distillation or process equivalent thereto, or any intoxicating liquors mixed or adulterated with ardent spirits or with any poison whatever, except for medicinal, mechanical, chemical, and scientific purposes, and for use in the arts, anywhere within the United States and the Territories thereof, shall cease; and the importation of such liquors from foreign states and countries to the United States and Territories, and the exportation of such liquors from and the transportation thereof within and through any part of this country, except for the use and purposes aforesaid, shall be, and hereby is, forever thereafter prohibited.

SEC. 2. Nothing in this article shall be construed to waive or abridge any existing power of Congress, nor the right, which is hereby recognized, of the people of any State or Territory to enact laws to prevent the increase and for the suppression or regulation of the manufacture, sale, and use of liquors, and the ingredients thereof, any part of which is alcoholic, intoxicating, or poisonous, within its own limits, and for the exclusion of such liquors and ingredients therefrom at any time, as well before as after the close of the year of our Lord 1900; but until then, and until ten years after the ratification hereof as provided in the next section, no State or Territory shall interfere with the transportation of said liquor or ingredients, in packages safely secured, over the usual lines of traffic, to other States and Territories wherein the manufacture, sale, and use thereof for other purposes and use than those excepted in the first section shall be lawful: Provided, That the true destination of such packages be plainly marked thereon.

SEC. 3. Should this article not be ratified by three-fourths of the States on or before the last day of December, 1890, then the first section hereof shall take effect and be in force at the expiration of ten years from such ratification; and the assent of any State to this article shall not be rescinded nor reversed.

SEC. 4. Congress shall enforce this article by all needful legislation.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 7) as to giving notice to terminate the convention of June 3, 1875, with His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 8) to provide for the settlement of accounts of the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

C. B. BRYAN & CO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Concurrent or other resolutions" are now in order, and the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS], which will be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the claim of Messrs. C. B. Bryan & Co., of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, for the value of a boat and its lading of coal, destroyed by collision with the United States snag-boat De Russy, in the Mississippi River, November 17, 1879 (said boat and cargo being valued by said claimants at $3,643.60), be referred to the Court of Claims, in conformity to the provisions of section 1059, Revised Statutes.

Mr. HOAR. I think that order should go to the Committee on Claims in the first instance. If I understand the order aright, it is an order not under what is known as the Bowman act, but under the Revised Statutes to send the case to the Court of Claims. The effect of that order is that the Court of Claims are authorized to render judgment, and we should be bound, I suppose, to treat it as an adjudication which binds the Government to appropriate the amount.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Tennessee as desiring to refer the resolution to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRIS. My motion was to refer the resolution to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the question was stated to be on the adoption of the order.

Mr. HARRIS. No; I desire it to go to the Committee on Claims, to be there investigated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. MITCHELL, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Mary F. Potts be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Patents, there being no adverse report.

Ordered, That the papers in the case of the heirs of Richard W. Meade be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims, there being no adverse report.

On motion of Mr. BLAIR, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Samuel Noble be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON, it was Ordered, That the papers in connection with the claims of John Fletcher, of Indiana, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the papers in respect to the following claims be taken from the files, and referred to the following committees:

Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of B. Jennings be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion of Mr. HOAR, it was Ordered, That the papers on the files of the Senate relating to the claims of Sarah E. Bowker, Jennette S. Kent, Sarah Ann Waters, and Mary E. Williams be withdrawn and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion of Mr. MORGAN, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the case of the remission of the forfeiture of the British bark Viscount Canning be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Ordered, That the papers in the claim of William C. Dodge be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Patents.

Ordered, That the papers in the claim of the Mobile Dry Dock Company be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Ordered, That the papers in the claim of A. K. Shepard be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask that an order be made that the papers relating to the claims in each of the bills I introduced this morning be taken from the office of the Secretary of the Senate and referred to the appropriate committees to which the bills were referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that certain papers in relation to bills introduced by him be referred to their appropriate committees. If there be no objection that order will be made.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of each report made by the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company from date of first appointment of such directors to the present time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As it is my purpose to submit some remarks to the Senate on the subject of this resolution, I ask that it may for the present lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the resolution will lie on the table, subject to call, and be printed.

S. S. BROWN.

Mr. HALE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Whereas it is alleged that S. S. Brown, a citizen of the State of Maine, has been largely instrumental in procuring the removal of certain postmasters in said State, and the appointment of other persons to serve in their stead; and

Whereas it is further alleged that said Brown has written to parties whose appointment he has procured as aforesaid letters in form and substance like the following, to wit:

WASHINGTON, D. C., ——, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I have secured your appointment as postmaster at your place. Your papers will be sent in a day or two. If you feel like sending a small sum to help defray the expense of attending to our Maine matters you may do so.

My mail comes to the above address.

Respectfully, yours,

S. S. BROWN.

Therefore,

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, directed to furnish to the Senate a list of the post-offices in Maine, and the names of the persons removed and of those appointed postmasters of the same where the said S. S. Brown has favorably recommended the same or indorsed the applications therefor.

GOLD AND SILVER COINAGE.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not incompatible with the public interest, any documents or information received from our consul-general at Paris, or from the special agent sent to the financial centers of Europe, "in respect of the establishment of such an international ratio of gold and silver coinage as would procure free coinage of both metals at the mints of those countries and our own."

A. M. KEILEY.

Mr. VEST submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interest, to transmit to the Senate the correspondence had by the Government of the United States with the Governments of Italy and Austria-Hungary in relation to the appointment by this Government of A. M. Keiley as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, first to the Government of Italy and then to that of Austria-Hungary; and also any other correspondence or information which may be deemed by the President of importance and pertinent to the subject-matter of this resolution.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the consent of the Senate to be relieved from duty on the Committee on Military Affairs. I will state in a moment the reasons for my request.

At the time of the reorganization of committees last spring I was placed on two additional committees, one very important now, the Committee on Indian Affairs, and another, the Committee on Coast Defenses, which I am sure will be quite important. I was left upon the Committee on Military Affairs and the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and was made chairman of the Committee on Nicaraguan Claims. The work is more than one man can do, and for that reason, and that only, having served for nine years upon the Committee on Military Affairs, I ask to be relieved from further service on that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas asks to be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Military Affairs. If there be no objection the request will be granted.

Mr. MAXEY. I also ask that the Chair be authorized to fill the vacancy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that will be considered as agreed to, and the Chair will appoint the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] to fill the vacancy on the Committee on Military Affairs caused by the resignation of the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to do for me what has just been done for the Senator from Texas, to grant my request to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks to be excused from further service upon the Committee on Railroads. If there be no objection that request will be considered as granted.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION REGENTS.

Mr. MORRILL. If there are no further resolutions, I ask for the consideration of the joint resolution I introduced yesterday filling existing vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the joint resolution has gone to the Printer, and has not yet been returned to the custody of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 9, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INVENTORY OF PROPERTY IN POSSESSION OF THE CLERK.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting an inventory of property belonging to the United States in his possession on the 7th of December, 1885; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

EXPENDITURES, ETC., OFFICE CLERK OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report of the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the persons employed under the Clerk, with the payments and issues made in his office from the 30th day of June, 1884, to the 30th day of June, 1885; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on Accounts when appointed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MILLARD, by reason of important business, until next Tuesday.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to Mr. HEPBURN to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving a copy, certificate of discharge from the military service of Charles C. Moore, erroneously filed in the case of Charles A. Moore; no adverse report having been made against said Moore.

APPOINTMENT OF CERTAIN COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the House that it has been usual, or at least it has sometimes heretofore been done, for the purpose of perfecting the organization of the House, to confer on the Chair authority to appoint a Committee on Rules, a Committee on Accounts, and a Committee on Enrolled Bills, to consist of the same number of members provided for in the rules of the preceding Congress. The Chair thinks that this provision is necessary now in order to perfect the organization of the House, and if there be no objection the Chair will exercise the privilege of appointing such committees. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THE RULES.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I offer for reference to the Committee on Rules, when appointed, what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[NOTE.—The amendments proposed are to omit the words in brackets and insert the words printed in italics.]

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives in force at the close of the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress be the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress, with the following amendments, viz:

Amend Rule X as follows:

Also the following joint standing committees, viz:
On the Library, to consist of three members.
On Printing, to consist of three members.
On Enrolled Bills, to consist of seven members.

2. He shall also appoint all select committees which shall be ordered by the House from time to time;

3. The first-named member of each committee shall be the chairman; and in his absence, or being excused by the House, the next-named member, and so on, as often as the case shall happen, unless the committee by a majority of its members elect a chairman;

4. The chairman shall appoint the clerk of his committee, subject to its approval, who shall be paid at the public expense, the House having first provided therefor.

Amend Rule XI as follows, viz:

RULE XI.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF COMMITTEES.

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule, as follows, viz: Subjects relating,

1. to the election of members: to the Committee on Elections.

2. to the revenue and the bonded debt of the United States: to the Committee on Ways and Means;

3. to appropriation of the revenue for the support of the Government, as herein provided: for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses; for sundry civil expenses; for fortifications; for the District of Columbia; and for all deficiencies: to the Committee on Appropriations;

42. On public buildings: to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings;

43. All proposed action touching the rules and joint rules shall be referred to the Committee on Rules;

44. Touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House, the auditing and settling of all accounts which may be charged therein by order of the House: to the Committee on Accounts;

45. The ascertainment of the travel of members of the House shall be made by the Committee on Mileage and reported to the Sergeant-at-Arms;

46. Touching the Library of Congress, statuary, and pictures: to the Joint Committee on the Library;

47. All proposed legislation or orders touching printing shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House;

48. The enrollment of engrossed bills: to the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills;

49. The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, viz: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors; the Committee on Enrolled Bills, enrolled bills; the Committee on Printing, on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or two Houses; and the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

50. No committee shall sit during the sitting of the House without special leave.

Amend clause 3, Rule XXI, as follows:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government. [Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.]

Amend clause 5, Rule XXI, as follows:

5. All bills for improvement of rivers and harbors, [and] for the establishment or change of post-routes, and private bills shall be delivered to the Clerk, as in the case of petitions and memorials, for reference to appropriate committees.

Amend clause 4, Rule XXIII, as follows:

4. In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee shall [thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall] decide, without debate whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; [whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order from the House].

Amend Rule XXIV as follows:

RULE XXIV.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. Each Monday morning during a session of Congress, immediately after the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting has been read and approved, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and [joint resolutions] resolutions for printing and reference without debate, on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred, and on this call only resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees, which resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week thereafter.

2. After the Journal is read and approved each day, the Speaker shall lay before the House, for reference, messages from the President, reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and also such bills, resolutions, and other messages from the Senate as may have been received on the previous day.

[2] 3. On all days other than Monday, as soon as the [Journal is read and approved] business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of, and on all Mondays (except the first and third in each month) after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed [,] [and a copy thereof mailed by the Public Printer to each Member and Delegate]; and the Speaker shall call upon each standing committee in regular order and then upon the select committees; and if the whole of the hour is not consumed by this call, then it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of other business as hereafter provided; but if he shall not complete the call within the hour, he shall resume it in the succeeding morning hour where he left off.

[3] 4. The morning hour for the call of committees shall not be dispensed with except by a vote of two-thirds of those present and voting thereon.

5. After the hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees (or the call completed), the Speaker shall call the committees in regular order for one hour, upon which call each committee, on being named, shall have the right to call up for consideration any bill theretofore reported by it, on either the House or Union Calendar: Provided, That whenever any committee shall have occupied the said hour for one day, it shall not be in order for such committee to designate any other proposition for consideration until all the other committees shall have been called in their turn: Provided further, That when any proposition shall have occupied two hours on this call, it shall then be transferred to the calendar of unfinished business and there taken up in its order.

6. After the hour under the preceding clause shall have been occupied, it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at an adjournment, and at the same time each day thereafter, other than the first and third Mondays, until disposed of; and it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer for the consideration of the House at this time, if I can get the attention of the members, a resolution providing for the adoption of the rules of the last House with certain amendments and modifications which are pointed out in the copy which I hold in my hand. I have taken occasion to have this document printed and it will soon be in the hands of the members for inspection. In order that the Clerk may be able to read this proposition so that members may understand clearly the modifications it proposes in the old rules, I will ask that those portions of the paper which are printed in type similar to the old rules of the House be omitted, and that those portions which are struck through be read with what immediately follows in italics, which is intended to be a substitute for the part stricken out. It is my desire to ask the indulgence of the House to make a brief explanation before this proposition is disposed of, as I believe that some of the general provisions embodied in this proposed code of rules can be explained very briefly and to the satisfaction of all members. I may be permitted to state in this connection that I have given some considerable time during my vacation preparing this revision of our code of rules, and after the resolution has been read I shall ask permission to hold the floor with a view to making an explanation before the vote is taken, whether for reference or otherwise.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether these resolutions are to be read now with a view to their reference, or whether it is understood that any consent is to be given to their immediate consideration?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that any consent is given. The gentleman from Illinois in offering the proposition states that his purpose is to have present consideration. But if a point of order is raised, or a motion is made to refer, as a matter of course that will be disposed of at the proper time.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to reserve all points.

Mr. DUNHAM. Can not a motion be made to refer them now without reading?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has a right to have his proposition read.

Mr. HERBERT. I only desire to reserve all points of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course they are understood as being reserved.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULES OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

[NOTE.—The words in brackets were parts of the Rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress, and the words printed in italics are modifications thereof or new provisions.]

Resolved, That the following be adopted as the Rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress:

RULE I.

DUTIES OF THE SPEAKER.

1. The Speaker shall take the chair on every legislative day precisely at the hour to which the House shall have adjourned at the last sitting, immediately call the members to order, and on the appearance of a quorum, cause the journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting to be read, having previously examined and approved the same.

2. He shall preserve order and decorum, and in case of any disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries, or in the lobby, may cause the same to be cleared.

3. He shall have general control, except as provided by rule or law, of the Hall of the House, and the disposal of the unappropriated rooms in that part of the Capitol assigned to the use of the House until further order.

4. He shall sign all acts, addresses, joint resolutions, writs, warrants, and subpœnas of, or issued by order of, the House, and decide all questions of order, subject to an appeal by any member, on which appeal no member shall speak more than once, unless by permission of the House.

5. He shall rise to put a question, but may state it sitting; and shall put questions in this form, to wit: "As many as are in favor (as the question may be) say Ay;" and after the affirmative voice is expressed, "As many as are opposed say No;" if he doubts, or a division is called for the House shall divide; those in the affirmative of the question shall first rise from their seats, and then those in the negative; if he still doubts, or a count is required by at least one-fifth of a quorum, he shall name one from each side of the question, to tell the members in the affirmative and negative; which being reported, he shall rise and state the decision.

6. He shall not be required to vote in ordinary legislative proceedings, except where his vote would be decisive, or where the House is engaged in voting by ballot; and in all cases of a tie vote the question shall be lost.

7. He shall have the right to name any member to perform the duties of the Chair, but such substitution shall not extend beyond an adjournment: Provided, however, That in case of his illness, he may make such appointment for a period not exceeding ten days, with the approval of the House at the time the same is made; and in his absence and omission to make such appointment, the House shall proceed to elect a Speaker pro tempore, to act during his absence.

RULE II.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

There shall be elected by a viva voce vote at the commencement of each Congress, to continue in office until their successors are chosen and qualified, a Clerk, Sergeant-at-Arms, Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Chaplain, each of whom shall take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and for the true and faithful discharge of the duties of his office, to the best of his knowledge and ability, and to keep the secrets of the House, and each shall appoint all of the employés of his department provided for by law.

RULE III.

DUTIES OF THE CLERK.

1. The Clerk shall, at the commencement of the first session of each Congress, call the members to order, proceed to call the roll of members by States in alphabetical order, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, preserve order and decorum, and decide all questions of order, subject to appeal by any member.

2. He shall make, and cause to be printed and delivered to each member, or mailed to his address, at the commencement of every regular session of Congress, a list of the reports which it is the duty of any officer or Department to make to Congress, referring to the act or resolution and page of the volume of the laws or journal in which it may be contained, and placing under the name of each officer the list of reports required of him to be made; also make a weekly statement of the resolutions and bills upon the Speaker's table, accompanied with a brief reference to the orders and proceedings of the House upon each, and the dates of such orders and proceedings, which statement shall be printed.

3. He shall note all questions of order, with the decisions thereon, the record of which shall be printed as an appendix to the Journal of each session; and complete, as soon after the close of the session as possible, the printing and distribution to Members and Delegates of the Journal of the House, together with an accurate and complete index; retain in the library at his office, for the use of the members and officers of the House, and not to be withdrawn therefrom, two copies of all the books and printed documents deposited there; send, at the end of each session, a printed copy of the Journal thereof to the executive and to each branch of the Legislature of every State and Territory; preserve for and deliver or mail to each Member and Delegate an extra copy, in good binding, of all documents printed by order of either House of the Congress to which he belonged; attest and affix the seal of the House to all writs, warrants, and subpœnas issued by order of the House, certify to the passage of all bills and joint resolutions, make or approve all contracts, bargains, or agreements relative to furnishing any matter or thing, or for the performance of any labor for the House of Representatives, in pursuance of law or order of the House, keep full and accurate accounts of the disbursements out of the contingent fund of the House, keep the stationery accounts of Members and Delegates, and pay them as provided by law.

RULE IV.

DUTIES OF THE SERGEANT-AT-ARMS.

1. It shall be the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to attend the House during its sittings, to maintain order under the direction of the Speaker, and, pending the election of a Speaker or Speaker pro tempore, under the direction of the Clerk; execute the commands of the House, and all processes issued by authority thereof, directed to him by the Speaker; keep the accounts for the pay and mileage of Members and Delegates, and pay them as provided by law.

2. The symbol of his office shall be the mace, which shall be borne by him while enforcing order on the floor.

3. He shall give bond to the United States, with sureties to be approved by the Speaker, in the sum of $50,000, for the faithful disbursement of all moneys intrusted to him by virtue of his office and the proper discharge of the duties thereof, and no member of Congress shall be approved as such surety.

RULE V.

DUTIES OF OTHER OFFICERS.

1. The Doorkeeper shall enforce strictly the rules relating to the privileges of the Hall and be responsible to the House for the official conduct of his employés.

2. At the commencement and close of each session of Congress he shall take an inventory of all the furniture, books, and other public property in the several committee and other rooms under his charge, and report the same to the House, which report shall be referred to the Committee on Accounts to ascertain and determine the amount for which he shall be held liable for missing articles.

3. He shall allow no person to enter the room over the Hall of the House during its sittings; and fifteen minutes before the hour for the meeting of the House each day he shall see that the floor is cleared of all persons, except those privileged to remain.

RULE VI.

The Postmaster shall superintend the post-office kept in the Capitol for the accommodation of Representatives, Delegates, and officers of the House, and be held responsible for the prompt and safe delivery of their mail.

RULE VII.

The Chaplain shall attend at the commencement of each day's sitting of the House and open the same with prayer.

RULE VIII.

OF THE MEMBERS.

1. Every member shall be present within the Hall of the House during its sittings, unless excused or necessarily prevented; and shall vote on each question put, unless, on motion made before division or the commencement of the roll-call, and decided without debate, he shall be excused, or unless he has a direct personal or pecuniary interest in the event of such question.

2. Pairs shall be announced by the Clerk, after the completion of the second roll-call, from a written list furnished him, and signed by the member making the statement to the Clerk, which list shall be published in the RECORD as a part of the proceedings, immediately following the names of those not voting; Provided, Pairs shall be announced but once during the same legislative day.

RULE IX.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

Questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings; second, the rights, reputation, and conduct of members individually in their representative capacity only; and shall have precedence of all other questions, except motions to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, and for a recess.

RULE X.

OF COMMITTEES.

1. Unless otherwise specially ordered by the House, the Speaker shall appoint, at the commencement of each Congress, the following standing committees, namely:

42. On public buildings: to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings;]

43. All proposed action touching the rules and joint rules shall be referred to the Committee on Rules;

44. Touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House, the auditing and settling of all accounts which may be charged therein by order of the House: to the Committee on Accounts; [45.] the ascertainment of the travel of members of the House shall be made by the Committee on [Mileage] Accounts and reported to the Sergeant-at-Arms.

46. Touching the Library of Congress, statuary, and pictures: to the Joint Committee on the Library;

47. All proposed legislation or orders touching printing shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House;

48. The enrollment of engrossed bills: to the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills;

49. The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, viz: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the [Committee on] committees having authority to report appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Enrolled Bills, enrolled bills; the Committee on Printing, on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or two Houses; [and] the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House; and the Committee on Public Lands, on bills forfeiting unearned land grants. The committees having authority to report appropriations, and other committees having jurisdiction of the subject-matter thereof, may at any time after the morning hour report bills, involving but not making appropriations, the provisions of which shall retrench expenditures.

50. No committee shall sit during the sitting of the House without special leave.

RULE XII.

DELEGATES.

The Speaker shall appoint from among the Delegates one additional member on each of the following committees, viz: Coinage, Weights, and Measures; Agriculture; Military Affairs; Post-Office and Post-Roads; Public Lands; Indian Affairs; Territories; and Mines and Mining; and they shall possess in their respective committees the same powers and privileges as in the House, and may make any motion except to reconsider.

RULE XIII.

CALENDARS.

1. There shall be three calendars of business reported from committees, viz:

First. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, to which shall be referred bills raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills of a public character, directly or indirectly appropriating money or property.

Second. A House calendar, to which [shall] may, unless otherwise disposed of, be referred all bills of a public character not raising revenue nor directly or indirectly appropriating money or property; and Third. A calendar of the Committee of the Whole House, to which shall be referred all bills of a private character directly or indirectly appropriating money or property. Other bills of a private character may be referred to this committee, or otherwise disposed of by the House.

2. The question of reference of any proposition, other than that reported from a committee, shall be decided without debate, in the following order, viz: a standing committee, a select committee; but the reference of a proposition reported by a committee, when demanded, shall be decided according to its character, without debate, in the following order, viz: House Calendar, Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Committee of the Whole House, a standing committee, a select committee.

RULE XIV.

OF DECORUM AND DEBATE.

1. When any member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House, he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

2. When two or more members rise at once, the Speaker shall name the member who is first to speak; and no member shall occupy more than one hour in debate on any question in the House or in committee, except as further provided in this rule.

3. The member reporting the measure under consideration from a committee may open and close, where general debate has been had thereon; and if it shall extend beyond one day, he shall be entitled to one hour to close, notwithstanding he may have used an hour in opening.

4. If any member, in speaking or otherwise, transgress the rules of the House, the Speaker shall, or any member may, call him to order; in which case he shall immediately sit down, unless permitted, on motion of another member, to explain, and the House shall, if appealed to, decide on the case, without debate; if the decision is in favor of the member called to order, he shall be at liberty to proceed, but not otherwise; and, if the case require it, he shall be liable to censure or such punishment as the House may deem proper.

5. If a member is called to order for words spoken in debate, the member calling him to order shall indicate the words excepted to, and they shall be taken down in writing at the Clerk's desk and read aloud to the House; but he shall not be held to answer, nor be subject to the censure of the House therefor, if further debate or other business has intervened.

6. No member shall speak more than once to the same question without leave of the House, unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending, in which case he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken.

7. Debate on points of order shall be limited to five minutes by the member making the point, and to five minutes by a member opposing it; and thereafter the debate shall be confined to such members as the presiding officer may recognize, and limited to such time as he may indicate, not exceeding five minutes to each person so recognized. On appeals from the decision of the Chair, five minutes shall be allowed to the member taking the appeal, and five minutes to a member sustaining the decision, after which the vote shall be taken thereon.

8. While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause.

RULE XV.

ON CALLS OF THE ROLL AND HOUSE.

1. Upon every roll-call, the names of the members shall be called alphabetically by surname, except when two or more have the same surname, then the whole name shall be called; and after the roll has been once called, the Clerk shall call in their alphabetical order the names of those not voting; and thereafter the Speaker shall not entertain a request to record a vote or announce a pair.

2. In the absence of a quorum, fifteen members, including the Speaker, if there is one, shall be authorized to compel the attendance of absent members, and in all calls of the House the names of the members shall be called by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; the doors shall then be closed, and those for whom no sufficient excuse is made may, by order of a majority of those present, be sent for and arrested, wherever they may be found, by officers to be appointed by the Sergeant-at-Arms for that purpose, and their attendance secured; and the House shall determine upon what condition they shall be discharged.

RULE XVI.

ON MOTIONS, THEIR PRECEDENCE, ETC.

1. Every motion made to the House and entertained by the Speaker shall be reduced to writing on the demand of any member, and shall be entered on the Journal with the name of the member making it, unless it is withdrawn the same day.

2. When a motion has been made, the Speaker shall state it, or (if it be in writing) cause it to be read aloud by the Clerk before being debated, and it shall then be in possession of the House, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment.

3. When any motion or proposition is made, the question, Will the House now consider it? shall not be put unless demanded by a member.

4. When a question is under debate no motion shall be received but to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, to take a recess, to lay on the table, for the previous question (which motion shall be decided without debate), to postpone to a day certain, to refer or amend, or to postpone indefinitely, which several motions shall have precedence in the foregoing order; and no motion to postpone to a day certain, to refer, or to postpone indefinitely, being decided, shall be again allowed on the same day at the same stage of the question.

5. A motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, a motion to adjourn, and to take a recess shall always be in order, and the hour at which the House adjourns shall be entered on the Journal.

6. On the demand of any member, before the question is put, a question shall be divided if it include propositions so distinct in substance that one being taken away a substantive proposition shall remain.

7. A motion to strike out and insert is indivisible, but a motion to strike out being lost shall neither preclude amendment nor motion to strike out and insert; and no motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

8. Pending a motion to suspend the rules, the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn, or one motion to take a recess: but after the result thereon is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion till the vote is taken on suspension.

9. At any time after the expiration of the morning hour it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue, retrenchment bills, or general appropriation bills.

RULE XVII.

PREVIOUS QUESTION.

1. There shall be a motion for the previous question, which, being ordered by a majority of members present, if a quorum, shall have the effect to cut off all debate and bring the House to a direct vote upon the immediate question or questions on which it has been asked and ordered. The previous question may be asked and ordered upon a single motion, a series of motions allowable under the rules, or an amendment or amendments, or may be made to embrace all authorized motions or amendments and include the bill to its engrossment and third reading, and then, on renewal and second of said motion, to its passage or rejection. It shall be in order, pending the motion for or after the previous question shall have been ordered on its passage, for the Speaker to entertain and submit a motion to commit, with or without instructions, to a standing or select committee; and a motion to lay upon the table shall be in order on the second and third reading of a bill.

2. A call of the House shall not be in order after the previous question is ordered, unless it shall appear upon an actual count by the Speaker that a quorum is not present.

3. All incidental questions of order arising after a motion is made for the previous question, and pending such motion, shall be decided, whether on appeal or otherwise, without debate.

RULE XVIII.

RECONSIDERATION.

When a motion has been made and carried or lost, it shall be in order for any member of the majority, on the same or succeeding day, to move for the reconsideration thereof, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions except the consideration of a conference report, a motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn, to adjourn, or to take a recess, and shall not be withdrawn after the said succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any member may call it up for consideration: Provided, That such motion, if made during the last six days of a session, shall be disposed of when made.

2. No bill, petition, memorial, or resolution referred to a committee, or reported therefrom for printing and recommitment, shall be brought back into the House on a motion to reconsider; and all bills, petitions, memorials, or resolutions reported from a committee shall be accompanied by reports in writing, which shall be printed.

RULE XIX.

OF AMENDMENTS.

When a motion or proposition is under consideration, a motion to amend and a motion to amend that amendment shall be in order, and it shall also be in order to offer a further amendment by way of substitute, to which one amendment may be offered, but which shall not be voted on until the original matter is perfected, but either may be withdrawn before amendment or decision is had thereon.

RULE XX.

OF AMENDMENTS OF THE SENATE.

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

RULE XXI.

ON BILLS.

1. Every bill and joint resolution shall receive three readings before its passage, which shall be as follows: The first and second readings by title on introduction for reference, or, being original bills, on report from committees for commitment, except when the second reading in full shall be demanded by a member: Provided, That original bills on being reported by unanimous consent for present consideration, shall be read the first time in full; the second and third time by title, unless the third reading in full shall be demanded by a member.

2. Bills and joint resolutions on their passage shall be read the first time by title and the second time in full, when, if the previous question is ordered, the Speaker shall state the question to be: Shall the bill be engrossed and read a third time? and if decided in the affirmative, it shall be read the third time by title, unless the reading in full is demanded by a member, and the question shall then be put upon its passage.

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. [Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.] Nor shall any provision which changes existing law or embodies general legislation of any kind be in order in any general appropriation bill, or as an amendment thereto.

4. No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House.

5. All bills for improvement of rivers and harbors and for the establishment or change of post-routes, and all bills of a private character, shall be delivered to the Clerk, as in the case of petitions and memorials, for reference to appropriate committees.

[6. Upon all general appropriation and revenue bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, the yeas and nays shall be taken on the passage of such bills in the House and entered upon the Journal.]

RULE XXII.

OF PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

1. Members having petitions or memorials to present may deliver them to the Clerk, indorsing their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and said petitions and memorials, except such as, in the judgment of the Speaker, are of an obscene or insulting character, shall be entered on the Journal together with the names of the members presenting them, and the Clerk shall furnish a transcript thereof to the Official Reporters of Debates for publication in the RECORD.

2. Any petition or memorial excluded under this rule shall be returned to the member from whom it was received; and petitions which have been inappropriately referred may, by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented.

RULE XXIII.

OF COMMITTEES OF THE WHOLE HOUSE.

1. In all cases, in forming a Committee of the Whole House, the Speaker shall leave his chair after appointing a chairman to preside, who shall, in case of disturbance or disorderly conduct in the galleries or lobby, have power to cause the same to be cleared.

2. Whenever a Committee of the Whole House finds itself without a quorum, the chairman shall cause the roll to be called, and thereupon the committee shall rise, and the chairman shall report the names of the absentees to the House, which shall be entered on the Journal; but if on such call a quorum shall appear, the committee shall thereupon resume its sitting without further order of the House.

3. All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriation to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

4. In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, retrenchment bills, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence in the order named, and when objection is made to the consideration of any bill or proposition, the committee shall [thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall] decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present [; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House].

5. When general debate is closed by order of the House, any member shall be allowed five minutes to explain any amendment he may offer, after which the member who shall first obtain the floor shall be allowed to speak five minutes in opposition to it, and there shall be no further debate thereon; but the same privilege of debate shall be allowed in favor of and against any amendment that may be offered to an amendment; and neither an amendment nor an amendment to an amendment shall be withdrawn by the mover thereof unless by the unanimous consent of the committee.

6. The [House] Committees of the Whole House may, by the vote of a majority of the members present, at any time after the five minutes' debate has begun upon proposed amendments to any section or paragraph to a bill, close all debate upon such section or paragraph, or, at its election, upon the pending amendments only; but this shall not preclude further amendment, to be decided without debate.

7. A motion to strike out the enacting words of a bill shall have precedence of a motion to amend; and, if carried, shall be considered equivalent to its rejection. Whenever a bill is reported from a Committee of the Whole with an adverse recommendation, and such recommendation is disagreed to by the House, the bill shall stand recommitted to the said committee without further action by the House. But before the question of concurrence is submitted, it is in order to entertain a motion to refer the bill to any committee, with or without instructions, and when the same is again reported to the House it shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole without debate.

8. The rules of proceeding in the House shall be observed in Committees of the Whole House so far as they may be applicable.

RULE XXIV.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. Each Monday morning during a session of Congress, immediately after the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting has been read and approved, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and [joint] resolutions for printing and reference without debate, on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred, and on this call only, resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees, which resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week thereafter.

2. On all days other than Monday as soon as the Journal is read and approved, and on all Mondays (except the first and third in each month) after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, [which shall be appropriately referred and printed, and a copy thereof mailed by the Public Printer to each Member and Delegate; and the Speaker shall call upon each standing committee in regular order and then upon the select committees; and if the whole of the hour is not consumed by this call, then it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of other business; but if he shall not complete the call within the hour, he shall resume it in the succeeding morning hour where he left off] during which reports from committees shall be called for and disposed of; in doing which the Speaker shall call upon each standing committee in regular order, and then upon select committees; and if the Speaker shall not get through the call upon the committees before the House passes to other business, he shall resume the next call where he left off, giving preference to the report last under consideration. Whenever any committee shall have occupied the morning hour on two days, it shall not be in order for such committee to report further until the other committees shall have been called in their turn; but any bill or resolution which may then be pending and undisposed of shall be placed in the order of unfinished business.

Any committee when called during this hour may, in lieu of reporting, call up from the House Calendar bills or resolutions theretofore reported by that committee, to be disposed of in the same manner as if reported at the time.

3. The morning hour for the call of committees shall not be dispensed with except by a vote of two-thirds of those present and voting thereon.

4. After the hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees, it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at an adjournment, and at the same time each day thereafter, other than the first and third Mondays, until disposed of; and it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

5. Unfinished business having been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, which, the motion prevailing, the Speaker shall dispose of in the following order:

First. Messages from the President and other executive communications.

Second. Messages from the Senate and amendments proposed by the Senate to bills of the House.

Third. Bills and resolutions from the Senate on their first and second reading, that they be referred to committees or put on their passage; and the motions so to refer shall have precedence of all other motions touching their disposition.

Fourth. Engrossed bills and bills from the Senate on their third reading.

6. Business on the Speaker's table having been disposed of, it shall then be in order to entertain motions in the following order, namely:

First. That the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider, first, bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other business on its Calendar.

Second. To proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar.

Third. On Friday of each week, after the morning hour, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and, if this motion fail, then public business shall be in order as on other days.

7. Messages from the President, communications from heads of Departments, and Senate bills and resolutions on the Speaker's table may be laid before the House at any time after the approval of the Journal, for printing and reference only.

MISCELLANEOUS RULES.

RULE XXV.

PRIORITY OF BUSINESS.

All questions relating to the priority of business shall be decided by a majority without debate.

RULE XXVI.

PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined [by a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting] by the House.

RULE XXVII.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

After six days from the commencement of a second or subsequent session of any Congress, all bills, resolutions, and reports which originated in the House, and remained undetermined at the close of the last preceding session, shall be in order for action, and all business before committees of the House at the end of one session shall be resumed at the commencement of the next session of the same Congress in the same manner as if no adjournment had taken place.

RULE XXVIII.

CHANGE OR SUSPENSION OF RULES.

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month after the call of States and Territories shall have been completed [preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees], and during the last six days of a session.

2. All motions to suspend the rules shall, before being submitted to the House, be seconded by a majority by tellers, if demanded.

3. When a motion to suspend the rules has been seconded, it shall be in order, before the final vote is taken thereon, to debate the proposition to be voted upon for thirty minutes, one-half of such time to be given to debate in favor of, and one-half to debate in opposition to, such proposition, and the same right of debate shall be allowed whenever the previous question has been ordered on any proposition on which there has been no debate.

RULE XXIX.

CONFERENCE REPORTS.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition. And there shall accompany every such report a detailed statement sufficiently explicit to inform the House what effect such amendments or propositions will have upon the measures to which they relate.

RULE XXX.

SECRET SESSION.

Whenever confidential communications are received from the President of the United States, or whenever the Speaker or any member shall inform the House that he has communications which he believes ought to be kept secret for the present, the House shall be cleared of all persons except the members and officers thereof, and so continue during the reading of such communications, the debates and proceedings thereon, unless otherwise ordered by the House.

RULE XXXI.

READING OF PAPERS.

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

RULE XXXII.

DRAWING OF SEATS.

At the commencement of each Congress, immediately after the Members and Delegates are sworn in, the Clerk shall place in a box, prepared for that purpose, a number of small balls, of marble or other material, equal to the number of Members and Delegates, which balls shall be consecutively numbered and thoroughly intermingled, and at such hour as shall be fixed by the House for that purpose, by the hands of a page, draw said balls one by one from the box and announce the number as it is drawn, upon which announcement the Member or Delegate whose name on a numbered alphabetical list shall correspond with the number on the ball shall advance and choose his seat for the term for which he is elected.

2. Before said drawing shall commence each seat shall be vacated and so remain until selected under this rule, and any seat having been selected shall be deemed forfeited if left unoccupied before the call of the roll is finished, and whenever the seats of Members and Delegates shall have been drawn no proposition for a second drawing shall be in order during that Congress.

RULE XXXIII.

HALL OF THE HOUSE.

The Hall of the House shall be used only for the legislative business of the House, and for the caucus meetings of its members, except upon occasions where the House, by resolution, agree to take part in any ceremonies to be observed therein; and the Speaker shall not entertain a motion for the suspension of this rule.

RULE XXXIV.

OF ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The persons hereinafter named, and none other, shall be admitted to the Hall of the House or rooms leading thereto, namely: The President and Vice-President of the United States and their private secretaries, judges of the Supreme Court, members of Congress and members-elect, contestants in election cases during the pendency of their cases in the House, the Secretary and Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, heads of Departments, foreign ministers, governors of States, the Architect of the Capitol, the Librarian of Congress and his assistant in charge of the law library, such persons as have, by name, received the thanks of Congress, ex-members of Congress who are not interested in any claim or directly in any bill pending before Congress, and clerks of committees, when business from their committee is under consideration; and it shall not be in order for the Speaker to entertain a request for the suspension of this rule or to present from the chair the request of any member for unanimous consent.

RULE XXXV.

OF ADMISSION TO THE GALLERIES.

The Speaker shall set aside a portion of the west gallery for the use of the President of the United States, the members of his Cabinet, Justices of the Supreme Court, foreign ministers and suites, and the members of their respective families, and shall also set aside another portion of the same gallery for the accommodation of persons to be admitted on the card of members. The southerly half of the east gallery shall be assigned exclusively for the use of the families of members of Congress, in which the Speaker shall control one bench, and on request of a member the Speaker shall issue a card of admission to his family, which shall include their visitors, and no other person shall be admitted to this section.

RULE XXXVI.

OFFICIAL AND OTHER REPORTERS.

1. The appointment and removal, for cause, of the Official Reporters of the House, including stenographers of committees, and the manner of the execution of their duties, shall be vested in the Speaker.

2. Stenographers and reporters, other than the Official Reporters of the House, wishing to take down the debates and proceedings, may be admitted by the Speaker to the reporters' gallery over the Speaker's chair, under such regulations as he may, from time to time, prescribe; and he may assign two seats on the floor to Associated Press reporters, and regulate the occupation of the same.

3. Representatives of daily newspapers residing at the capital may be admitted by the Speaker, upon the request of any Member or Delegate for such admission, to the members' corridor and rooms in the rear of the Speaker's chair, under such regulations as he may, from time to time, prescribe.

RULE XXXVII.

PAY OF WITNESSES.

The rule for paying witnesses subpœnaed to appear before the House, or either of its committees, shall be as follows: For each day a witness shall attend, the sum of $2; for each mile he shall travel in coming to or going from the place of examination, the sum of 5 cents each way; but nothing shall be paid for traveling when the witness has been summoned at the place of trial.

RULE XXXVIII.

PAPERS.

1. The clerks of the several committees of the House shall, within three days after the final adjournment of a Congress, deliver to the Clerk of the House all bills, joint resolutions, petitions, and other papers referred to the committee, together with all evidence taken by such committee under the order of the House during the said Congress, and not reported to the House; and in the event of the failure or neglect of any clerk of a committee to comply with this rule the Clerk of the House shall, within three days thereafter, take into his keeping all such papers and testimony.

RULE XXXIX.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

No memorial or other paper presented to the House shall be withdrawn from its files without its leave, and if withdrawn therefrom, certified copies thereof shall be left in the office of the Clerk; but when an act may pass for the settlement of a claim, the Clerk is authorized to transmit to the officer charged with the settlement thereof the papers on file in his office relating to such claim, or may loan temporarily to any officer or bureau of the Executive Departments any papers on file in his office relating to any matter pending before such officer or bureau, taking proper receipt therefor.

RULE XL.

BALLOT.

In all other cases of ballot than for committees, a majority of the votes given shall be necessary to an election, and where there shall not be such a majority on the first ballot, the ballots shall be repeated until a majority be obtained; and in all ballotings blanks shall be rejected and not taken into the count in enumeration of votes or reported by the tellers.

RULE XLI.

MESSAGES.

Messages received from the Senate and the President of the United States, giving notice of bills passed or approved, shall be entered in the Journal and published in the RECORD of that day's proceedings.

RULE XLII.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Estimates of appropriations, and all other communications from the Executive Departments, intended for the consideration of any committees of the House, shall be addressed to the Speaker and by him submitted to the House for reference.

RULE XLIII.

QUALIFICATION OF OFFICERS AND EMPLOYÉS.

No person shall be an officer of the House, or continue in its employment, who shall be an agent for the prosecution of any claim against the Government, or be interested in such claim otherwise than as an original claimant; and it shall be the duty of the Committee on Accounts to inquire into and report to the House any violation of this rule.

RULE XLIV.

Motions to print additional numbers of any bill, report, resolution, or other public document shall be referred to the Committee on Printing; and the report of the committee thereon shall be accompanied by an estimate of the probable cost thereof.

Bills of a private character heretofore printed by order of either House shall not be again printed, unless it appears that all printed copies have been exhausted.

RULE XLV.

JEFFERSON'S MANUAL.

The rules of parliamentary practice comprised in Jefferson's Manual shall govern the House in all cases to which they are applicable, and in which they are not inconsistent with the standing rules and orders of the House and joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives.

RULE XLVI.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

These rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. It is understood that the point of order reserved by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] is still pending.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman from Illinois, before he makes his argument, allow me to present a resolution to the House?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have no objection if it does not take me off the floor.

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not desire to do that, but now merely ask the Clerk to read a resolution which I believe will commend itself to the approval of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That pending the consideration of the proposed rules, and until the rules of the House shall be adopted, this House be governed by the rules of procedure of the last House of Representatives, so far as applicable, and by Jefferson's Manual.

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not desire to take up more of the time of the gentleman from Illinois further than to call attention to the fact we are now proceeding without any rules at all, and therefore it would be well to have that understood.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection in the world, so far as that point is involved, of agreeing to the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia at once; but I ask whether the point of order the gentleman from Alabama has made on the subject of consideration does not apply as well to it as to the possession of the floor by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HAMMOND. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. But I make no such point as against any debate which the gentleman from Illinois may wish to indulge in; but in order not to give it a status before the House I shall insist on the point of order of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HAMMOND. By permission of the gentleman from Illinois I hope the Chair will be allowed without debate to put the question on the adoption of my resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not understand this resolution in any way interferes with the right of the House to adopt rules for its government.

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. Or to require the reference of any particular proposition on that subject; but as simply requiring the rules of procedure ordinarily governing parliamentary bodies should be enforced until we shall agree to some system of rules for the government of this body.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is not the province of the Chair to decide upon what construction shall be put on the resolution. It will have to be voted upon according to the construction put upon it by members themselves.

Mr. HAMMOND. I simply desire there shall be some rule of procedure adopted at this time. We are now in a contest whether the gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor or not. We have no rule about anything, and my object is we shall adopt some rule applicable to the present situation; that is, some rule of procedure during the time we are trying to arrange a code of rules for our future action.

Mr. BEACH. Permit me to ask a question. I find in the rules of the last House Rule XLV provides "these rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses unless otherwise ordered."

Mr. HAMMOND. It is plain no previous Congress can make rules for this House of Representatives.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And of course that is a nullity.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman from Georgia permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAMMOND. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. In the event your resolution is adopted would it require a two-thirds vote to make any change in the present rules?

Mr. HAMMOND. I think not. My resolution does not mean any such thing, and in my judgment it would not be susceptible of any such construction.

Mr. RANDALL. It provides simply our procedure at present shall be in compliance with good order and proper decorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. If the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia is adopted will it require that all propositions to amend the rules shall be referred to the Committee on Rules without debate?

Mr. PETERS. Certainly.

Mr. SPRINGER. If that be so I object, for it would then take me off the floor.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman is not in condition to object, as he is on the floor at the present time only by the courtesy of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I yielded to the gentleman from Georgia for the purpose of having his resolution read; but I certainly did not propose to yield to any proposition which would have the result of taking me off the floor.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman had his amendments read subject to the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thought the point of order was to be reserved and that the resolution was to be acted on.

The SPEAKER. When a point of order is made against a proposition it must be decided, except by common consent of the House it is reserved. The Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois was proceeding by consent to state his views on his proposed rules, but if the point of order be insisted upon, it must first be decided. Is it insisted upon?

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest to the gentleman he let the vote be taken without debate on the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia, and then the House will permit him to go on with his statement. It seems to me the House should fix upon some rule of procedure during the time we are engaged in acting on the rules for the future guidance of the House.

Mr. HAMMOND. I may remark further that I am satisfied this House will adopt no rules to-day, nor will they act upon any rules to-day until they have been referred to the Committee on Rules. We will not certainly take any so speedy action as that; and this merely gives some form of control by the Chair while we are considering what permanent rules we shall have.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand that now, inasmuch as we have adopted no rules as yet, we are acting under general parliamentary law, which is embodied in Jefferson's Manual and in other works upon the subject. It seems to me this general parliamentary law is sufficient to enable us to adopt rules, and that we ought not to embarrass ourselves by adopting the rules of the last House or of any preceding House until we have first decided what shall be the permanent rules of this House. I therefore see no necessity whatever for adopting the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]. The general parliamentary law is entirely sufficient; and we should embarrass ourselves with nothing else until we decide what are to be the rules of this Congress. And it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, it would be wise to adopt a resolution, inasmuch as we have provided for the appointment of a Committee on Rules, that all propositions touching the rules shall be as soon as introduced referred to that committee. I shall therefore offer the resolution which I hold in my hand as soon as I can get the floor for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not quite certain whether the resolution proposed by the gentleman from Georgia is pending or not. There seems to be some question on the part of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] as to whether it was allowed to come in.

Mr. HAMMOND. The real position of the matter is that the gentleman from Illinois yielded me the floor and consented the House should adopt without debate the resolution I offered.

Mr. HERBERT. I am simply giving notice that if the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia be voted down I shall offer a resolution that all propositions to establish or amend the rules shall immediately upon being offered be referred without debate to the Committee on Rules to be appointed by the Speaker under the resolution heretofore adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield to the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia, with a distinct understanding that it does not adopt that rule which relates to the adoption of rules.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But it does.

Mr. SPRINGER. If it does, I object to it.

Mr. HERBERT. I would suggest that if the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia be adopted we would never be able to adopt any change or amendment of the rules if a hostile minority sought to prevent it. You tie your hands by adopting the rules of the last House.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. HISCOCK. Has it not been the law of all previous Houses of Representatives, and so ruled by the Chair, that a new House should have the code of rules of the last House to govern it until otherwise ordered? The Speaker, I believe, has uniformly ruled that the rules of the last House, until new rules were adopted, were the rules that governed the new House. I am sure the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] so ruled while occupying the chair, and I think the present occupant of the chair has made the same ruling.

Mr. SPRINGER. I claim the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point which I have suggested as a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] makes the point of order that the House, until it otherwise orders, is governed by the rules of the last Congress, and that therefore the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois must go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. I should like to be heard upon that.

The SPEAKER. Upon that question the Chair would like to hear briefly the views of gentlemen, because there is some difficulty about it. It has been decided, according to the present recollection of the Chair, both ways. The present occupant of the chair is not aware that he has made any decision upon that question.

Mr. HISCOCK. The present occupant of the chair may not perhaps have made a decision; but I certainly did hear him express his opinion to that effect in the last Congress, and it was certainly so ruled by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. That was in the Forty-sixth Congress; and the Chair is under the impression it was also so ruled in the Forty-fourth Congress by Speaker Kerr.

Mr. SPRINGER. As this point of order has been made by the gentleman from New York, I ask the indulgence of the Chair and of the House to speak to that point for a moment. It was decided by Speaker Kerr in the Forty-fourth Congress, when a similar question was raised, that under the Constitution of the United States each House was empowered to make rules for its own government. This constitutional prerogative can not be surrendered by this House, nor can it be usurped by a previous House. When the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress on the 4th of March last ceased to exist that body passed out of existence forever, and it had no more power to make rules for the government of this House than it had to make rules for the government of the Parliament of England.

Under the Constitution of the United States each House is to judge for itself upon this subject, and the mere fact that in the rules of the last House of Representatives there is a provision that those rules shall continue in force until otherwise ordered by the succeeding House does not carry those rules over to this body or impose any obligation upon us whatever. If it did it would be in the power of a House of Representatives having a majority of one political complexion, and knowing that the succeeding House would have a majority of another political complexion, to impose its own rules upon that succeeding House, so that they could not be changed except by a two-thirds vote. In that way the majority in one House, which would be the minority in the succeeding House, might effectually tie up the hands of the majority of that House so that they would be unable to act freely for themselves or their constituents. Sir, this point of order, if sustained, would virtually deprive this House of the right to make its own rules. In the rules of the last House is a requirement that all propositions of this character shall be referred to a committee without debate; in the mean time we shall have not only that rule, but all the rules of the last House, thrust upon us; and if the committee which is to consider these propositions does not choose to report, the House goes on under the old rules and we are unable to get rid of them. Therefore, I hope that all gentlemen who desire a modification of the rules of the last Congress, and who believe that this House is given by the Constitution the right to make its own rules, will insist that this point of order is not well taken, and I trust the Chair also will so rule.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I beg to call the attention of the House to the last clause of section 5, Article I of the Constitution of the United States. This question has been up before, and I have several times had occasion to make the point which I am about to make now. That clause of the Constitution reads:

> Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings, punish its members for disorderly behavior, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member.

The jurisdiction of the last House of Representatives was exhausted when that House ceased to exist. The rules which it had made for its government are not the rules of this House. If they were, no motion would be necessary to make them the rules of this House. We propose to adopt our own rules, because the Constitution provides that each House shall adopt rules for its own government. I am aware, sir, that in some points of view it has been heretofore held that some rules came over from a previous Congress. The logic or the lawfulness of that ruling I never could comprehend. If that were true as to any rule it would be true as to all the rules, and if it is true as to any, then we have all the rules of the last Congress operating upon us now without further action on our part; but I take it for granted that we will obey the Constitution and assert the right of this House to adopt its own rules for its own guidance and government.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, the statement which was made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that it has been repeatedly ruled by Speakers of former Houses of Representatives that the rules of one House were carried over into the succeeding House is, according to my recollection, strictly correct; but, for my part, I never believed that that series of rulings was correct; I never believed that any House of Representatives had the right to bind its successors. I believe that each House has got to establish rules for itself, and that no dead hand can be laid upon us. But I do not think that that conclusion remits us to chaos. I believe that in this country an assembly like this, coming together without special rules, would necessarily be remitted to the common parliamentary law, or what I should perhaps more properly call the common legislative law, of the country, the foundation of which is to be found in Jefferson's Manual and which has been modified by the general action of American legislative assemblies, especially by the action of this legislative assembly; and it is very possible that the rulings which have been made upon this subject by previous Speakers were, after all, intended only to cover that. If I apprehend correctly the proposal of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], it is substantially to have this House governed by the general parliamentary law of the country until it shall have adopted rules for itself. I understand that he proposes to adopt the rules of the last House only so far as methods of procedure are concerned.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] understands the gentleman from Georgia correctly.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then, Mr. Speaker, with that understanding, I, for my part, should have no objection to the passage of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia; nor, on the other hand, should I consider it needful that we should pass it. I must confess that I hardly know what would be regarded as the legislative parliamentary law of this country. I suppose that the Speaker will have to evolve it out of his own knowledge of the subject, with such aid as we can give him by discussion on the floor; but I hope that this interregnum will last only a very short time, and that these proposed rules may go to a committee where they may be properly digested and reported for the consideration of the House at the earliest moment possible.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] to state that he understands the meaning of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] to be that the rules of the last House shall be adopted only in so far as methods of procedure are concerned. He will permit me to say——

Mr. HAMMOND [interposing]. It says, "procedure."

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] will probably consent to amend his resolution so as to remove all such objections.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have no objection to any amendment, but I have used the word "procedure."

Mr. HERBERT. Permit me to say that even then the effect of the proposition would be doubtful; and I see no reason in the world why we should adopt the rules of the last House in part, unless we go to the extent of specifying particularly, so that there can be no doubt about it, what portion of those rules we do adopt. If the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] be correct in the general proposition he has submitted, and which I understand to be a reaffirmation of the position I took, that the general or, as he calls it, the common parliamentary law of this country is now prevailing over the deliberations of this body, why complicate the question by the addition of the words "and the rules of procedure of the last House?" What are those rules of procedure? Do they cover the question as to whether a majority or two-thirds are sufficient to adopt a particular proposition? How far does that word "procedure" extend? How many and which of the rules of the last House does it embrace? The language is altogether too indefinite. It is liable to lead to misunderstanding and perpetual confusion. It seems to me there is no necessity whatever for the adoption of any such resolution; and if it be now in order, I move to lay it on the table.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I take it no gentleman will deny that under the Constitution it is the prerogative of this House to determine its own rules of procedure; and, therefore, technically, neither the general parliamentary law nor the rules of any prior House are to govern us. I do not see upon what principle, except that of usage, gentlemen can claim that the general parliamentary law should govern the proceedings of this House prior to the adoption of specific rules. I think, sir, the practice of this House (which is the only foundation of the principle) has been that the rules of the preceding House govern; and hence we find in the rules heretofore adopted by this House this language:

> These rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses, unless otherwise ordered.

I submit that this provision has no force other than that of usage; and upon this ground the Speakers in prior Congresses have, according to my recollection, uniformly held that the rules of the preceding House did obtain.

Now, what is the trouble in this case? What difference does it make whether our proceedings are governed by the general parliamentary law or by the rules of the last House? I presume we shall have a Committee on Rules, to which we shall refer everything on this subject that we wish to have considered; that the committee will make their report to this House; and when they shall have done so, the House will accept their conclusions or modify them to suit its own views. Therefore it seems to me this is a very simple question, in regard to which no difficulty need arise. The House will eventually have its own way, no matter whether we proceed under the general principles of parliamentary law or in accordance with the rules of the last House.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, in part I must dissent from the suggestion of my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. Mr. Cushing and other general writers on parliamentary law lay down the doctrine that bodies like this, before organization, are to be governed by the common parliamentary law without reference to any particular rules; and that common parliamentary law, which is the general usage of legislative bodies in this country, is, it seems to me, sufficient to guide the action of the Speaker in regulating the proceedings of this House until specific rules are adopted by the action of the House.

The clause which was read by my friend from Georgia from the rules of the last House, if it has any effect at all, would perpetuate the rules of the last House. The language is:

These rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses unless otherwise ordered.

At the time that rule was adopted I objected to its adoption, because no House of Representatives has power under the Constitution to adopt rules for the government of the House in any future Congress. The adoption of any such rule as I have just read is the assumption of an unwarranted authority. We are, it seems to me, relieved of all difficulty if we rest upon the doctrine that the common parliamentary law will govern this body until we have by express action adopted rules of proceeding. No one will doubt that the Speaker is sufficiently familiar with the general doctrines of parliamentary law to be able to dispose of any questions of order or procedure that may arise before we have adopted specific rules.

If the suggestion of my friend from Georgia be correct, then the rules of the last House are in full force; and I venture the statement that if those rules be once conceded as fully operative in this body without any action on our part, we shall never succeed in obtaining such a revision as will permit that sort of legislation which should be adopted by the representatives of the people, and that freedom of action which ought to exist here. I trust, therefore, that we shall not by a strained construction of the Constitution, and by an unwarrantable assumption that the rules of a past House are still in force, or by any preliminary resolution which we may now adopt, bind the action of this House. I am one of those who believe that the rules ought to be revised; that the public service will be benefited and the fairness and justice of proceeding in this House promoted by a proper revision of the rules.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to lay on the table the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia.

The SPEAKER. There is a point of order now pending before the House; and the question is on that point of order.

Mr. HERBERT. What point of order is now pending?

The SPEAKER. The point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HERBERT. I give notice then that I will make that motion as soon as it may be in order.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, this is a legislative body, fully organized with a presiding officer. No one will deny that we should be governed by some parliamentary law; and whether we adopt or do not adopt a resolution in relation to the rules, the Speaker must be governed by the general parliamentary law. Such has been the practice, so far as I know, for many years. And if the Speaker is to be governed by the general parliamentary practice prevailing in the United States, what better authority can he have in guiding the proceedings of this House than the rules of the last House of Representatives? Therefore I agree with those gentlemen who have said it is not altogether necessary that we should adopt any resolution in relation to the rules. We naturally fall under the guidance of the past rules of the House so far as they are applicable, as stated in the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say one further word on this question. I am not aware any Speaker has gone to the extent of holding the rules of the last or preceding House should be enforced so far as the appointment of committees is concerned, or so far as the jurisdiction of committees is involved. No such question as that has ever been presented, as I remember. I certainly do not believe the last Congress had power to bind this House to its parliamentary law, but I think the rule is, or that the principle underlying the decisions heretofore made is, that you must adopt for yourselves some code of rules for the government of this body while it is taking action as to the jurisdiction of committees. Subsequently, of course, we will be under the necessity of fixing the code of parliamentary law we shall adopt for our government during the Congress. The principle underlying the decisions heretofore made, as I understand it, is, so far as the regulation of the proceedings of the House is concerned, that the parliamentary law to be enforced is the rules in force in the preceding House. The reason for it does not rest upon any binding force in the rules of the preceding House; not at all, and I do not so hold.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I believe a large number of the members of this House are agreed there should be some amendment of our rules. In order to accomplish that much-needed result the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois should be referred to the Committee on Rules, who will carefully examine each one of its provisions and report back to the House. Pending the consideration of that report, it seems to me to be proper we should adopt some mode of procedure under which we may act in good order and with due decorum. For that purpose, it occurs to me, no better plan could be adopted than the one adopted heretofore under like circumstances, and that is, of adopting the rules of the last House of Representatives—say for a period of ten or twenty days as may be most convenient and agreeable to the judgment of the House. I hope that course will be taken; that the gentleman from Illinois will consent to the reference of his proposed amendments to the Committee on Rules and that we shall then adopt a resolution that the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-eighth Congress shall be and remain in force, say until the 20th of December next. Afterward we may go on with the business of the House under the new rules as they may be arranged by the House on the report of the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will now hear the gentleman from Illinois against whom the point of order has been made.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, in my judgment the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia or something like it should be adopted, that our proceedings may be orderly. When it was proposed my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER] was on the floor, and he can not, as I understand, be taken from it without his consent. He was on the floor to make a short statement in explanation of the proposition he has presented for the amendment of the rules for the government of the House, and I know my colleague well enough to know the shortest way out of this controversy will be to allow him to make his statement or speech. [Laughter.] I think he has given this subject much attention and study, and therefore it is only just that he should be allowed to make his statement before action is taken by the House or its committee. Then, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] can submit his resolution, and it can be adopted or otherwise disposed of by the House. When that is disposed of, if my colleague does not move to refer his proposition to the Committee on Rules, where it may be considered in connection with all other propositions for the amendment of the rules referred to that committee, I shall submit that motion myself. I trust my colleague will be allowed to go on with his statement and that the House will hear him.

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not desire to interfere with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] submitting any remarks he may desire on his proposed amendments to the rules of the House. It was my belief when I submitted the resolution which has been read that it would be adopted at once without debate. Now, if it can be the understanding after the gentleman has made his remarks that my resolution shall be taken up for action, I have no objection to that course being pursued.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has made a question of order which the Chair understands he insists on having decided before the gentleman proceeds. If, however, the gentleman from New York consents to the arrangement suggested by the gentleman from Georgia, of course that will obviate all further difficulty.

Mr. HISCOCK. What was it?

The SPEAKER. That the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] be permitted to make a brief statement in explanation of the proposition which he has made, after which the vote shall be taken on the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Without a ruling on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman waives the point of order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am entirely willing the gentleman from Illinois shall be heard in explanation of his amendment, but I reserve the point on the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia until after the gentleman from Illinois has been heard. Permit me, while I am upon the floor, to ask the Clerk to read what has been said on this subject by Senator CONGER when formerly a member of this House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SPARKS. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. I simply wish to call the attention of the Chair to a suggestion in the remarks of Mr. Grow in 1860, which to me seems to have considerable force, although it was not enlarged upon by Mr. Grow, and has not been referred to in the present discussion. The constitutional provision is that—

"Each House may determine the rules of its proceedings."

Now, I submit that the phrase "each House" does not mean each renewed House of Representatives; but the Constitution, referring alike to the two Houses of Congress, provides that each of them may make its own rules independently of the other. This is the great constitutional point, as I take it, and Mr. Grow, in his remarks, merely alluded to it.

Now, if it be true that all the rules of the House of Representatives are vacated upon the termination of the official life of its members, it could equally be said that all rules adopted in the other branch of Congress expire with the change of its members. It happens, however, that the Senate is a continuing body in this sense, that two-thirds of its old members are always understood to continue in office at the opening of each new Congress.

Now, the power of this House to make its own rules is conferred upon it as one of the two branches of Congress; the power is not, by the language of the Constitution, intended to apply specifically to each renewed House of Representatives.

I wish to call the attention of the Chair to another point. It is admitted by all that each successive House of Representatives as organized is subject at any rate to the general rules of parliamentary law, if not to any formal rules which may have been previously adopted. Now, I submit that in the case of a long-existing constitutional body like the House of Representatives the natural and proper criterion for determining the rules of the body would be to refer to those rules which by usage, by custom, by prescription, by enactment, or in any other way, may have been established as the rules of that particular body, rather than to refer to the more general principles of parliamentary law which may or may not in their entirety have received the sanction of that particular body. In other words, it would seem proper to look to the last expression of the will of the House in reference to the parliamentary rules which should govern it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would be the best example to follow.

Mr. CONGER. The best criterion as to the parliamentary rules applicable to that body.—Congressional Record, Forty-sixth Congress, first session, page 112.

Mr. SPRINGER. In this connection I ask to have read the following proceedings of the Forty-fourth Congress, in which Speaker Kerr decided this particular point, and I ask the special attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to what he said at the time.

The Clerk read as follows:

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-third Congress shall be the rules of the House of Representatives until otherwise ordered, except Rule 166 and Rule 167.

"Resolved further, That a committee of five, to consist of the Speaker and four members, to be named by him, be appointed, to whom shall be referred the rules of the House, who shall report all such amendments or revisions of the same as they shall think proper, and such reports shall always be in order to be made."

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a point of order. I object to the resolution under the existing rules, which are our rules without a declaration of this sort.

Mr. RANDALL. I submit that both these resolutions are strictly in order. I propose that we adopt the rules of the last House, with the exceptions stated. As to the second resolution, I will say there is no rule providing for the appointment of a Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is therefore mistaken on this point.

Mr. GARFIELD. That particular point is not what I object to. I object to the first branch of the gentleman's resolutions, on the ground of immemorial usage.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman has a perfect right to object by voting against the resolutions, but in no other manner.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit that this is not a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make that point of order?

Mr. GARFIELD. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules it, on the ground that the Constitution clearly gives to each House the right to adopt its own rules. Whatever may have been the rules or orders of a preceding House in reference to this matter, they cannot supersede the constitutional right of this House to adopt its own rules.

Mr. RANDALL. The Speaker is clearly right.

Mr. GARFIELD. I submit that these resolutions should be referred to the Committee on Rules when appointed.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no rule of this House, and there was no rule of the last House, by which a Committee on Rules can be appointed. It is only by a resolution of this character that the Speaker can be authorized to appoint a Committee on Rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will find that immemorial usage is in itself a rule.

Mr. RANDALL. Immemorial usage will do for that side of the House, but we mean to have strict construction of the rules. [Laughter.] For the information of the House, let the rules excepted be read, and then I shall demand the previous question on the adoption of my resolution, unless some gentleman on that side of the House may desire to speak. I ask the Clerk to read the two excepted rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

"166. All motions to suspend the rules, except where they may be suspended by a majority, shall, before being submitted to the House, be seconded by a majority, as in the case of the previous question.—January 20, 1874.

"167. Whenever a question is pending before the House, the Speaker shall not entertain any motion of a dilatory character except one motion to adjourn and one motion to fix the day to which the House shall adjourn. But the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of any bill or joint resolution shall not be ordered during the first day of its consideration unless two-thirds of the members present shall second the demand: Provided, That this rule shall not apply to House resolutions offered in the morning hour of Monday: And provided further, That it shall not apply to any proposition to appropriate the money, the credit, or other property of the United States, except the regular annual appropriation bills."—February 1, 1875.—Congressional Record, Forty-fourth Congress, first session.

Mr. RANDALL. And I have never maintained anything except what is in exact harmony with that statement. I maintain now that a motion to adopt rules by this House is a motion which is strictly in order——

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the necessity for a motion if the rules are already in force?

Mr. RANDALL. And that motion the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] has made.

But the gentleman from Illinois can go a little further in my history and reach a later date when he will find a decision touching this very question. The ground of Mr. Garfield's objection at that time was as to the exception mentioned in the resolution which has been read, and nothing more. And further, Mr. Speaker, I submit as a matter of fact to you, that up to this very hour the organization of this House has been carried on under and according to the rules of the last House.

Mr. PETERS. By consent only.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no desire to prolong the discussion of this question, but I desire for one to enter my protest against the idea that any preceding House can by any method establish any rules which can bind a succeeding House. Each House must proceed under the Constitution in its organization, and frame for itself its own code of rules. But I rose particularly to call the attention of the Speaker to a paragraph on this very question in Cushing's work on parliamentary law, which I think is very clear and possibly may serve to solve this proposition. On page 311 he says:

In the American constitutions it is provided generally that each house shall have the right to determine the rules of its own proceedings. No legislative assembly, therefore, can make any rules which will be binding upon its successors, even until abrogated or rescinded by them.

And gentlemen seem to lay great stress on that provision of the rules which declares that they shall be binding until they are rescinded.

Hence the system of standing orders is not in use in our legislative bodies, but it is the invariable practice for each of them soon after its first meeting and organization to frame and adopt a code of written rules for the government and regulation of its own proceedings. * * *

But though each house may and does determine its rules of procedure, it does not follow from this principle that until it adopts rules a legislative assembly is entirely destitute of rules for the government of its proceedings. It is in the mean time governed by what may be called the common parliamentary law; that is, so much of the usages and methods of Parliament as are of general application, modified by usage and practice in this country.

That, Mr. Speaker, seems to me to be very clear, and places the Chair in the determination of this question under the common parliamentary law modified by the established usage of this House.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. What is before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is a question of order pending.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the Chair please state what is the question of order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, Mr. SPRINGER, offered a resolution proposing the adoption of the rules of the last House for the government of this House with certain modifications. The gentleman from New York, Mr. HISCOCK, makes the point of order that the rules of the last House are in force until otherwise ordered by this House, and that under these rules this proposition must be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand it, an arrangement has been made——

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had the floor, as the Chair understands, to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I had not concluded what I desired to say.

Mr. HISCOCK. An arrangement had been already made that the gentleman from Illinois was to be heard on his proposition, and I supposed I had waived the point of order for the purpose of permitting him to be heard.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida will now be recognized.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that while gentlemen are discussing the point of order they are also discussing a resolution submitted by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND].

The SPEAKER. That is not now before the House.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I am aware of that, but it seems they are discussing it as if it was now pending before the House.

If I understand the statement of the Chair, then, the point of order is raised by the gentleman from New York that any proposition to change the rules, under the existing orders of this House, must go to the Committee on Rules. Now, I submit to the gentleman from New York and to the Speaker of the House this proposition, that there is no Committee on Rules to which such reference can be made. The rules of the last House prescribed "that these rules shall be the rules of the House of Representatives of the present and succeeding Congresses, unless otherwise ordered." The last House had no right to prescribe rules which shall govern this House. I think, sir, that the authorities upon that subject are conclusive; and it seems to me that action could be taken which would cut short this discussion and do away with all of this argument if the gentleman from Georgia would incorporate in his resolution words to the effect that the rules in question shall govern this House unless otherwise ordered, and that it shall not require a two-thirds vote of the House to abrogate them.

The SPEAKER. The rules do not require a two-thirds vote to abrogate or change them, but a two-thirds vote is required to suspend the rules.

Mr. WARNER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, it seems to be very generally agreed on all sides that this House is governed by parliamentary law. Now it occurs to me that the very best embodiment or expression of what is the parliamentary law of this country governing such bodies is the rules of the last House, and that they therefore do obtain as the rules of this House, with the right, of course, to change or modify them. If, then, we can dispose of the point of order, we will be ready to proceed to the next proposition. If the rules of the last House obtain, I see no necessity for the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia. The adoption of the motion of the gentleman from Georgia would make specific, of course, what are to be the rules of the House; but otherwise they remain as the general embodiment of the legislative law of the country as applicable to such purposes. His proposition specifically adopts them until they are changed.

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Ohio, if he will permit an interruption, this question: If the rules of the last House are in force here, what more force or efficacy can be given them by a motion for their specific adoption? What is the necessity for such a motion?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not think there is any. I think the rules are in force as an expression and the best expression or embodiment of parliamentary law; only, however, governing our general procedure until they are modified by the House itself.

Mr. HAMMOND. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] thinks the rules of the last House are in force, not because of the rule which so declares—for he concedes that that is unconstitutional—but because they are the best embodiment of parliamentary law known to us. I am far from desiring that the Chair should make such a ruling as that the rules of the last House are in force by reason of anything and for any purpose. I would not place this House in a position where a minority could keep those rules in existence by filibustering or otherwise.

I understand that we have no rules at all applicable to this House, and that as soon as this House was organized it was its duty to exercise its constitutional right to determine its rules. We have none until we determine them; and if the Chair should rule that the old rules are in force the Chair would be doing what I think would be wrong and certainly distasteful to this body; for there is a strong disposition to change the rules of the House, and we do not wish to start out with those rules.

But apart from that it is important that we shall have certain rules of procedure, something recognized, so that in case of dispute we shall have an arbiter to settle that dispute. I do not think, therefore, that the point of order is well taken, because we have no rules that make such points of order. We are seeking simply to get at our business until we can adopt regular rules determined under the Constitution; and I say candidly that I do not desire to bind anybody to any rule that he thinks objectionable. My whole object is to have good order while we are determining the rules of our proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has stated he was entirely willing the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] should proceed to make an explanation of his proposition and that the House should then dispose of this other matter. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will proceed.

Mr. SPRINGER. After I have made an explanation of the changes which I have proposed to the rules I will then, unless some other gentleman proposes to discuss the question, move to refer the whole subject to the Committee on Rules.

There are five general objects which I desire to accomplish by the amendments which I have offered. The first of these is a partial distribution of the labors of the Appropriations Committee. The amendment which I have suggested proposes to take the business and appropriations pertaining to the Post-Office Department, to the Army and to the Navy, and to refer those subjects to the appropriate committees. My object in taking these matters away from the Appropriations Committee is not merely for the sake of the division or distribution of this labor. It is founded upon the better ground that as now constituted, in view of the vast business of this country, the Committee on Appropriations has more business committed to it than it is possible for any fifteen members of this House to properly consider and mature in the little time allowed them by the law. It is for that reason only that I propose this division of labor so that other committees can assist in preparing these bills and assist in the investigation of the vast and intricate machinery of government which requires these appropriations.

Other propositions have been made to go still further and give the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the Committee on Pensions the appropriations pertaining to those subjects. But I think that with the distribution which I have suggested now there will be ample time for the Committee on Appropriations to consider the subjects which are properly left within their jurisdiction.

There are many reasons why this labor should be divided. Take the Navy Department, for instance. We are now met by a condition of circumstances which requires that we should enter upon a systematic rebuilding of the Navy. The labor required to properly consider measures relating to that subject is so great, it seems to me, as to require the attention of one committee during the entire Congress.

We are also about to enter upon a system of coast defenses. Under the resolution which I have proposed the subject of fortifications would go to the Committee on Military Affairs. Heretofore the Committee on Appropriations has simply reported perfunctory measures upon the subject of fortifications and but little attention has been given to the subject. But recently a discussion has taken place in the public press and distinguished statesmen of the country have called the attention of Congress to the important subject of coast defenses. It seems to me that to-day that subject of itself is one of sufficient importance to require the attention of one committee of this body during this session. It is for that reason I propose to refer the whole subject of coast defenses and the appropriations for the Army to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Thirdly, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads is one of very great importance to the country. Our postal system is now becoming extensive, beyond the expectations of the most sanguine friends of the governmental postal service. It ramifies into every school district of the Union. It carries the mails of the people through the length and breadth of the land, and even across the waters to every civilized nation in the world. If the subjects pertaining to the postal service should be committed to one committee of this House where they can be properly considered and adjusted, it seems to me, that committee if it will properly perform its duties will have all the work it can do during one session of Congress. If these subjects, therefore, were referred to the several committees mentioned, it seems to me that the Committee on Appropriations would then have ample time to consider the important measures with which it has to deal.

Another reason for distribution is this: Under the present system, the Committee on Appropriations is so far overloaded and overworked that many bills are not brought in until the very last days of the session. It happens frequently that bills covering millions of dollars are brought into the House at so late a period in the session that it becomes necessary to suspend the rules and pass them in order to avoid the necessity for a called session of Congress. If you distribute the work as I have proposed, there will be no longer any necessity of incurring that hazard. The committees can bring their bills here in ample time and have them considered intelligently and deliberately by the House.

An objection has been made to the proposed system of distribution that it will cause increased appropriations. To that objection I desire to address myself for one moment only. The objection implies that careful scrutiny of expenditures, careful investigation of the objects for which appropriations are to be made, and of the necessities which require them to be made, will conduce to extravagance, and that, on the other hand, a partial examination of a subject by a subcommittee hastily brought together is necessary in order to secure economy in expenditures! It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the mere statement of these propositions should be sufficient to completely answer the arguments of gentlemen who have contended that there will be an increase of expenditures as a result of dividing the labors of the Committee on Appropriations. I maintain, sir, that strict economy and wise legislation will be the result of more careful investigation and more thorough inquiry into the objects and the necessities which demand appropriations. It is for that reason that I have proposed this distribution. The objection which I have mentioned also implies a reflection upon this House, upon the representatives of the people here, to the effect that they can not be intrusted with this important function of legislation. I believe that when our constituents sent us here to represent them they intended that this House, acting through a majority of its members, should be free at all times to formulate and pronounce their will, and that there is to be no favored few or no honored few in our midst who are alone to be intrusted with appropriation of the people's money. I believe, therefore, that the distribution of powers will encourage and secure economy in expenditures, and will certainly conduce to wise legislation.

Another proposition which is contained in the revision I have submitted relates to the abolition of useless committees. I propose to abolish those committees that have no business to transact, or business so trifling and unimportant as to make it unnecessary to have standing committees upon such subjects. I propose to abolish some twenty-one standing and select committees and to create four new ones to take their places. This will at once do away with sixteen committee clerkships and leave in existence only those belonging to committees which have important business to consider and bring before the House. If we allow these twenty-one useless committees to be again put upon our list, to be called regularly in the morning hour, each committee being entitled to the morning hour for two days, forty-two days will be consumed in calling these committees if they have any business at all to report. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that that time had better be saved and devoted to the transaction of important business, instead of being consumed by matters of little or no consequence. Some of the committees that I have proposed to abolish are the Committee on Mileage, the Committee on Manufactures, the Committee on Militia, the Committee on Revision of the Laws, the Committee on Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, and the eight committees on expenditures in the several Departments. I also propose to consolidate the two committees on railways into one. There are several other changes proposed which will be seen in the printed statement which will be laid upon members' tables this evening or to-morrow.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that these useless committees will be abolished, so that when we are assembled in the important committees of the House for the transaction of business it will not be necessary for half the members to ask to be excused in order that they may go out and attend the meetings of other committees to which also they have been assigned. If a gentleman is a member of one good committee and will give the business of that committee proper attention, he can always be present at its sessions and can give due consideration to the subjects committed to him there.

Another change which I propose is in reference to the morning hour. Under the rules of preceding Houses, ever since the Forty-sixth Congress, the morning hour has been occupied by reports from committees, which reports are printed and go upon the Calendar, or are referred to the respective Committees of the Whole. I propose to restore the old morning hour, with this addition: That when a committee is called in the morning hour, and has no bills which it desires to report, it may call up from the Calendar any bill theretofore reported by it and have that bill considered at the time the same as if it were then reported. And further, that when a committee has occupied the morning hour for two days and any bill is left pending at the expiration of that period, that bill will go to the order of Unfinished Business, so that when the committees are called in the next morning hour the next succeeding committee on the list may have its place; the House proceeding to dispose of the unfinished business during such time as may be required for that purpose.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that these are very important changes, and that this departure from the rules heretofore in force is one which should receive the approbation of every gentleman here who desires to place it in the power of the majority of this House to bring forward and have considered from time to time such measures of legislation as our constituents and the necessities of the country may demand, and as the majority of this House shall deem proper to enact.

I remember that during the last Congress a very important bill, that providing for the Presidential succession, placing it in members of the Cabinet, was reported from a committee of which I had the honor to be a member, and was placed on the Calendar of the House on the 21st day of April, 1884; and that bill, which was favored by nearly the entire House, was permitted to die on the Calendar, because there never was a moment when, under the rules as they then existed, that bill could be reached and passed upon by the House. I believe members of the last House will bear me out in the statement that during the sittings of that House we never went to the Calendar as a distinct order of business; that, owing to the fact that we could not transact business under the rules, all business was done by unanimous consent or under propositions to suspend the rules upon the two Mondays in each month on which such suspensions were allowed.

I propose, therefore, to open up an avenue for general legislation by which the committees of this House can have a hearing on this floor and measures affecting the rights of their constituents, the people of this country, can be brought forward and considered. In opening this avenue to general legislation I propose, Mr. Speaker, to trust the representatives of the people. I am not afraid that gentlemen here who have been chosen to represent the fifty-five millions of the people of the United States are incompetent to discharge their duties. Heretofore, as soon as we met here, it has been our habit to proceed immediately to bind ourselves hand and foot, the majority delivering themselves over to the power of the minority that might oppose any particular measure, so that nothing could be done in the way of legislation except by unanimous consent or by a two-thirds vote. I propose to permit measures of legislation to come forward and be considered by the House, to be adopted if wise, and if not, to be rejected.

The effect of the blocking of legislation under our past practice is shown by the number of bills which has accumulated on the House Calendar and the calendars of the Committees of the Whole House. When the last Congress adjourned 10,000 bills had been introduced and printed, nearly all of which had been introduced also in the preceding Congress, from which they had come over as a legacy, exhibiting the inefficiency of our rules and the impossibility of transacting business under them. In this way bills have been piled up almost mountain high, while the House has been unable to reach measures of legislation which it desired to consider. I hope, therefore, that when this subject is brought back from the Committee on Rules the proposition I have indicated will be so embodied as to enable the representatives of the people to transact the people's business.

I have also proposed to change the rule of the House which allows legislation on appropriation bills. In submitting this proposition I have accompanied it with another proposed change of the rules, to the effect that those committees having charge of appropriations, and other committees having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of these bills, may be permitted to bring forward general legislation in separate bills which retrench expenditures, and that these retrenchment bills shall have the privilege of report, and priority of consideration over appropriation bills themselves in the Committee of the Whole; so that when the House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business therein we can first consider such general bills retrenching expenditures as may be referred there for consideration; and afterward the Committee on Appropriations can bring in money bills to meet the provisions which may be adopted in these general retrenchment bills.

It seems to me that this proposition has many features which commend it to this House as a substitute for the present system. It may be improper under the rules, if we have any, to refer to the other branch of Congress; but it is known to gentlemen here that the Senate has placed itself fixedly against legislation upon appropriation bills, and that many provisions in appropriation bills looking to economy in expenditure have been rejected by the Senate, the sole reason alleged being that such measures came in the shape of legislation upon appropriation bills. In this way the Senate has been permitted to raise a false issue with the representatives of the people. Senators reject our economical legislation because, they say, it is incorporated in appropriation bills, and not because they are opposed to it on its merits. I propose, therefore, to meet Senators on this subject in a spirit of fairness; to send to them economical legislation in one class of bills and appropriations of money in another, asking them to consider and adopt these measures of retrenchment coming from the representatives of the people and then to pass the appropriations in conformity therewith. If this be done the Senate will have no opportunity to make a false issue with us, but will be compelled to meet on their merits these measures of economical legislation and not dodge the issue on the plea that we have sent them legislation on appropriation bills. The provision, therefore, which I have suggested is that no proposition changing existing law or embodying general legislative provisions shall be incorporated in any general appropriation bill, either in the text or as an amendment thereto.

I have also incorporated in this proposition some amendments looking to the disposition of bills of a private character. I propose that such bills, instead of being introduced under the call of States and Territories on Mondays, shall be handed to the Clerk, as have been bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors and bills to establish post-routes. Thus any member having a private bill for introduction can place it in the box at the Clerk's desk, and in that way it will be properly journalized and referred to the appropriate committee.

I submit also another proposition with regard to private bills—that when they have been once printed they shall not be again printed until the copies already on file have been exhausted. If this proposition be adopted it will result in a saving of some forty or fifty thousand dollars a year upon the item of printing. We have a vast accumulation of bills of a private character. I desire that these bills shall be sent to appropriate committees without taking up the time of the House with formally introducing them and reading them twice; but my proposition contemplates that when measures of this class are reported from committees they shall then be printed and also the accompanying reports, and placed on the Calendar or referred to the Committee of the Whole for consideration.

These embody the general and main features of the revision which I propose; but there are some less important provisions to which I desire to call the attention of the House. Under our former rules, when objection was made to the consideration of a bill reached in Committee of the Whole, it was necessary that the committee should rise and report the objection to the House, when, if the committee was endeavoring to reach a bill that the minority opposed, filibustering would immediately begin, and the House would not get back into Committee of the Whole. In this case I have proposed an amendment, so that when objection is made to the consideration of any bill in Committee of the Whole the committee shall decide without rising whether it will consider that bill or some other.

Again, under the rules as heretofore existing, when it was desired to close debate on any proposition in Committee of the Whole, it was necessary that the committee should rise and submit the question to the House, when the yeas and nays might be called and other filibustering proceedings adopted. I propose in this revision that the Committee of the Whole shall decide such questions for itself, and proceed with the consideration of its business without the necessity of rising.

In short, the revision which I have proposed is intended to facilitate legislation. I have endeavored to eliminate from the old rules all those provisions which have tended to obstruct legislation and prevent the majority of the House from bringing forward and considering such bills as their constituents desired them to consider.

By some wonderful ingenuity or mystery the rules as heretofore framed seem to have been peculiarly constructed with a view to prevent legislation and place all the powers of the House in the hands of one committee. I desire to distribute that power, to divide that responsibility with the whole body of the people's representatives. It is my wish that every member shall stand on this floor equal in legislative power as equal under the law. I desire all should have equal right in bringing forward their respective measures and having them considered and disposed of.

If the proposition I have formulated shall meet the views of the House of Representatives, we shall then proceed as a legislative body to perform the high functions which have been committed to us by fifty-five millions of people—the functions of legislating for the people. On the contrary, as our rules heretofore have been, as soon as we got here we have turned over all these functions to one of the committees of the House and relieved all the other members from all further business. I propose, therefore, to give all the committees a chance, to give all the members a chance, to enable this House in an intelligent way to consider and adopt or reject such measure as to their judgment may seem best.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if no other gentleman desires to speak, and this point does not dispose of the subject, I will move to refer my resolution to the Committee on Rules with the further provision that it shall be presented in bill form.

There was no objection, and it was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HERBERT. I gave notice I would move at the proper time to table the resolution of the gentleman from Georgia. A modification of that proposition has been suggested and accepted. If the gentleman from Georgia will offer the modified proposition it will be entirely satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to refer his resolution to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RANDALL. No one will object to that.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Would it be in order to move an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course it would.

The SPEAKER. Provided the gentleman accepts it. The resolution is not before the House for consideration, but merely for reference.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman can introduce it and have it referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. That is all I ask.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can introduce his proposition afterward and it can be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. SPRINGER'S motion was agreed to; and his resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to offer an amendment for reference to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let it be read.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is precisely the same proposition I offered two sessions ago and which came within 11 votes of being adopted.

The proposition was read, as follows:

Mr. REED proposed the following changes in the rules of the House: That when the rules of the last House be adopted it be with the following amendments:

That clause 2 of Rule XXIV be amended so as to read as follows:

"2. On all days other than Monday, as soon as the Journal is read and approved, and on all Mondays (except the first and third in each month), after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for reports of committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed, and a copy thereof mailed by the Public Printer to each Member and Delegate.

"Provided, That during such morning hour it shall be in order to consider such bills as would otherwise go to, or are already on, the House Calendar, if the committee in charge when called shall so direct. The Speaker shall call each committee in regular order, and if the Speaker shall not get through the call of committees before the House passes to other business, he shall resume the next call where he left off, giving preference to the measure last under consideration; but whenever any committee shall have occupied the morning hour on one day, it shall not be in order for such committee to report further until the other committees shall have been called in their turn."

That clause 4 be so amended as to read as follows:

"4. After one hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees, except on the second and fourth Mondays of each month, it shall be in order to proceed to business on the Speaker's table, to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, or to the House Calendar, motions therefor having priority in the order named. The morning hour shall continue until the House determines to go to other business."

That clause 5 be so amended as to read as follows:

"5. When the House proceeds to the Speaker's table, the business shall be disposed of in the following order:

"First. Messages from the President and other executive communications.

"Second. Messages from the Senate and amendments proposed by the Senate to bills of the House.

"Third. Bills and resolutions from the Senate on their first and second reading; that they be referred to committees or put on their passage, and the motions so to refer shall have precedence of all motions touching their disposition.

"Fourth. Engrossed bills and bills from the Senate on their third reading."

That clause 6 be amended so as to read as follows:

"6. When a motion is made that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it shall be in order, pending that motion, if directed by a committee, to move to designate a bill to be first considered in the committee, which motion shall not be subject to amendment or debate, and only one designation shall be pending at a time. If no bill be designated, or, being designated, is disposed of in committee, it shall then consider first bills for raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other bills on its Calendar.

"7. On Friday of each week, after the morning hour, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and, if this motion fail, then public business shall be in order as on other days."

Add to Rule XXIV the following clause:

"8. After the morning hour, on the second and fourth Mondays of each month, it shall be in order to consider legislation relating to the District of Columbia, unless dispensed with by a two-thirds vote of the House."

That there be added to Rule XXIV the following clause:

"9. Before the morning hour it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of unfinished business, other than that in the morning hour or on the Speaker's table, and the consideration of all other unfinished business shall be resumed whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order under the rules."

The proposition was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BEACH submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That all eulogies of deceased members shall be delivered upon a Sunday, at such hour as may be fixed, and shall be accompanied with brief religious services by the Chaplain under the direction of the Speaker.

Resolved further, That upon all such occasions the galleries and the seats on the floor, if not claimed by those entitled to them at the hour fixed for the ceremonies to begin, shall be free to the public.

Resolved, That a committee of fifteen members be appointed, to be known as the "Committee on Constitutional Amendments," to which shall be referred all resolutions and bills proposing amendments to the Constitution.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, moved the following amendment; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed:

Amend Rule XXXIV by striking out the words "ex-members of Congress" and inserting instead thereof the words "an ex-member of Congress on not more than six legislative days during the same."

Mr. REAGAN moved the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to consider and report to the House on the propriety of the adoption of a rule providing that the members of the House shall appoint the committees of the House; with a proviso that such rule shall not prevent the Speaker of the House from appointing its committees during the present Congress.

Mr. MILLS submitted the following amendment; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That it shall be in order on any day, after the reading of the Journal, to move to suspend the rules and pass any bill which may have been reported to the House by the Committee on Ways and Means; and the votes of a majority of the members present may suspend the rules and pass said bill.

Mr. DINGLEY moved the following amendments; which were referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed:

Amend Rule X by inserting after "Committee on Rivers and Harbors" the following:

"On Navigation and Fisheries, to consist of thirteen members."

Also amend Rule XI by inserting after item 8 the following:

"To the merchant marine, seamen and fisheries: to the Committee on Navigation and Fisheries."

Mr. HAMMOND. As possibly the word "procedure" in my former resolution may have a broader meaning than I intended, I offer as a substitute the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That pending the consideration of proposed rules, and until this House shall determine the rules of its proceedings, the House be governed by Jefferson's Manual as modified by the parliamentary practice of the House of Representatives.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON. In order that the Committee on Rules may have time to consider this subject, I move that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

The SPEAKER announced that he had appointed the Committee on Rules as follows: The Speaker, SAMUEL J. RANDALL of Pennsylvania, WILLIAM R. MORRISON of Illinois, THOMAS B. REED of Maine, and FRANK HISCOCK of New York.

THE RULES.

Mr. HERBERT submitted the following proposition; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed:

RULE —.

None of the standing committees of the House, except the Committees on Pensions, Invalid Pensions, Claims, War Claims, Private Land Claims, and the various committees on expenditures in the several Departments, shall consider or report any bill allowing or touching upon the allowance of any designated claim or claims for money, unless such claim shall have been referred to such committee by a vote of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk for reference to the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend Rule X so as to read:

"On Ways and Means, to consist of fifteen members."

The SPEAKER. The amendment will be printed and referred to the Committee on Rules.

CANADIAN FISHERIES.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the heading only of a memorial signed by a large number of the citizens of Maine respecting the fisheries.

There was no objection.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, citizens of the State of Maine who feel a deep interest in the preservation and encouragement of the sea fisheries which have always proved so valuable a nursery of seamen to man our national vessels in case of war, represent to the Congress of the United States that these fishing interests have seriously declined during recent years, largely in consequence of the disastrous competition of Canadian fish, which, under treaty arrangements, have until recently been admitted into the markets of the United States without the payment of any duty. This exceptional privilege was granted to Canadians under the belief that certain privileges of fishing in Canadian waters, granted to American fishermen, would prove more valuable to our fishing interests than the privileges conceded to Canadians. But experience so fully established the fact that the arrangement was greatly to the disadvantage of our fishermen—partly in consequence of changed methods of fishing, which made Canadian waters of little advantage for fishing purposes—that Congress unanimously instructed the President to give the requisite notice for the termination of the fishery clause of the treaty; and accordingly the arrangement terminated on July 1, 1885, and Canadian fish have ever since been charged the same duty as fish brought into our markets by other foreign fishermen.

Your petitioners further represent that the Canadian Government, fully understanding that the free admission of their fish products to American markets is necessary in order to give their fishermen the advantage which they have secured over American fishermen, has entered into negotiations with the Government of the United States, through the British minister, to secure the renewal of the fishery arrangement which so seriously injured our fishing interests, either by special treaty dealing with this subject alone, or by a reciprocity treaty including other articles.

Your memorialists respectfully protest against any treaty, arrangement, or legislation which would admit Canadian fish into American markets free of duty, except in the case of herrings brought into our ports for sardine packing, and earnestly pray that Congress will recognize the claims of our American fishermen to the same measure of protection that is accorded other industries of the nation. We urge this not simply because of the importance of the industry, which can not maintain itself in open, free competition with the cheaper labor and cheaper vessels and supplies of Canadians engaged in this industry, but also and especially because it is a nursery of seamen from which the nation has in the past drawn the men that have defended our flag on the ocean in time of war, and which it is as essential to maintain as a resource and defense in case of a conflict with naval power as it is to erect forts and build a navy.

And as in duty bound will ever pray.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAYNE: A bill for the relief of Joseph Walton & Co.—to the Committee on Claims.

Hopkins; of Ruth C. Wallace, widow of Vincent Wallace, deceased; of Ethan A. Deuell and Edward V. Deuell, and of Phillip R. Jones, praying that their several claims be referred to the Court of Claims, under act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. VIELE: Memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, in behalf of Joseph Francis, the inventor of the life-saving car—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WHEELER: A bill to appropriate $500,000 to complete the Muscle Shoals Canal and improve the navigation of the Tennessee River—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petitions of F. E. Ashford, administrator of Bolling Byrd; Mary A. Allen, widow of N. G. Allen; John W. McGivier; Lewid F. Martin, executor of Francis C. Martin; Nancy Phillips, widow of Wilson Phillips; Reuben Copeland, Steven J. Matthews, and Clark M. Tompkins, praying that their several claims may be referred to the Court of Claims under act of March 3, 1883—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 10, 1885.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. E. D. HUNTLEY, D. D.

THOMAS M. BOWEN, a Senator from the State of Colorado, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 1665 of the Revised Statutes, a statement of the expenditures at the Springfield Armory, and of the arms, components of arms, and appendages fabricated, altered, and repaired at that armory during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885; which, together with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with law, the correspondence in regard to the proposed purchase for Army uses of the site and building in New York city known as the Old Produce Exchange; also, tracings of the plans for the reconstruction of the building; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls attention to the fact that the communication of the Secretary of War in regard to the purchase of an armory building in New York city is accompanied by large and, as he is informed, expensive exhibits and maps. The Chair suggests that the question of printing these maps be referred to the Committee on Printing also.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That question will be so referred.

TREASURY ACCOUNTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasurer of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with section 311 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, copies of the accounts rendered to and settled with the First Comptroller for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. These accounts, being in large folio volumes, have been filed with the Secretary of the Senate, and the Chair is advised that they are not usually published.

Mr. COCKRELL. Ought they not to be referred to the Committee on Printing, so that the committee may determine the propriety of printing them? They have heretofore been occasionally published, but not regularly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri make a motion to refer?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, together with the accompanying papers, will be referred to the Committee on Printing, to consider the question of printing.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LOGAN presented a petition of ex-soldiers in the late war, of Decatur, Ill., praying for an amendment to the act to "provide for the muster and pay of certain officers and enlisted men;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Amos Baccus, of Smithfield, Ill., late private Company B, One hundred and fifty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Edmund C. Bailey, of Chicago, Ill., praying compensation for the use by the Government of his spiral cutter in the manufacture of rifle and musket barrels; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. JACKSON presented the petition of Josiah M. Baird, of Rutherford County, Tennessee, praying to have his claim for quartermaster's stores furnished to the United States Army referred to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PIKE. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of New Hampshire favoring the enactment of such laws as will secure exclusively to American citizens the public lands of the United States. It is a resolution similar to the one which was sent to the President pro tempore, and which has been presented to the Senate and printed in the RECORD. I do not desire to have it read, but simply referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McPHERSON. I present a joint resolution of the Legislature of New Jersey in regard to the establishment of a penal colony in Alaska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution sent to the desk being a printed copy, not certified to, is of such a character as is usually not read. It may lie on the table or be referred.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have a letter from the governor inclosing it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator so desires, it will be read.

Mr. McPHERSON. I do.

The resolution was read, and referred to the Committee on Territories, as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY.

[Joint resolution.]

Joint resolution relative to penal colonization.

1. Be it resolved by the senate and general assembly of the State of New Jersey, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be hereby requested to ask for a Congressional inquiry into the fitness of a portion of the Territory of Alaska for the purpose of a penal colony and the advisability of establishing such a colony for life or long-term convicts of the General Government and of the several States, to the end that with equally complete sequestration of dangerous criminals and equally effective punishment there may be better secured the improvement or reformation of the convicts, the comfort of their families, and the interest of honest labor, with which, under the present penal system, the labor of convicts must inevitably conflict in all parts of the country.

2. And be it resolved, That the governor be hereby requested to transmit a copy of the foregoing resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives of this State in Congress.

Approved February 23, 1885.

PRINTING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MANDERSON. I desire to make a report on behalf of the Committee on Printing. The committee instruct me to report back the resolution submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] on the 8th instant for the printing of the President's message and certain accompanying reports. I ask that the resolution may be read before submitting a statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate 1,000 copies of the annual message of the President and the reports proper of the heads of Departments, Comptroller of the Currency, Director of the Mint, and Treasurer of the United States, not including appendices.

Mr. MANDERSON. Under the requirements of the law the message of the President and the reports of all heads of Departments, with the accompanying documents, are printed, 1,000 copies for the use of the Senate and 2,000 for the use of the other House. It is impossible, however, that these documents and reports can be printed for the use of Congress before, perhaps, March or April.

There is also required by law to be printed an abridgment of the message and documents; and under the statute it is provided that the head of each Department shall furnish to the Public Printer copies of the documents usually accompanying his annual report on or before the 1st day of November in each year, and a copy of his annual report on or before the third Monday in November in each year. Were this statute complied with, this abridgment of the messages and documents would be furnished to Congress during the month of January; but it is not within the knowledge, I think, of any member of the Committee on Printing that the statute has been complied with, and the message and documents are not placed in the hands of the clerk of the Committee on Printing until some time during the month of December. Therefore it is impossible that either the documents in full or the abridgment can be printed for the use of Congress during the early part of the session.

When a document is laid upon the table and ordered to be printed, that carries with the motion the printing of 1,900 copies—what is known as the "usual number." Of these 1,900 copies thus printed, but 243 pass to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and 190 to the folding-room of the Senate; so that it will be seen that of "the usual number" the portion for the use of Senators is quite limited.

The committee has ascertained that the cost of printing the 1,000 copies of the message, and of the accompanying reports of the heads of Departments, as proposed by this resolution, will cost $320, and it therefore recommends the adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say to the chairman of the Committee on Printing that I think all this enforces the necessity of some general rule of legislation governing this question. There is no more reason why we should pass a resolution of this kind for the printing of a particular public document, say the message of the President or the report of the head of a Department, than there is that we should be adopting special resolutions for the printing of the accompanying documents.

I therefore commend to the Printing Committee the advisability of an amendment of the law whereby this printing will go on in the usual way. I am told by the superintendent of the document-room that the full report is not printed yet of some documents ordered to be printed last year because of the fact that the State Department has not furnished the matter; and of course if it had to wait upon the passage of a special resolution it may not be printed until next year.

I think we ought to have some rule about it to obviate the necessity of doing this, as the course we now pursue sometimes begets the fear that there may be some laxity or some duplication of printing which is not necessary.

Mr. MANDERSON. I will suggest, in response to the Senator from Kansas, that the Committee on Printing have already this matter under consideration and hope to report proper legislation. One difficulty, however, which I may suggest is that many of the reports that are placed on the table and ordered to be printed are of such importance that an additional number to the usual number should be printed. I recognize that there are evils because of the fact that no general rule is applicable to the printing of documents as of bills. One of the evils in regard to the printing of bills is that we print of every bill that is introduced 950 copies, and in many cases of private bills that is far in excess of the amount required. The difficulty is to establish any general rule on the subject. That, however, is under consideration.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again reported.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. That will be in addition to the usual number that will be printed afterward.

Mr. MANDERSON. That will be in addition to the usual number of 1,900 copies, of which usual number the Senate obtains about 300 copies.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope the Committee on Printing will see that the work is done promptly and sent to us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is the adoption of the resolution reported by the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was agreed to.

SIOUX INDIAN LANDS IN DAKOTA.

Mr. MANDERSON. I report back from the Committee on Printing the answer to the resolution of the Senate of March 3, 1885, of the Secretary of the Interior, giving information in regard to the boundary line of the reservation heretofore occupied by the Sioux Indians at the Crow Creek agency in Dakota. The committee finds that the regular or usual number of this report when printed will cost $1,482. The 1,000 additional copies provided for by the resolution of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] will cost, unbound, $500, and bound, $662.50. The cost being $500 to print the unbound copies, it requires a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress to obtain this printing.

We therefore report back the resolution unfavorably, and I suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts the propriety of his presenting a concurrent resolution.

Mr. DAWES. I will inquire of the Senator whether the committee did not regard the information as of sufficient importance to be printed.

Mr. MANDERSON. The committee has not been able to give it thorough attention. The committee has simply understood that this was an important subject-matter.

Mr. DAWES. All the documents will be printed, the usual number I suppose, without any resolution?

Mr. MANDERSON. Without any resolution there will be 1,900 copies printed.

Mr. DAWES. Of the full report?

Mr. MANDERSON. Of the full report. The committee report back this resolution unfavorably.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a mere communication from the Secretary of the Interior, not a public document.

Mr. MANDERSON. It comes, however, under the head of "documents" so far as printing is concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like the opinion of the Chair on that point. I do not think it does.

Mr. MANDERSON. The provision is that all documents and reports of or to either House of Congress shall be printed, and that the usual number printed shall be 1,900.

Mr. ALLISON. This communication is in answer to a resolution of the Senate passed at the last session.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ALLISON. This is not a regular report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can make an order to print it.

Mr. ALLISON. But we have not made that order.

Mr. MANDERSON. If the communication of the Secretary of the Interior goes to the table and is ordered to be printed, 1,900 copies, the usual number, are printed under the rule.

Mr. DAWES. As at present advised, I think I shall not move the printing of an extra number.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire the Chair to state whether this document sent to us by the Secretary of the Interior, with the accompanying papers, will be printed without an order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to print the usual number was referred to the Committee on Printing. The Chair does not quite understand the report of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MANDERSON. The committee report adversely to the motion to print 1,000 additional copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. But the motion to print the usual number was also referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. MANDERSON. The committee did not so understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that that was the order.

Mr. DAWES. There was no motion made to print 1,000 extra copies. A motion to print was made and referred, it being supposed that the committee themselves might pass upon the question whether extra copies were necessary or not. If the usual number of all the documents is to be printed, so far as I am concerned, I think that is all I shall ask.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands then that the Committee on Printing report in favor of printing the usual number.

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, sir; but adversely on printing the extra thousand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the report will be agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. That means with the accompanying papers?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That includes the accompanying papers.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 337) to provide for the establishment of a postal telegraphic system; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the correct reference; but before the subject of the reference is disposed of, I wish to say that this bill is the same one that I introduced at the last Congress, and which went to the same committee, and was delayed there without any report until so late a period that in the press of business the subject could not be considered by the Senate before the expiration of the Congress.

I hope that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads will take the earliest opportunity to investigate this subject and to report upon the bill what they may think it right to do, either to reject it altogether or to amend it, so that the subject may be brought before the Senate at an early day for discussion and action. I wish to press it to a vote in this body, after reasonable discussion and examination by the committee. It may be that I should be willing myself (differing from my disposition last year) to provide for purchasing at their actual value the plants of telegraph companies that may wish to sell them to the United States—not the value of stock, watered or unwatered, but the actual value of the material substance of the lines and implements &c., provided we can find a tribunal that we have sufficient confidence in to appraise them or agree for them at a fair rate.

But, at any rate, what I wish now is to invite the committee, as I have no doubt it will gladly do, to an early consideration of and report upon the subject.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the remarks of the Senator from Vermont seem to convey an impression which perhaps he did not intend in regard to the bill of which he speaks having been referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads at the last Congress and there delayed unnecessarily. I wish to say to the Senator that the committee gave to that bill the most careful consideration and listened attentively to the argument of the Senator himself and the arguments on the other side, and that there was no unnecessary delay. They made a report at as early a day as they could arrive at a proper conclusion upon the merits of the bill referred to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not intend to impute the slightest reflection upon the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The subject certainly was then comparatively new, and the enormous power of the opposition to any scheme of this kind demanded a right to be heard by counsel, and by witnesses, and all that kind of investigation that great corporations always invite, which have the effect, whether intended or not, greatly to delay matters before committees, as I have myself experienced in the Committee on the Judiciary and other committees.

But now, the committee at the last session having got possession of all the history and the broad facts concerning the matter, I think will find that they need not go over all the ground again in detail and spend a large part of the session in hearing the arguments of counsel and the testimony of witnesses upon a subject that they are already in possession of all the facts about. So I should hope, while I impute no impropriety in the action of the committee last year, that we may get a very early report at this session, so that the question may be brought to a decisive judgment of this body by discussion and a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 338) to provide for the purchase of the two canals known as the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company Canal and the Lake Superior Ship-Canal Railway and Iron Company Canal, being the water communication across Keweenaw Point, Lake Superior, by way of Portage River and Lake, in the State of Michigan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 339) to enable the Light-House Board to increase the number of the light-house districts on the Western rivers, and making an appropriation therefor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 340) to authorize the creation of an additional light-house district; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 341) to provide for the erection of a building for the Light-House Board at Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 342) granting a pension to Marrilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 343) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William H. McBride; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 344) for the relief of Edward H. Leib; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 345) for the relief of Assistant Engineer Howard D. Potts, United States Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. PIKE introduced a bill (S. 346) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Safe Deposit Company of Washington, in the District of Columbia," approved January 22, 1867; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT introduced a bill (S. 347) to relieve commercial travelers from license taxes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 348) for the relief of Mrs. E. A. Benham, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Henry W. Benham, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. VANCE introduced a bill (S. 349) for the promotion of anatomical science, and to prevent the desecration of graves; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, introduced a bill (S. 350) for the relief of Edmund Wolf; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COKE introduced a bill (S. 351) to grant a right of way to the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COKE. This bill was before the Committee on Railroads at the last session and was favorably reported by that committee. In my judgment it should go back to it, but as the Senate has ruled on similar bills that they should go before the Committee on Indian Affairs, I move the reference of this bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 352) for the relief of Mrs. E. G. C. Abbott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 353) for the relief of J. D. Morrison, surviving partner of C. M. and J. D. Morrison; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 354) to provide for protecting the interests of the United States in respect of any incumbrances on property wherein it has an interest; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 355) to promote peace amongst nations, for the creation of a tribunal for international arbitration, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also introduced a bill (S. 356) granting a pension to Samuel Hanson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 357) granting arrears of pension to Nancy B. Leach; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 358) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Emily M. Wyman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 359) granting a pension to Margaret A. Blake; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 360) for the relief of John W. Beaman and B. F. Scribner; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 361) granting a pension to John L. Willhoite; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 362) granting a pension to James H. King; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 363) granting a pension to Edward Ayers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 364) granting a pension to Nancy Battorff; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 365) for the relief of Martin L. Bundy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MILLER, of New York, introduced a bill (S. 366) for the relief of William W. Webb; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 367) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint Lieut. William P. Randall a lieutenant-commander on the retired-list of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 368) for the relief of Susan E. Alger; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 369) for the payment of certain coupons of certain Indian-war bonds of the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JACKSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 370) for the relief of Payne, James & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. By request of a reputable attorney of this city I desire to introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 371) limiting a portion of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, and for other purposes," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of acts supplementary thereto; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 373) to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. As the bill is very voluminous, I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia without printing, and should it be necessary to print it I will take that order hereafter.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if he knows whether there are quite a number of copies of the bill that he has just introduced now in print?

Mr. INGALLS. Enough for the use of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia without an order to print.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 374) relating to police regulations in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committe on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 375) to refer the claims of the Eastern and Western Bands of Cherokee Indians to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 376) granting a pension to L. V. Hollyfield; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 377) granting a pension to Matthias Leckner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 378) granting a pension to Jacob Beck; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 379) for the relief of David Cornpropst; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LOGAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 380) for the relief of Mrs. Henrietta H. Cole; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also introduced a bill (S. 381) for the relief of the trustees of the Christian Brothers' College of Saint Louis, Mo.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 382) to authorize the Merchants' National Bank of Little Rock, Ark., to change its name to the First National Bank of Little Rock; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 383) for the relief of John P. Walworth; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 384) for the relief of John R. Treutlen; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 385) concerning the issuance of arms to the State militia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 386) to make an additional Article of War; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 387) to define the status and for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of certain recruits for the Fourteenth Kansas Cavalry Volunteers who were killed at Lawrence, Kans., August 21, 1863, by guerrillas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 388) to grant the right of way through the Fort Bliss military reservation to the Rio Grande and El Paso Railroad Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 389) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of Robert J. Baugness; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 390) for the relief of H. A. Myers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 391) for the relief of A. A. Thomas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 392) for the relief of Edward Fenlon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 393) to open to homestead settlement certain portions of the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the bill is referred, permit me to say that it is a literal copy of one introduced by me in the last Congress.

In the closing hours of the last session of the last Congress the President was authorized—and by the use of the word "authorized" I think it was intended that he should be required—to open negotiations with the Indians for the purpose of securing from them a cession of whatever interest they might have in these lands in order that the lands might be opened to homestead settlement. It was the expectation that that would be done during the last summer, and that the result of the negotiation would be reported to Congress at this session. I am informed by good authority that no steps at all have been taken in that respect.

I do not offer this bill with any preference for its particular terms. I present it in order that the subject itself may be taken up by the Committee on Indian Affairs, if they will consider it of sufficient importance to have it engage their time, so that some settlement of this very important question may be arrived at.

I say now, as I have heretofore said on this floor, that if the question is not settled by Congress it will in some way settle itself, and I fear not in a manner creditable to the Government or to the people. In view of the occurrences which are now taking place in that country by the removal of men who are there in the belief that they have a right to be there, and similar occurrences which will take place hereafter no doubt, and some of them I am afraid accompanied by a more or less tragical conclusion, I think this subject ought to receive the early and favorable consideration of the Committee on Indian Affairs and of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. VAN WYCK introduced a bill (S. 394) to establish an additional land district in the State of Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 395) to admit free of duty a certain set of altars for the Catholic church of St. John the Evangelist, in the parish of La Fayette, Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. GIBSON. A short memorial or petition accompanies the bill, which I ask the consent of the Senate to have printed and referred to the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to have printed a memorial accompanying the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The paper will be referred to the Committee on Finance, to accompany the bill.

Mr. GIBSON introduced a bill (S. 396) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Shannon, administratrix of the estate of Joseph R. Shannon, deceased, and to provide for the payment of the loss of the steamboat A. W. Quarrier; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GIBSON. There is also a memorial accompanying that bill which I should like to have printed, with the consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to have printed the memorial accompanying the bill just introduced.

Mr. ALLISON. In the RECORD?

Mr. GIBSON. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not in the RECORD, but as a document. If there is no objection, the paper will be printed and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PRINTING OF BILLS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed 1,000 extra copies each of Senate bills Nos. 52 and 54.

They are bills which I introduced day before yesterday, and which it would be very desirable to have distributed and understood pretty thoroughly among the people whom they affect.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

OBSEQUIES OF GENERAL GRANT.

Mr. MORRILL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses of the Senate committee appointed to attend the funeral obsequies of General U. S. Grant, late President of the United States, on voucher or vouchers properly allowed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REPORT ON EUROPEAN SEACOAST FORTIFICATIONS.

Mr. DOLPH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and hereby is, directed to communicate to the Senate a copy of the report of Capt. W. H. Bixby, of the United States Engineer Corps, on the seacoast fortifications in Europe in 1881–'82.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION REGENTS.

Mr. MORRILL. If it be now in order, I call up the joint resolution in relation to the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. 1) filling existing vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. MORRILL. I will merely state that this joint resolution is for the reappointment of three of the present Regents, and to supply the vacancy in consequence of the removal of General Sherman from the city, in whose place the name inserted is that of General Meigs.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear the joint resolution read at length.

Mr. HARRIS. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the existing vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class "other than members of Congress" shall be filled by the reappointment of John Maclean, of New Jersey; Asa Gray, of Massachusetts; Henry Coppee, of Pennsylvania; and the appointment of Montgomery C. Meigs, of the city of Washington, vice William T. Sherman, whose term has expired and who is no longer a citizen of Washington.

Mr. INGALLS. Has the joint resolution been reported by any committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been reported.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears to me that in a matter of this consequence we ought not to be called upon to act on the joint resolution without having the opinion of some committee on the subject. I shall hear with interest what the Senator from Vermont has to say upon the subject, but I am very clear that we should have the opinion of a committee.

Mr. MORRILL. In the first place, I will say that I am not aware of any appropriate committee to which this measure could be referred; and, in the next place, the joint resolution merely provides for the reappointment of three distinguished citizens, of different States, who have already served their term, which has expired, and the other nomination made is that of General Meigs, to supply the place of General Sherman, who is no longer eligible in consequence of having removed from the city of Washington, and the original law requires two to be residents of the city of Washington.

I may say that I was unfortunate in not conversing with the Senator from Kansas, but I conversed with quite a number of other Senators, who agreed that the presentation of the name of General Meigs was an eminently proper one to be made.

Mr. VOORHEES. May I inquire whether there is any new name suggested in that list with the exception of that of General Meigs?

Mr. MORRILL. That is the only one.

Mr. VOORHEES. So I understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Chair to understand the Senator from Kansas as moving to refer the joint resolution to a committee? If not, the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MAXEY. As a member of the Board of Regents I wish to say, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, that the character of General Meigs is too well known to require the report of any committee of this body; and the reason which actuated me in sustaining the position taken by the Senator from Vermont, who is also a member of the Board of Regents, was that there is to be some very valuable improvement soon made in the Smithsonian building and General Meigs is an architect of distinguished reputation, and his appointment as a member of the Board of Regents, he living here in Washington, would be eminently proper. I think he ought to go on that board. His well-known character we thought was ample to justify the appointment without a reference to a committee.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. I hope that the resolution will pass, although I consider that it is a little hasty for us to act, as the Senator from Kansas has suggested, without the advice of any committee; but I do not wish it to be understood that I vote for it on the ground stated by the Senator from Texas, that of General Meigs's architectural capacity or ability, for if we take the new Pension Office here as a sample of it and we undertake in advance to refer that to the judgment and taste of the people of the United States, we shall make a very wide mistake. I shall vote for General Meigs because I think he is a scientist, not because I think he is an architect.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOSS OF PROPERTY BY OFFICERS AND SOLDIERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further morning business, the bill introduced by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] will be laid before the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 427) for the repeal of an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of property destroyed in the military service of the United States."

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, agreeably to notice, I ask the indulgence of the Senate while I make a brief statement in regard to this bill.

During the last days of the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress, at a time when the Senate was in a mood to accommodate individual Senators who desired to have bills taken up out of their order in which they were particularly interested, the Senator from Missouri who sits nearest the desk [Mr. COCKRELL] asked to have taken up a bill to provide for the settlement of the claims of officers and enlisted men of the Army for loss of private property destroyed in the military service of the United States. I had never examined the bill, but upon the reading of it was unable to give it my assent. I endeavored then to call the attention of Senators to what I considered to be the extraordinary provisions of the bill; but as I appeared to stand alone and the occasion was not a suitable one for an extended discussion of the merits of the bill, I contented myself with voting against it. I ask the Secretary now to read what I have marked in the discussion of the bill itself, as it appears in the RECORD.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DOLPH. Before I vote on the bill, as I have not had time to examine it, I should like to know something more about it. I inquire of the Senator from Missouri if I understand the provision of the bill to be that in all cases where property of officers or enlisted men in the service of the United States is accidentally destroyed, as in the case of an accidental fire, while they are in service, the claim may be presented to the War Department, allowed, and paid?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the amendment be read as proposed and the bill with it, and then the Senator will get the idea. As I stated, there is no new principle in this. It is simply to take out of Congress a large number of cases that are pending here every year and that always pass when reached. It establishes no new principle of liability at all, and the Senator will discover exactly what it is if he listens to its being read as proposed to be amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The whole bill?

Mr. COCKRELL. The part in regard to liability.

Mr. DOLPH. I thought I caught the reading of the bill. I should like the Senator from Missouri to inform me if it is proposed by this bill, which is certainly new, although it may be a general law in conformity to the practice of the committee, to provide that any officer or enlisted man who has lost property by an accidental fire without his negligence may present his claim to the War Department and have it allowed and paid?

Mr. COCKRELL. Under certain conditions therein stated.

Mr. DOLPH. It seems to me that it is based on a wrong principle.

Mr. COCKRELL. The question has been debated fifty times in the Senate, and always decided one way; and the committee, in order to get rid of the personal investigation of all these cases, reported this general bill which has been passed by the House, and we limited it, did not make it as wide as it was when it passed the House. We restricted it more narrowly than the House bill.

Mr. FRYE. And the payment in case of a loss by fire is limited, is it not?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is.

Mr. FRYE. Where an officer or soldier in taking charge of Government property sacrifices his own.

Mr. SEWELL. The limitation extends to the articles necessary for the position of the officers or men, not to watches, trinkets, or anything of that kind, but to the necessary equipment of the soldier or officer.

Mr. COCKRELL. The bill as proposed to be amended reads:

"That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of the private property belonging to officers and enlisted men in the military service of the United States which has been, or may hereafter be, lost or destroyed in the military service under the following circumstances:

"First. When such fault or destruction was without fault or negligence on the part of the claimant.

"Second. Where the private property so lost or destroyed was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of any officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment.

"Third. Where it appears that the loss or destruction of the private property of the claimant was in consequence of his having given his attention to the saving of the property belonging to the United States which was in danger at the same time and under similar circumstances. And the amount of such loss so ascertained and determined shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be in full for all such loss or damage: Provided. That any claim which shall be presented and acted on under authority of this act shall be held as finally determined, and shall never thereafter be reopened or considered: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to losses sustained in time of war or hostilities with Indians: And provided further, That the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such article of personal property as the Secretary of War, in his discretion, shall decide to be reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for such officer or soldier while in quarters, engaged in the public service, in the line of duty."

Mr. DOLPH. Now I think I understand the bill. In the first place it proposes to pay for the loss of all property of persons in the military service of the United States where the property was lost without the fault of the party losing the property. In the second place it proposes to pay for the loss of all property shipped on unseaworthy vessels by order of the Government. In the next place it proposes to pay for the loss of property of the claimant, notwithstanding he may be negligent himself, if his negligence arose from the fact that he was engaged at the time in saving Government property instead of saving his own. The very first provision there is that the United States invites claims for payment for all property lost while in the military service except in time of war and during hostilities, without the fault or negligence of the party losing the property. I think that is a very broad and very important measure to be brought up on the spur of the moment.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the bill passed and became a law. Its provisions are considered so extraordinary as to have been made a subject of discussion by the Secretary of War in his report under a distinct heading and have also been noticed by the President in his message. I ask the Secretary to read what the Secretary of War says about the bill in his annual report, which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Congress, in the act of March 3, 1885 (23 Statutes, page 350), enacted:

"That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to examine into, ascertain, and determine the value of the private property belonging to officers and enlisted men in the military service of the United States which has been, or may hereafter be, lost or destroyed in the military service, under the following circumstances:

"First. When such loss or destruction was without fault or negligence on the part of the claimant.

"Second. Where the private property so lost or destroyed was shipped on board an unseaworthy vessel by order of any officer authorized to give such order or direct such shipment.

"Third. Where it appears that the loss or destruction of the private property of the claimant was in consequence of his having given his attention to the saving of the property belonging to the United States which was in danger at the same time and under similar circumstances; and the amount of such loss so ascertained and determined shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and shall be in full for all such loss or damage: Provided, That any claim which shall be presented and acted on under authority of this act shall be held as finally determined, and shall never thereafter be reopened or considered: And provided further, That this act shall not apply to losses sustained in time of war or hostilities with Indians: And provided further, That the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to such articles of personal property as the Secretary of War, in his discretion, shall decide to be reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for such officer or soldier while in quarters, engaged in the public service, in the line of duty: And provided further, That all claims now existing shall be presented within two years, and not after, from the passage of this act; and all such claims hereafter arising be presented within two years from the occurrence of the loss or destruction."

This act proposes to compensate officers and enlisted men for personal property lost while they are on duty in the military service of the United States, in time of peace. While making an indefinite continuing appropriation for the payment of the claims, it establishes no limit to the amount of property to be paid for, except what the Secretary of War "shall decide to be reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for the officer or soldier while in quarters, engaged in the public service, in the line of duty." It extends to all claims of the character mentioned, without limitation of time, if presented within two years from its passage; and also applies to all claims hereafter arising, provided they are presented within two years from the date of loss.

The Government thus becomes the insurer of all the personal property of every officer and enlisted man in the Army while in the line of duty in time of peace which may be decided by the Secretary of War to be "reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper." Eighty claims have already been received at the War Department, amounting to about $60,000, and the scope of the act is indicated by an examination of their character. One, amounting to $2,311.50, is the claim of an officer high in rank for apparently the entire contents of his residence destroyed by the great conflagration in Chicago in 1871. An assistant surgeon makes a claim for property burned at Fort Keogh, Mont., in 1878, stated at $5,536 in value, one item being for "underwear and clothing of all kinds for a family of six. $1,834," and another for "two gold watches, chains, rings, and other jewelry, $572." Another claim for property lost in the same fire is for a "Saratoga trunk and contents, $258," and a "leather trunk and contents, $304.50."

The first item of the first claim presented is for an "envelope containing, in United States currency, $47.54," and a claim (stated at $6,178.50) for property destroyed at Memphis, Tenn., in 1867, embraces "family clothing and underwear, $1,500; gold and silver coin, $525; personal clothing, $605.50; paintings, engravings, and frames, $500." The widows of two officers have filed claims for property lost in 1849, stated at $1,000 and $136 respectively. When it is remembered that the Government must depend almost entirely upon the statement of the claimant, it is evident that an opportunity is afforded for the presentation of claims which may be greatly magnified beyond the actual loss. Attention is invited to the clause wherein the Secretary of War is directed to determine what articles are reasonable, useful, &c. This clause is capable of two constructions: (1) That the Secretary shall prepare a list of articles applicable to all cases; in other words, shall make a general and inflexible rule upon the subject; (2) that the Secretary shall determine in each case what articles lost or destroyed are reasonable, &c. The last would seem to be the more probable construction, and yet the method by which it is to be accomplished is both unusual and inconvenient, and may be inconclusive.

The mode of procedure in effecting a settlement of these claims differs from the well-established rules which govern the adjudication of other claims against the Government. Under the act and the rules prescribed by the accounting officers, claimants make up their claims and file them with the Third Auditor of the Treasury, who, after the receipt of evidence in support thereof, forwards the papers, without stating whether the claim is proved, to the Secretary of War for him to decide what articles are considered "necessary, useful, proper," &c. None of the claims have yet received the action required of the Secretary, but when one is acted upon by him it will go back to the Auditor to determine the value of the articles decided by the Secretary to be necessary, &c. The papers will then go to the Second Comptroller, who, not considering the proof in a given case sufficient to establish the loss, may reject the claim. It will thus be seen that the labor required of the Secretary of War may be a work of supererogation.

On the subject of compensation for property lost by officers and men in the military service of other countries, an examination has been made of the works found in the libraries of this city relating to such losses in the British, French, and German armies. In the British army there is an allowance granted to officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers to enable them to re-equip themselves after having incurred losses of property, either by the enemy, shipwreck, fire, or by the voluntary destruction of articles or horses, with the view of preventing the spread of infectious diseases. In all such cases a board of officers is required to establish the nature, extent, and cause of the loss, and to recommend the amount to be allowed within a scale from a maximum of £314 (light equipment in the field) and £373 (full equipment in garrison) for a general officer, to a minimum of £70 2s. and £97 2s., respectively, for assistant or veterinary surgeons of infantry. No compensation is given to officers for losses incurred while they are on leave of absence, except in the case of sick leave; and should an officer in proceeding to or returning from a station send his baggage by a vessel in which he does not himself proceed, and fail to insure it, should he have the opportunity of doing so, then any loss incurred by shipwreck or fire will not be made good by the public. The claims of non-commissioned officers or soldiers for the loss of clothing and necessaries are required to be established by a board of regimental officers, and compensation is given according to the actual value of the articles at the time of their loss. In the estimates for 1884 and 1885 £1,500 is asked to compensate officers and men for losses supposed to be those above mentioned, which is a very small amount for the objects enumerated.

In the French army there exists a fund known as "the general sustenance fund," being a certain sum allowed by the government to each regiment or other military organization, which is applied to commutation of officers' quarters, office expenses, commutation of rations, loss of private effects, or when horses or effects are taken by the enemy—open to officers of all grades.

In regard to the German army, there does not appear to be any legislation of this character.

In the provision made by Congress for payment of losses by officers and men of private property, under exceptional circumstances, on the steamer J. Don. Cameron, the property insured was wisely exempted from the benefits of the act. In the enactment under consideration there is no such restriction. It is doubted whether the act was intended to be of the comprehensive character its language imports, and the matter is submitted for such further action as Congress may deem proper.

Mr. DOLPH. The President of the United States in his annual message says:

The act approved March 3, 1885, designed to compensate officers and enlisted men for loss of private property while in the service of the United States, is so indefinite in its terms, and apparently admits so many claims the adjustment of which could not have been contemplated, that if it is to remain upon the statute-book it needs amendment.

Now, sir, re-enforced and confirmed in my opinion as to the unwise character of this enactment, I have introduced this bill for the repeal of the act.

The palpable objections to this act are:

First. That it makes an indefinite continuing appropriation for the payment of claims against the Government.

Second. That it authorizes the presentation, settlement, and payment of claims of the character mentioned which have arisen at any time since the formation of the Government.

Third. That it establishes no limit to the amount of property to be paid for, and does not sufficiently define the character of such property, but relegates these subjects to the judgment or caprice of the Secretary of War.

Fourth. It makes the Government an insurer of the personal property of every officer and enlisted man in the Army while in the line of duty in time of peace, which may be decided by the Secretary of War to be "reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper."

It prescribes a different mode of procedure for the settlement of such claims from the established rules which govern the adjudication of other claims against the Government.

As to the character of the claims to be paid under this act, the act appears to be without precedent in this country, and, so far as known, in foreign countries. It should be either repealed or greatly modified. I think it should be repealed; if not, it should be amended so as to provide for the payment of such property only as has been or shall be destroyed or lost not only without the fault or negligence of the claimant but by reason of the fault or negligence of the agents of the Government in the performance of their official duties, so as to limit its provisions to claims which have arisen within a comparatively recent period, say to the period of six years prior to the passage of the act, to such articles as are necessary for the use of the officer or soldier while on duty, which should be, as far as possible, described in the act, and to provide for a board of Army officers or other competent tribunal to pass upon such claims and report upon the nature, extent, and cause of the loss and recommend the amount to be paid.

The truth is, sir, that there is no Department of the Government, so far as I am informed, where the Government is liable for the mistakes, defaults, or negligences of its officers by which its citizens have incurred loss; and I think even if the act were amended as I have suggested it would still be unwise legislation. It would not be well even in favor of so meritorious a class as the officers and enlisted men of the Army to undertake to make the Government liable in every case for the negligence of the officers of the Government.

I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I hope the conscience of the distinguished Senator from Oregon is relieved of the weight of responsibility which rested upon him in entering his objections to this bill, particularly since the very lucid and elaborate explanation of the bill which has been made by the distinguished Secretary of War.

Mr. President, this bill is nothing new. It is simply an enunciation of a policy and principle which has guided the legislation of this country from the foundation of it down to this date. The Statutes at Large teem with bills passed in pursuance of the policy indicated in this law. Every committee of this body in the last ten years that has jurisdiction of such matters has reported favorably such bills. They have been reported favorably from the Committee on Claims; they have been reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs; and they have been reported favorably from the Committee on Naval Affairs; and they have passed; and this bill is as carefully guarded as any measure of the kind could be. If the War Department may not be able to determine what "articles of personal property" are "reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for such officer or soldier while in quarters, engaged in public service in the line of duty," it is certainly not the fault of Congress. It does seem to me that there ought to be some machinery in the War Department that could determine so plain a question as that—so plain that even he who runs may read and understand.

Our Government is not as liberal in this respect as other governments, and the very authority that the Secretary of War quotes shows that the English Government is much more liberal. This bill was passed by the House of Representatives and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate and was submitted to me as a subcommittee of that committee. It was reported back to the full committee, sanctioned by the full committee, reported to the Senate, passed, and became a law.

These questions are not new. As I stated when the bill was passed, I have personally been opposed to the principle of the Government being liable for any kind of loss of this character. Other members have been; but we yielded to the majority of the committee not only on claims but also on military affairs after we had discussed it and the committees had decided it. Then the committees followed that rule afterward. It was for the purpose of taking out of Congress the consideration of all these questions that the bill was passed. And how could Congress consider them? They would refer them to the Secretary of War and he would make a report to us and we would act upon that report. We thought that he could, with the machinery he had of inspectors and quartermasters and paymasters and commissaries and all those officers, ascertain the facts in the various cases, and that being at the head of the War Department he would be best competent to determine what articles of personal property were necessary and proper and suitable for the subordinates of his Department to have while in their quarters in public service in the line of duty—certainly as much so as a committee of Congress would be. If he has not the machinery to ascertain that fact, I suppose that Congress will have to assume the responsibility of it.

I confess, Mr. President, that, so far as I can see, the criticisms on the bill, both from the Senator and from the Secretary of War, are without any sufficient foundation.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, in what I said in opposition to this bill when it was passed, and in what I have now said, I meant no criticism or reflection upon the Senator from Missouri. I have great faith in his ability and his integrity, and I feel like commending him on all occasions for his zeal and watchfulness over the interests of the Government. I knew he did not introduce this bill; it originated in the House of Representatives. I do not say it was prepared by any member of the House; I think it was prepared by parties interested, and I will say here that I believe the bill is in the interest of an organized raid upon the Treasury of the United States and was intended as such by whoever drew it. It passed through the Senate without such consideration as it ought to have received. I did not believe the Senator from Missouri gave the bill such consideration as he usually gives to such matters, and I do not think so still. If anything would shake my confidence in his judgment of this matter, it would be the zeal he has now manifested in defending the bill.

The bill is wrong in principle. So far as I know there has never been, while I have been a member of the Committee on Claims, a report made in which the committee undertook to hold the Government liable for the fraud or the mistake or the negligence of the officers of the Government. Such a principle, if established in this Government, would be very disastrous. If in every department of the Government the United States should hold itself liable to any citizen for every injury occurring by reason of the wrongdoing or the negligence of public officers, no amount of taxation would be sufficient to keep the Treasury full. And, sir, I do not think there can be found upon the statute-books a single general law in which the Government has undertaken to pay such claims. If there have been private acts reported from the Committee on Military Affairs as suggested by the honorable Senator, in discussing this bill at the time it was passed I undertook to say that that practice was wrong, that the principle upon which those claims were paid was wrong. What reason is there why the Government should make itself an insurer of the personal property of all the officers and enlisted men in the Army, and if the Government is to make itself the insurer of the property of such officers and employés, why not of every officer and agent and employé of the Government in every department?

Then again the worst feature, probably, about this bill is that claims may be presented at any time within two years after its passage which originated at any period since the formation of the Government, and already claims have been presented for losses which are alleged to have been incurred in 1849, for the contents of trunks, for the contents of safes, for the contents of buildings—presented after the evidence which the Government might have obtained to show what the property was that was lost and the character and value of it has been lost to the Government, when no one has any particular interest in looking up testimony and defending the Government against such claims, claims that must be determined entirely on the ex parte statement of the claimant.

In examining a claim presented from the State of New York to the Committee on Claims, I had occasion to examine a somewhat similar bill to provide for the loss of property during actual hostilities and to comment upon it, and the remarks made by me in that report are applicable now to this feature of this bill which allows claims to be presented which are a hundred years old. I ask the Secretary to read what I reported at that time on that subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). If there be no objection, the matter sent up by the Senator will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

War claims have in the past been the subject of much fraud, even when audited while they were fresh and the witnesses to the transactions out of which they arose were living. As an example of such frauds your committee cite the case of certain claims closely connected with the one under consideration, presented for payment under the provisions of an act of Congress approved April 9, 1816, entitled "An act to authorize the payment for property lost, captured, or destroyed by the enemy while in the military service of the United States, and for other purposes." By that act provision was made for the payment to any volunteer or drafted militiaman, whether of cavalry, mounted riflemen, or infantry, who, in the war of 1812, sustained damage by the loss of any horse in battle, or for want of sufficient forage, and for the payment for the loss of any horse in consequence of the owner having been dismounted or separated from the same by order of the commanding officer, or in consequence of the rider having been killed or wounded in battle; and by the fourth section of said act it was provided, among other things, that any person who, in the war of 1812, had acted in the military service of the United States as a volunteer or drafted militiaman, and who furnished himself with arms and military accouterments, and has sustained damage by the capture or destruction of the same, without fault or negligence on his part, should be allowed and paid the value thereof. A commission was appointed to audit such claims.

On the 11th of March, 1818, a report was made to the House of Representatives by a committee thereof concerning claims presented under this act, in which it is said that the documents from the commissioners of claims "develop the fact that on the frontiers of New York a system of fraud, forgery, and perjury has been in operation which the committee believes has never been witnessed in this country. It may well be questioned whether in a national point of view it would not have been better that the law of April, 1816, had never been passed. It is the duty of a good government to attend to the morals of the people as an affair of primary concern."

Mr. DOLPH. I am prepared to discuss the provisions of this bill further; but I shield myself behind the opinion of the Chief Magistrate of the nation and the Secretary of War as to the character of this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I confess this is a somewhat singular way of discussing a bill that is already on the statute-book; but the remarks of the Senator from Oregon are so particularly severe, and assume to pass such sweeping judgment upon the Military Committee of the Senate, that I am compelled to say a word or two.

As the Senator from Missouri has said—and perhaps it is all that needed to be said—there is nothing new whatever in the principle of this bill. Congress has a thousand times over recognized the equity in this consideration, that when an officer is commanded by authority that he dares not resist, and does not dream of resisting, to put his personal property upon a certain ship or in a certain warehouse, while he goes off perhaps upon a raid—no matter what, upon whatever military duty he is ordered—and when that property shall be destroyed by no fault of his, simply while he is obeying orders, then he should be allowed a reasonable compensation, not for gold watches, and curtains, and carpets, and all sorts of things that some foolish people have presented a claim for, as the Secretary of War says; but whatever is reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for him in quarters in the line of duty, as the statute substantially prescribes already. It tells just how many coats and shirts and pairs of trousers, and boots, and socks a private soldier shall have; it prescribes uniforms for an officer, prescribes the sword and the pistol and the spurs and the cavalry boots; so that the claim in each individual case can not be a very large one. If an officer chooses to furnish his quarters luxuriously and stores that furniture in the warehouse while he goes off on duty, and that is destroyed, this statute excludes him from any claim whatever for that.

The principle of the bill is one that has been recognized; and the purpose of the bill was simply to save Congress from the everlasting consideration of little petty details in the shape of claims. I do not say that the bill is perfect. It is possible that it might be revised and some additional safeguards put into it; but the general purpose and principle of it is right, and I am astonished that any man capable of being a Cabinet officer should have felt himself embarrassed under the provisions of the bill when some foolish person asked to be paid for a gold watch.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, this is rather an extraordinary discussion on the whole, but after what has been said I think it proper to have a little more said.

There is no question what the intent of the bill is. There is also no question that it puts a very dangerous power in the hands of the Secretary of War. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL], who advocate the bill as they advocated the passage of special bills heretofore on the same subject, will admit, I have no doubt, that the Secretary of War can very readily by a little careless omission on his own part in passing upon claims submitted, which may have been the result of collusion among brother officers, commit the Treasury to very extraordinary payments. It is a power that ought not to be committed to any executive officer in a matter of this kind.

I dissent totally from the principle of the bill, as I have objected to similar bills that have been passed, and I do not think Congress has committed itself heretofore to the principle found in this bill. We pass Indian claims here occasionally, but Congress has never held that that committed it to the payment of every Indian claim. Whenever we have passed a bill (at least since I have been on this floor) for the payment of losses incurred by Army officers of this character, it has been stated that the case was a special one. While it is true, as the Senator from Connecticut says, that probably what a military man has may be the subject of regulation, I do not think it is quite as much in detail as he says it is; but still suppose an officer can only have certain pairs of pistols, a certain sword, a certain number of dress-coats, &c., I think the Senator has had familiarity enough with boards of survey to know that when a question of loss arises to be considered, the men who lose anything are always the men who had a full supply. I never knew a man to be employed in the Army who was necessarily called on to account for the loss of property, where that man did not happen to be equipped with everything from a watering pail to a picket-pin that he was entitled by law to have, though not one man in a thousand ever had them fifteen minutes after they were drawn.

This bill is as vicious, I think, as a bill of that kind, well intended as it was, could possibly be. I hope it will be repealed, but I have no expectation that it will be.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply want to call attention to some precedents in this case and to a bill that was once passed couched in the exact language of this bill, sent to the Secretary of War for him to determine the amount that should be paid, and it was determined and he never complained of the looseness of the language. A bill of this kind was passed:

That the Secretary of war is hereby authorized and required to ascertain the value of the property lost by First Lieut. Frank P. Gross, U. S. A., by the burning of his quarters at Fort Clark, Tex., on or about the 19th day of April, 1869, without fault or neglect on his part, and the amount so ascertained is hereby appropriated for that purpose: Provided, That no allowance be made for any property except what was useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer whilst in quarters, engaged in the public service, or exceeding in amount the sum of $2,000.

That was passed and became a law. The Secretary of War adjudicated the claim and paid it. There was no complaint that the law was so loose that the Department did not know what to do under it. Sundry other bills of that kind have passed. We put in an amendment, which became a part of this law, using the exact language which we had used before in many cases conferring on the Secretary of War authority to adjudicate and pay.

Now as to the precedents. I have before me a few of them selected from different administrations, and I ask to have read from a report made by me the part I have marked. That will show what was done under the administration of Andrew Jackson and other illustrious successors of his.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Your committee gave due consideration to this case and made as thorough examination as time and opportunities would afford as to the policy and precedents of the Government in similar cases. Your committee find that by "An act for the relief of sundry persons in the service of the United States in consequence of the destruction of their tools by fire at the navy-yard, approved March 3, 1815" (6 Statutes at Large, page 155), a sum not to exceed $5,000 was appropriated to pay "all claims for losses that have been sustained by artificers, mechanics, and other workmen in the employ or service of the United States for tools and other articles essential to and connected with their trade and occupation which have been destroyed by fire in consequence of burning the buildings of the navy-yard in the city of Washington;" and that by "An act for the relief of John Crosby and John Crosby, jr., approved April 26, 1816" (6 Statutes at Large, pages 167 and 168), "the proper accounting officers of the Navy Department were directed to settle the claim of John Crosby and John Crosby, jr., on account of the destruction by fire of their store-house, goods, and wharf in the town of Hampden, in the State of Massachusetts, and to allow them in settlement thereof the value of said property destroyed as aforesaid."

Your committee further find that the following acts were passed by Congress in 1832, to wit:

An act for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of Edward Barry, deceased.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there be paid to the heirs and legal representatives of Edward Barry, late a sailing-master in the Navy of the United States, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $568.35, in full compensation for the property of the said Edward Barry, destroyed in the conflagration of the navy-yard at Washington, in the year 1814.

Approved July 14, 1832.

(Volume 6, Statutes at Large, private bills, page 520.)

An act for the relief of the officers and soldiers of Fort Delaware.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Second Auditor of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to ascertain the amount of property lost by each officer and soldier in the conflagration which occurred at Fort Delaware on the night of the 8th of February, 1831; and the amount so ascertained shall be paid out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Approved July 14, 1832.

(Volume 6, United States Statutes at Large, private laws, page 512.)

And by "An act for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of John Rose, sr., deceased, approved June 30, 1834" (6 Statutes at Large, page 594), a sum not to exceed $2,500 was appropriated, to be paid for "the actual value of the property of John Rose, sr., late in the employ of the United States, as a machinist, at the navy-yard at Washington, but now deceased, which was destroyed by fire by the burning of said navy-yard in the year 1814." And that by

An act for the relief of the United States troops who were sufferers by the recent disaster to the steamship San Francisco.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled, That there shall be paid, under the direction of the President, to each of the officers, non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, who, on the 21st day of December, 1853, embarked at New York, under orders for California, on the steamship San Francisco, and who was on board that vessel on the occasion of her recent disaster at sea, and to Lieut. Francis Key Murray, and other officer or seaman of the United States Navy who was on board the said steamship, under orders, a sum equal in amount to his pay and allowances for eight months.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That if any such officer, non-commissioned officer, musician, or private shall have died before receiving such payment from any cause consequent upon said disaster, his widow, if one survive him, and, if not, then his minor children, if any there be, shall be paid a sum equal in amount to six months' pay and allowances of the deceased. And that the widows and minor children of those officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates who perished by this disaster, or who died from disease in consequence thereof, shall be allowed pensions in the same manner in all respects as if the said officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates had been killed in battle. (10 Stat., 269).

Approved March 27, 1854.

An act for the relief of certain officers of the Third United States Artillery, who suffered by fire at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, on the 3d of March, 1875.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of Treasury of the United States be, and are hereby, authorized to settle with the first lieutenants of the Third United States Artillery who lost their personal effects by fire at Fort Hamilton, New York Harbor, on the 3d of March, 1875, at a sum not to exceed $600 each, and a sufficient sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Approved January 30, 1877.

An act for the relief of the sufferers by the wreck of the United States steamer Huron, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That to reimburse the survivors of the officers and crew of the United States steamer Huron, wrecked off the coast of North Carolina on the morning of the 24th of November, 1877, for the losses incurred by them respectively in said wreck, there shall be paid, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, the following sums, to wit:

To William P. Conway, master, $1,000.

To Lucien Young, ensign, $1,000.

To Robert G. Denig, assistant engineer, $1,000.

To Edgar T. Warburton, cadet-engineer, $1,000; and the following-named survivors of the crew of said vessel, to wit: Patrick Kane, Michael Trainor, Joseph Murphy, William McHugh, Michael Kennedy, Frank Watts, Peter Duffy, Frederick Hoffman, William L. Houseman, Robert Sampson, Michael Durkin, Dominique O'Donnell, August Lindgrist, Daniel Devoy, J. J. Robertson, Dennis Deasy, Samuel Clark, John E. Holland, John Collins, W. W. Brooks, Harry W. Avery, Daniel Burgan, Frank May, Harry Nelson, Thomas Price, Antoine Williams, Joseph Haynes, Thomas Carley, E. P. Trainer, Edward Aaronburg, $100 each.

With this long list of precedents, your committee does not feel willing to make Lieutenant Gross an exception. Your committee holds that no allowance should be made for any property not necessary and proper for Lieutenant Gross while in the service in the line of duty; and not being able to determine from the evidence what articles claimed and destroyed were useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while in the public service, or the exact value thereof, your committee recommend a substitute by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the following, to wit: "That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and required to ascertain the value of the property lost by First Lieut. Frank P. Gross, U. S. A., by the burning of his quarters at Fort Clark, Tex., on or about the 19th day of April, 1869, without fault or neglect on his part, and the amount so ascertained is hereby appropriated for that purpose: Provided, That no allowance be made for any property except what was useful, necessary, and proper for such an officer while in quarters, engaged in the public service, or exceeding in amount the sum of $2,000."

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I desire to say but a word in relation to this proposition.

I desire first to state that, as is well known by the Committee on Military Affairs, on which I served for a number of years, I have never willingly acceded to the proposition that the Government of the United States should become an insurance office in order to become responsible for the loss of property. This bill, however, was passed after due consideration by the committee, as I remember it, for the reason that at every session of Congress bills were passed allowing compensation to officers and men of the Army for the loss of property. I am very much surprised, sir, at the report of the Secretary of War. Doubtless he is an able man, an able jurist, and occupying the position he does should be well versed in military affairs, and I presume he has so become; but if any Senator will read this act carefully I do not believe he can come to the same conclusion the Secretary of War has arrived at.

In the first place, if I were required to construe this law I would try to do it in about this way: I would first examine the statutes and ascertain what a soldier is allowed, how many suits of clothes he is entitled to during one year, with necessary bedding, &c., their value, &c., and then if he had an excess beyond that amount unnecessary for him as a soldier, that the Government would not be liable for such excess should loss occur as pointed out by the law. If the loss was occasioned not by laches on his part but by negligence on the part of the Government or its agents, he would then be entitled to compensation for that loss. If he had accumulated a number of articles not recognized by law, not recognized by the regulations of the Army as being those which the Government supplied to him as a soldier, I would say that he was not entitled to compensation for them; and this law bears that simple, plain construction. Why the Secretary of War shall say that it is impossible to construe this law when by law the articles that shall be issued to the soldier, and named—for those articles he is certainly entitled to pay if lost in the manner stated in the act—I can not understand.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to ask the Senator a question if he will permit me.

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. Does not the first clause of that bill, which is separately numbered, authorize and direct the payment for property lost or destroyed where the Government is not in fault? For instance, a claim was presented by a certain high officer for the loss of his household effects which were burned during the great fire in Chicago for which the Government was not at all responsible. Is not that clause broad enough to authorize and direct payment for the loss of property under any circumstances where the officer or enlisted man who owned the property was not in fault?

Mr. LOGAN. In case of a fire where the Government might not be in fault or the officer in fault, where the loss was not on account of any negligence on the part of the officer, he might be entitled to compensation, where the Secretary, weighing the matter fairly, could see that his claim was equitable and just; not entitled to compensation, however, for a large amount of household furniture; and there is where the Secretary of War is in error. The officer losing his property by reason of a fire would not be entitled to receive compensation for property lost that was not necessary to and for his use as an officer but only as a householder and head of a family. Does the Secretary of War mean that because a claim has been presented here for the underwear of a family of six, therefore the Secretary of War is bound to allow a claim of that kind when the material was not necessary to the claimant as an officer? The law applies to him as an officer and applies to the soldier as a soldier and in no other respect.

That which is necessary to him by way of clothing and equipment as an officer he is entitled to, and entitled to receive compensation for; but suppose he has accumulated a large number of articles that are not necessary to him for use as a military man, accumulated for his comfort and convenience, can any one construe this law to mean that the Government should be responsible and bound to pay for articles of that kind? Will the Senator from Oregon say that a claim for two watches should be allowed? Will any Secretary of War or any reasonable man construe the law to mean that two watches are necessary for an officer when one watch is sufficient for any other man?

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. LOGAN. Certainly.

Mr. DOLPH. The provision as to the character of the property to be paid for is too indefinite, too uncertain. It vests too much, as I have before stated, in the judgment or the caprice of the Secretary of War. One fault that I find with this legislation is that the first subdivision provides for payment for property "when such loss or destruction was without fault or negligence on the part of the claimant," independent of the question as to whether the Government was at all at fault. Therefore under the provisions of this act the claim which has been presented for the loss of household furniture by an officer of the Army stationed at Chicago during the great fire comes within this clause. What shall be allowed, I grant, is to be determined by the Secretary of War, but by him alone, according, as I said before, to his judgment or caprice. That provision is too indefinite, if the law shall stand at all.

Mr. LOGAN. Now let the Senator listen to the reading of the law in that particular, and let us see if we can not arrive at the same conclusion in reference to its proper construction. The section, after going on and enumerating how the value of the articles shall be determined by the Secretary of War, provides—

That the liability of the Government under this act shall be limited to—

To what?

To such articles of personal property as the Secretary of War in his discretion shall decide to be reasonable, useful, necessary, and proper for such officer or soldier.

What is reasonable, useful, and necessary for an officer or a soldier? The Secretary of War ought to be competent to determine that matter, and if he is not he lacks in that competency which ought to pertain to his position. Now, sir, what is reasonable, useful, and proper for a soldier are his clothing and his bedding and such articles as are allowed and furnished him by the Government which are charged against him. If he loses those things which pertain to him as a soldier, which are charged to him by the Government, then he is entitled to compensation for them if he loses them under any of the circumstances mentioned in this law. If he has accumulated half a dozen suits of clothes, he is not entitled under the law to compensation for their loss, but he is only entitled to compensation for what is "necessary, useful, and proper."

What is necessary for an officer? He may be entitled to a horse or horses and to the equipments for the animals, and entitled to his sword, which, however, he purchases himself; he is entitled to his uniform, but he purchases it himself. He is entitled to his bedding. He is entitled to a box or trunk or mess-chest, or whatever is necessary to carry those things in time of war or to retain them in time of peace. But will any man say that because a person is a commissioned officer the Secretary of War is to extend his generosity so much as to allow bedding and clothing for six of a family and say all that is necessary for an officer? That may be necessary to his family, but is not to him as an officer. That which is necessary to him as an officer is that which is allowable and that which is provided for—the equipment, the accouterment, and the paraphernalia that belong to an officer—nothing more.

To say that this law can not be fairly construed and that it is subject to different constructions and that it can not be determined how much property an officer or soldier shall be allowed, is a conclusion that I should dislike to arrive at were I Secretary of War. He speaks of claims having been presented for two gold watches, chains, rings, and other jewelry, and he can not determine whether an officer is entitled to watches, rings, chains, and jewelry as an officer of the Army! It seems to me that this could be determined by a man of learning in this line without being a secretary of war. I have never heard stores proper for an officer denominated in this way before. It seems to me that he could readily determine that an officer is not entitled to an allowance for chains, rings, and jewelry, as an officer of the Army. He is entitled to them for himself if he purchases them, but the Government is not responsible for them or their loss, as they are not necessary to an officer or soldier.

The simplest mode of construing statutes, in my judgment, would give to this act a definite meaning and understanding, without bothering Congress or the President of the United States on the subject. Although, as is well known to the Committee on Military Affairs, I have heretofore opposed, while serving on that committee, this proposition, yet when a law has been passed and it comes to a mere question of construction, I say there should be no doubt in the Secretary's mind as to the proper construction of this statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to refer this bill to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Several messages of an executive character were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-six minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 2 o'clock and 36 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

RULES OF THE THIRTY-SIXTH AND FORTY-SIXTH CONGRESSES.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I offer for present consideration the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the compilation of the revisions of the rules of the House in the Thirty-sixth and Forty-sixth Congresses prepared by the Journal Clerk be printed under his direction for the use of the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think that that publication may be of use in the discussion of the rules. I understand it can be printed and laid before the House by Tuesday morning next.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman from Maine propose to have this compilation printed before the rules are passed upon?

Mr. REED, of Maine. Yes; before the rules are passed upon.

Mr. CANNON. What number of copies does he propose to have printed?

Mr. REED, of Maine. The usual number. This is simply a compilation of the changes made in the rules in the Thirty-sixth and Forty-sixth Congresses.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Maine will state the reason for this, or the purpose in view.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The purpose is to enable members more thoroughly to comprehend the proposed revision of the rules after the report of the Committee on Rules shall have been made.

Mr. HOLMAN. We have, of course, the rules of the Forty-sixth Congress before us; but if the gentleman from Maine thinks it is important to have this compilation printed I will, of course, make no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. REED, of Maine, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. BUCK. I desire to present a letter from the governor of Connecticut, transmitting resolutions of the General Assembly of that State relative to the ascertainment and counting of the electoral vote, and move that it be laid on the table and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MORRISON. I object to printing in the RECORD.

Mr. BUCK. These are resolutions of the Legislature of Connecticut relative to the counting of the electoral vote.

Mr. MORRISON. I have no objection to the resolutions being laid on the table and going to a committee when appointed. But I must at the outset object to printing everything in the RECORD.

Mr. BUCK. I ask to have the letter and resolutions read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks to have the resolutions read. The gentleman has that right.

The letter and accompanying resolutions were read, and were laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is understood that the Committee on Rules are not yet prepared to report to the House. It is important that this committee should have proper time for deliberation, and it is manifest that the House can not proceed with any advantage until action shall be taken in regard to the rules. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned till Monday next.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 14, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the governor of Connecticut, transmitting a certified copy of a resolution of the General Assembly of Connecticut; which was read, as follows:

STATE OF CONNECTICUT.
General Assembly, January session, A. D. 1885.

Resolution concerning the election of President.

Resolved by this Assembly in the name and behalf of the State, That Congress is hereby respectfully but earnestly requested to enact, without unnecessary delay, some suitable law regulating the ascertainment and counting of the votes of Presidential electors.

That the governor is hereby requested to transmit to the presiding officer of each House of Congress a duly certified copy of this resolution for presentation to the House over which such officer presides; and that the governor is also requested to send a like copy hereof to the governor of each of the States of the Union.

STATE OF CONNECTICUT,
Office of Secretary of State, ss:

I, Charles A. Russell, secretary of the State of Connecticut and keeper of the seal thereof and of the original record of the acts and resolutions of the General Assembly of said State, do hereby certify that I have compared the annexed copy of the resolution concerning the election of President with the original records of the same now remaining in this office, and have found the said copy to be a correct transcript thereof, and of the whole of said original.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said State, at Hartford, this 22d day of August, 1885.

[SEAL.] CHARLES A. RUSSELL,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I have been requested by the governor of Connecticut to commend this resolution and the subject to which it relates to the earnest and immediate consideration of the Senate. In view of the fact that since I have been a member of the Senate three bills having reference to the ascertainment and counting of the vote for Presidential electors have been passed by this body, it can not be necessary to urge upon the body the necessity of doing so. I merely speak of it to show that the State which I have the honor in part to represent is very much interested in this subject.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I think the failure of this measure in the last Congress, if I may be permitted to say a word, was in some sense due to the State which my friend has the honor in part to represent, and that that State should understand it. The Senate passed a bill which it had three times passed. That bill was referred in the House of Representatives—the last House, not the present. It is a matter of history of which I have a right to speak. They differed with the Senate in some matters of detail. Thereupon a committee of conference in the usual form was appointed at the session before the last, and that committee of conference failed to agree. I believed, on such information as I had, that on the reporting of that failure the House would promptly recede from its action and agree with the Senate. I was informed by very many members of the House who knew its opinion that it would recede from its action and agree with the Senate. But the chairman of the committee of conference on the part of the House, a distinguished Representative from the State of Connecticut, failed to report the action of the committee, the Congress expired, and no report whatever was made to the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. According to the parliamentary form the report had to be made first in the other House.

Mr. HOAR. The parliamentary rule required that the report should be made first there. Thereupon the chairman of the committee on the part of the Senate, I having the honor to occupy that position, reported to the Senate late in the session the difficulty and informed the Senate of the fact. My impression is that a message was sent to the House informing them of what the Senate had done, that the report had been made here contrary to the usual form. But however that may be—I may be in error in that recollection; that is entirely unimportant—the substantial fact remained that the opportunity that the House or the Senate either might recede from its position and agree upon the bill passed by, in consequence of the fact that no report to the House of Representatives was made by the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut, who then occupied the position of chairman of the committee of conference on the part of the other House.

Mr. PLATT. All that the Senator has stated, which I believe to be accurately stated, scarcely justifies him in saying that the responsibility for the failure of that bill is upon the State of Connecticut, which was the statement with which he prefaced his remarks. I suppose it is known to all the members of the Senate that a Representative from one of the districts of the State of Connecticut, who was formerly a member of this body, entertains different views as to the bill which should be passed upon this subject; but his action is not the action of the State; and it is very possible that the knowledge of that action in the State may be a reason for the governor's desiring that emphasis be given to this resolution of the General Assembly of Connecticut.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and ordered to be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from the State executive committee of Dakota; which was read, as follows:

OFFICE OF STATE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE,
Yankton, Dak., December 7, 1885.

To the honorable President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States,
Washington, D. C.:

SIR: We, the State executive committee of the State of Dakota, on this behalf appointed by a constitutional convention of that part of the Territory of Dakota south of the forty-sixth parallel of latitude, have the honor to herewith transmit to you a certified copy of the constitution of the State of Dakota, and of a memorial from the constitutional convention to the President and Congress of the United States.

We have also forwarded through the hands of Hon. BENJAMIN HARRISON, United States Senator, an engrossed and certified copy of the constitution for presentation to the Senate through the President thereof.

I am instructed on behalf of the constitutional convention of Dakota to request you to have the said memorial and constitution duly presented to the Senate of the United States for their consideration, and that the same be referred to the proper committee and acted upon as the application of said convention for and on behalf of the people of said State for the admission of the State into the Union.

Yours respectfully,

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,
President State Executive Committee.
JOSEPH R. HANSON,
E. P. BEEBE,
A. J. SIMMONS,
JOHN CAIN,
JAMES A. WARE,
STEPHEN G. UPDYKE,
Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This communication, together with the accompanying papers, will be printed and referred to the Committee on Territories, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. In that connection, I may be allowed to say that I have been only awaiting the presentation of this memorial in order to bring in a bill for the admission of Dakota. I will do so at an early day.

The Committee on Territories will consider what portion of the documents submitted in connection with the proceedings of the people of that Territory it will be necessary to print. We ask no present order on that subject; but after the committee have considered the documents we shall report them to the Senate with the request that such of them as shall be deemed necessary be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be withheld.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of Sarah J. Foy, widow of A. B. Foy, late private Company G, Second Regiment Vermont Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of claimants in the Court of Alabama Claims, praying for the enactment of a law to set aside certain judgments of that court; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of the Maumee Valley Monumental Association of Ohio, praying for an appropriation of not less than $50,000 to assist in acquiring lands and erecting monuments on the battlefields of Fallen Timber, Fort Meigs, Fort Miami, Fort Defiance, Fort Wayne, and Fort Industry; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. COLQUITT presented the petition of John S. E. J. Crawford, of Jefferson County, Georgia, praying to have his claim for supplies furnished the Government referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of William Fitch, of the District of Columbia, praying the reference of certain claims for timber used by the Army to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of Ann Smith, of Boston, Mass., widow of Levi Smith, late private Company A, Massachusetts Third Heavy Artillery, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of citizens of Washington, D. C., praying for the incorporation of the North Washington Cable Railway Company; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALTHALL presented the petition of Mrs. Rebecca T. Bowen, of De Soto County, Mississippi, praying to have her claim for supplies furnished to the Government referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, presented the petition of James A. Brown, of Saline County, Arkansas, praying to have his claim for supplies furnished the Army referred to the Court of Claims under the provisions of the Bowman act; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. JACKSON presented the petition of Penelope V. Rudd, of Dresden, Tenn., widow of James A. Moore, praying that the charge of desertion against her late husband may be removed; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of the heirs of John F. Shorter, late lieutenant Fifty-fifth Regiment Massachusetts Infantry, praying to be allowed pay for his services from March 24, 1864, to July 1, 1865; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented additional papers to accompany the petition of Eugene Dickinson, of Elliott, Iowa, praying compensation for certain information furnished the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL presented the petition of Daniel A. Whitesell, of Washington, D. C., late sergeant Battery C, Fifth United States Artillery, praying to be allowed an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, praying for the suspension of the coinage of the silver dollar; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DOLPH presented the petition of George Brown, of Virginia, praying compensation for property taken by the United States Army in 1862; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. COKE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the following bills, asked to be discharged from their further consideration and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. 326) conferring authority upon the Court of Claims to review the case of Charles H. Adams vs. The United States;

A bill (S. 277) for the relief of Samuel P. Evans; and

A bill (S. 304) to compensate physicians for services rendered under an order of the United States court of the northern district of Alabama.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to report back a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting papers in relation to the purchase of what is known as the Old Produce Exchange Building in the city of New York and its conversion into an army building. The communication, with the accompanying maps, was referred to the committee that they might consider the advisability of printing the maps attached. The committee instruct me to report adversely to the printing of such maps.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President, reported a bill (S. 471) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I give notice that to-morrow, at the conclusion of the morning business, I shall call up the bill just reported for the consideration of the Senate and ask its passage.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether one objection will carry the bill over. I do not understand the rules very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. An objection will not carry it over to-morrow, but it will require a majority to take it up.

Mr. HOAR. I will state that although this is in the form of a new bill, it is in substance the bill which was reported last year by the committee. There are some verbal changes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say that I have hoped that a measure of some kind regulating the count and the declaration of the result of the count of the votes for President and Vice-President might have been incorporated in this measure, as the two subjects belong together and are parts of one and the same systematic course of procedure; and I wish to ask my friend from Massachusetts if he will give his notice for one day later, inasmuch as I wish to consider the propriety of bringing the Presidential count bill, that has three times passed the Senate without party votes and by very large majorities, to the attention of the Senate as an amendment to this bill, so that the whole scheme may be brought to the attention of the co-ordinate branch of the legislative power of this country, and so that under the peculiar rules of that body one may not be entirely lost sight of while the other may possibly go through. I ask my friend, therefore, if he can not consistently postpone his notice for one day longer.

Mr. HOAR. I will do what I suppose will be quite as agreeable to the Senator from Vermont and accomplish his purpose. I may like to submit a few remarks to the Senate in presenting the bill; they will be very brief, and perhaps it will not be necessary to submit any; but before asking any vote upon the bill which would advance it at all I shall consent, after it is taken up to-morrow, that it go over one day for the purpose the Senator indicates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. HOAR. Let the bill go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 191) to establish an international copyright, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Patents; which was agreed to.

JOINT RULES FOR THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Rules to report back a concurrent resolution in relation to the joint rules of the two Houses of Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. I give notice that I shall call it up to-morrow for consideration.

TEHUANTEPEC SHIP-RAILWAY.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if not inconsistent, in his opinion, with the public interests, to communicate to the Senate any report of an actual instrumental survey of a line for a ship-railroad across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, and any map of the same that has been made to, or placed on file in, any of the Executive Departments, and of any canal or canals designed to connect such ship-railway with the Gulf of Mexico or the Pacific Ocean.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. ALLISON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That until the expiration of the Forty-ninth Congress the Committee on Appropriations shall consist of ten members, and that the additional member be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The occupant of the chair asks the consent of the Senate to be relieved from further service on the Committee on the Library and the Committee on Privileges and Elections. If there be no objection this request will be granted.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to be relieved from further service as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks to be relieved from further service as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. That request will be granted if there be no objection.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask to be relieved from further duty upon the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks to be relieved from further service upon the Committee on Military Affairs. That request will be granted if there be no objection. How shall the vacancies made by the requests granted be filled?

Mr. CAMERON. I move that they be filled by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that will be considered as the order of the Senate. The Chair appoints the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] as chairman of the Committee on the Library, and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and as a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CAMERON. I suggest that the Chair now appoint the additional member added to the Committee on Appropriations by the resolution of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] as the additional member of the Committee on Appropriations.

REPORT ON INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. CULLOM. During the special session of the Senate last spring a select committee on interstate commerce was created by this body with instructions to investigate during the recess and report by the second Monday of this session. The committee is not quite ready to report, and I ask that the time be extended until the 22d of this month, with the privilege of reporting at any time between now and then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that request is granted.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. CALL. At the last sitting of the Senate I introduced a bill (S. 467) providing for the auditing and payment of claims of soldiers who served in the several Indian wars in Florida, and had it referred to the Committee on Pensions. I move that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask a change of the reference of the bill (S. 419) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer the United States barracks at Baton Rouge, La., to the Louisiana State University and Agricultural and Mechanical College, at said place, for educational purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. I find that that reference is wrong, and I move that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further resolutions the Calendar is now in order. [A pause.] The Chair is advised that there is no business upon the Calendar of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. INGALLS and others. Let us have an executive session.

Mr. HOAR. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and seventeen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

A. M. KEILEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. VEST, ordered to lie on the table, and, with the accompanying papers, be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolution of the Senate of the 9th instant, calling for the correspondence on file in relation to the appointment of Mr. A. M. Keiley as envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, first to the Government of Italy, and then to that of Austria-Hungary, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 14, 1885.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. LOGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the United States Senate, That the Committee on Military Affairs be increased to ten, instead of nine, during the Forty-ninth Congress, and that the President pro tempore of the Senate appoint the additional member of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will name as an additional member of the Committee on Military Affairs the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. BROWN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 14, 1885.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

Mr. J. A. LOUTITT, of California, appeared, and was duly qualified by taking the oath prescribed by law.

AWARDS IN LIEU OF MOIETIES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of awards of compensation in lieu of moieties to informers and officers in customs, fines, and forfeitures, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

REFUNDS OF CUSTOMS DUTIES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of refunds of customs duties for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

RULES.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rules, to which were referred several propositions in relation to the adoption of rules for the government of the House, direct me to submit a report thereon. I ask that it be printed and laid upon the table.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that that report be printed also in the RECORD, as we shall probably get it in that form more promptly than in the other.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a statement of the views of the minority of the Committee on Rules, and ask that it also be printed in connection with the report of the committee.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MORRISON, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Rules, to which were referred certain resolutions for the adoption of the rules of the last House, with amendments, having had the same under consideration, submit the following resolution and accompanying report:

[NOTE.—The amendments proposed are to omit the words in brackets and insert the words printed in italics.]

Resolved, That the rules of the House of Representatives in force at the close of the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress be the rules of the House of Representatives of the Forty-ninth Congress, with the following amendments, viz:

RULE I.

Amend clause 3, Rule I, as follows:

3. He shall have general control, except as provided by rule or law, of the Hall of the House, and [the disposal of] of the corridors and passages and the unappropriated rooms in that part of the Capitol assigned to the use of the House until further order.

Amend Rule X as follows:

42. On public buildings: to the Committee on Expenditures on Public Buildings;

43. All proposed action touching the rules and joint rules shall be referred to the Committee on Rules;

44. Touching the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House, the auditing and settling of all accounts which may be charged therein by order of the House: to the Committee on Accounts;

45. The ascertainment of the travel of members of the House shall be made by the Committee on Mileage and reported to the Sergeant-at-Arms;

46. Touching the Library of Congress, statuary, and pictures: to the Joint Committee on the Library;

47. All proposed legislation or orders touching printing shall be referred to the Joint Committee on Printing on the part of the House;

48. The enrollment of engrossed bills: to the Joint Committee on Enrolled Bills;

49. The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, viz: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors; the Committee on Enrolled Bills, enrolled bills; the Committee on Printing, on all matters referred to them of printing for the use of the House or two Houses; and the Committee on Accounts, on all matters of expenditure of the contingent fund of the House.

50. No committee shall sit during the sitting of the House without special leave.

RULE XXI.

Amend clause 3, Rule XXI, as follows:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government. [Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.]

Amend clause 5, Rule XXI, as follows:

5. All bills for improvement of rivers and harbors, and for the establishment or change of post-routes, shall be delivered to the Clerk, as in the case of petitions and memorials, for reference to appropriate committees.

Amend Rule XXI by inserting the following as clause 6:

No bill for the payment or adjudication of any private claim against the Government shall be referred, except by unanimous consent, to any other than the following-named committees, viz: To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Pensions, to the Committee on Claims, to the Committee on War Claims, to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and to the Committee on Accounts.

RULE XXIII.

Amend clause 4, Rule XXIII, as follows:

4. In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to [the consideration of] passing over any bill or proposition the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present, whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

Amend Rule XXIV as follows:

RULE XXIV.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

1. Each Monday morning during a session of Congress, immediately after the Journal of the proceedings of the last day's sitting has been read and approved, the Speaker shall call all the States and Territories in alphabetical order for bills and [joint resolutions] resolutions for printing and reference without debate, on which call joint and concurrent resolutions and memorials of State and Territorial Legislatures may be presented and appropriately referred, and on this call only resolutions of inquiry directed to the heads of the Executive Departments shall be in order for reference to appropriate committees, which resolutions shall be reported to the House within one week thereafter.

2. After the Journal is read and approved each day, the Speaker shall lay before the House, for reference, messages from the President, reports and communications from the heads of Departments, and other communications addressed to the House, and also such bills, resolutions, and other messages from the Senate as may have been received on the previous day.

[2] 3. On all days other than Monday, as soon as the [Journal is read and approved] business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of, and on all Mondays (except the first and third in each month) after the call of States and Territories, there shall be a morning hour for reports from committees, which shall be appropriately referred and printed and a copy thereof mailed by the Public Printer to each Member and Delegate; and the Speaker shall call upon each standing committee in regular order and then upon the select committees; and if the whole of the hour is not consumed by this call, then it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of other business as hereafter provided; but if he shall not complete the call within the hour, he shall resume it in the succeeding morning hour where he left off.

[3] 4. The morning hour for the call of committees shall not be dispensed with except by a vote of two-thirds of those present voting thereon.

5. After the morning hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees (or the call completed), the Speaker shall again call the committees in regular order for one hour, upon which call each committee, on being named, shall have the right to call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day on either the House or Union Calendar. And whenever any committee shall have occupied the said hour for one day, it shall not be in order for such committee to designate any other proposition for consideration until all the other committees shall have been called in their turn; and when any proposition shall have occupied two hours on this call it shall thereafter remain on the Calendar as unfinished business and be taken up in its order: Provided, That when the hour herein prescribed shall expire while the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is considering a bill the said committee shall rise without motion therefor.

6. After the hour under the preceding clause shall have been occupied, it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at an adjournment, and at the same time each day thereafter, other than the first and third Mondays, until disposed of; and it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

Strike out clauses 4, 5, and 6 of Rule XXIV and insert in lieu thereof the following as new clauses, numbered, respectively, 5, 6, and 7:

7. Unfinished business, if any, having been disposed of, motions shall be in order as follows:

First. That the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider, first, bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other business on its Calendar.

Second. To proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar.

Third. On Friday of each week, after the morning hour, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and, if this motion fail, then public business shall be in order as on other days.

Amend Rule XXVI as follows:

RULE XXVI.

Friday in every week shall be set apart for the consideration of private business, unless otherwise determined [by a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting] by the House.

REPORT.

RULE I.

The committee recommends the amendment of clause 3, Rule I, by striking out the words "the disposal of" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "of the corridors and passages and;" so that it will read as follows, namely:

3. He shall have general control, except as provided by rule or law, of the Hall of the House, and of the corridors and passages and the unappropriated rooms in that part of the Capitol assigned to the use of the House until further order.

Under clause 3 of Rule I of the last House the Speaker was given general control of the Hall of the House and unappropriated rooms, but neither he nor any officer of the House was given any control or supervision over the corridors or passages.

Before the revision of the rules in the Forty-sixth Congress he possessed this authority, and the committee is of opinion that it should be restored to him, and to that end recommend the foregoing amendment.

RULE X.

The next rule of the last House which is proposed by the committee to be amended is Rule X, creating or designating the standing committees of the House for the present Congress.

It is proposed to amend Rule X by increasing the following-named committees, viz:

Coinage, Weights, and Measures, Naval Affairs, Public Lands, Indian Affairs, Railways and Canals, Mines and Mining, Pacific Railroads, Levees and Improvement of the Mississippi River, Education, Labor, Militia, Patents, Pensions, War Claims, Private Land Claims, and Revision of the Laws, from eleven to thirteen members each, the Committee on Labor being increased from seven to thirteen members.

The committee was of opinion, in view of other changes proposed, especially that distributing certain of the general appropriation bills among committees having jurisdiction of their subject-matter, and those changing the order of business, as prescribed by Rule XXIV, by which there might be a daily call of committees, if the House so desired, for the consideration of business theretofore reported by committees which might be on either the House or Union Calendar, that certain committees should be increased so as to correspond with their increased importance, and others for the purpose of securing greater uniformity of committee membership.

RULE XI.

Rule XI is proposed to be amended by transferring certain of the general appropriation bills from the custody and control of the Committee on Appropriations to the following-named committees, viz:

The consular and diplomatic bill to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; the Army and Military Academy bills to the Committee on Military Affairs; the naval bill to the Committee on Naval Affairs; the Post-Office bill to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; and the Indian bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

This leaves with the Committee on Appropriations the following-named bills, namely: Legislative, executive, and judicial, sundry civil, deficiency, fortification, pension, and District of Columbia bills, which include more than half the annual appropriations for carrying on the Government. The total appropriations for the fiscal year 1885-'86 are $215,511,595.24, of which sum $114,824,465.45 was appropriated in the bills last named. The remaining expenditures of the Government are provided for by permanent appropriations.

The Committee on Appropriations was created on the 2d of March, 1865 (second session Thirty-eighth Congress), but was not appointed until the following Congress. Prior to its creation the general appropriation bills were reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, which committee was further divided by the transfer of its jurisdiction on the subjects of banking and bank currency and the Pacific Railroad to standing committees on those subjects.

On the 14th of September, 1837 (first session Twenty-fifth Congress), the House adopted the following rule, viz:

"It shall also be the duty of the Committee on Appropriations, within thirty days after their appointment, at every session of Congress, commencing on the first Monday of December, to report the general appropriation bills."

On the 2d of March, 1865, the House adopted the following amendment to the foregoing clause, viz: "or, in failure thereof, the reasons for such failure."

Under these provisions the various appropriation bills were reported within the time prescribed, or the failure therefor explained, with but few exceptions, until the revision of the rules in the second session of the Forty-sixth Congress.

In that revision the requirement as to reporting these bills was omitted, and from that time the general appropriation bills have been reported as the committee saw fit. The following table shows the date of their several reports since the Forty-fourth Congress:

The foregoing table does not show the dates of the submission and adoption of the conference reports on the various appropriation bills, but a careful examination shows that nearly all were submitted and adopted within a week and many during the closing hours of the various sessions of Congress named. The exceptions are few and unimportant in character.

For nearly forty years of our history the appropriations were made in one act, entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Government." The first separate bill for the expenses of the Post-Office Department was passed in 1844.

In 1847 the appropriations were made in nine separate bills, viz: Army, civil and diplomatic, deficiencies, fortifications, Indians, Military Academy, Navy, pensions, and Post-Office.

In 1856 the consular and diplomatic appropriations were for the first time embodied in a separate bill. In 1857 the legislative, executive, and judicial bill first appeared in its present form.

In 1862 the sundry civil bill was established, containing the various miscellaneous items not embraced in the other bills, and in 1880 the agricultural and District of Columbia bills were established, the agricultural bill being transferred to the Committee on Agriculture. With but few exceptions the river and harbor bill was prepared and reported by the Committee on Commerce until the creation of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in 1883, when it was assigned to that committee.

As showing the great increase of appropriations for the support of the Government, it may be stated that each one of our principal general appropriation bills embraces as much money as the whole amount of the net ordinary expenditures of the Government during the first ten years of its existence, and the specific objects to be investigated and provided for in these bills have so greatly increased in number that it has become a very considerable task even to enumerate them. For several years past the various general appropriation bills have been reported at such late periods in the session as to preclude their careful and thorough investigation by members not on the Committee on Appropriations. The committee is of opinion that the distribution proposed will enable all these bills to be reported at earlier periods in the session, will permit a more careful and thorough consideration of each bill by the committee having jurisdiction of it, and also by the House, resulting in more considerate and economic legislation, and will obviate the necessity for the passage of any of these bills under a suspension of the rules, which has been so frequently done in late years.

The fortification bill, being one relating jointly to Army and Navy fortifications and the general public defense, is left with the Committee on Appropriations.

As there is no local or municipal government in the District of Columbia, the duties of the committee having charge of its affairs in the House are to a large extent both executive and legislative in their nature. Experience has shown that the great number of matters now requiring the attention of that committee occupy all the time it can devote to them. It has not been considered proper under these circumstances to impose upon it the additional labor of preparing the bill making appropriations for the support of the District government, and that bill is left with the Committee on Appropriations.

RULE XXI.

The committee is of opinion that the general appropriation bills should be confined strictly to items and matters of appropriation authorized by existing law, to continuation of appropriations for such public works as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government, and to this end recommend the restoration of the old rule, adopted in the Twenty-fifth Congress, and which stood without amendment until the Forty-fourth Congress, a period of nearly forty years, and was further amended in the Forty-sixth Congress.

The committee recommends striking out all after the word "progress," in line 252, page 11 of the printed bill (Mis. Doc. No. 23), and the insertion in lieu thereof of the following words, viz: "And for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government."

As thus amended the clause will read as follows, viz:

"3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress, and for the contingencies for carrying on the several Departments of the Government."

This accomplishes the result proposed by the committee, and, in connection with another amendment proposed to Rule XXIV, will, it is believed, more evenly distribute the burden of committee work and responsibility, and avoid heated controversies and prolonged conferences between independent branches of the Government as to legislation on general appropriation bills.

The committee also recommends the further amendment of Rule XXI of the last House by the insertion of the following words as clause 6, viz:

No bill for the payment or adjudication of any private claim against the Government shall be referred, except by unanimous consent, to any other than the following-named committees, viz: To the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Pensions, to the Committee on Claims, to the Committee on War Claims, to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and to the Committee on Accounts.

The committee is of opinion that this clause is required in order to secure a stricter observance of the jurisdiction of the several committees, and limit the consideration of private claims against the Government to the committees having appropriate jurisdiction of such claims, thereby affording the other committees greater time and opportunity for the examination of the public questions committed to them.

RULE XXIII.

It is recommended that clause 3 be amended by striking out the words "the consideration of," in lines 277 and 278, page 12, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "passing over."

4. In Committees of the Whole House, business on their calendars shall be taken up in regular order, except bills for raising revenue, general appropriation bills, and bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which shall have precedence, and when objection is made to passing over any bill or proposition, the committee shall thereupon rise and report such objection to the House, which shall decide, without debate, whether such bill or proposition shall be considered or laid aside for the present; whereupon the committee shall resume its sitting without further order of the House.

It often happens in the Committee of the Whole that the committee reporting the first bill in order on the Calendar does not desire it taken up at that sitting and that there might be no objection to passing it over temporarily. The amendment also gives the Committee of the Whole what it ought to have, i. e., greater control of its business and proceedings.

RULE XXIV.

The committee recommends the striking out of the words "joint resolutions," in clause 1, page 13, line 299, and the insertion of the word "resolutions."

The object is to permit the reference, on the call of States and Territories, of simple House resolutions and concurrent resolutions which have not hitherto been in order for reference. The word "bills" is a generic term, and has usually been held to include only "bills and joint resolutions" in the practice of the House. The committee recommends the insertion of the following words as clause 2 of Rule XXIV:

2. After the Journal is read and approved each day, the Speaker shall lay before the House, for reference, messages from the President, reports and communications from the heads of Departments and other communications addressed to the House, and all such bills, resolutions, and other messages from the Senate as may have been received on the previous day.

Its adoption will secure the prompt reference to committees of all messages from the President, executive and other communications, as well as all bills and messages from the Senate, thereby permitting their earlier consideration by the various committees and avoiding the requests for unanimous consent merely to refer a Senate bill, which are so often made and consume so much time, frequently to no purpose. It is substantially the Senate rule on this subject.

The next amendment to this rule is to change clause 2 to 3 and amend it so as to conform to the preceding clause; that is to say, postpone the call of committees until after business on the Speaker's table has been disposed of.

The committee also recommends the insertion of the words "as hereinafter provided," in line 325, after the word "business."

The committee also recommends the insertion of the following words, as a new clause, to be numbered 5, viz:

5. After the morning hour shall have been devoted to reports from committees (or the call completed), the Speaker shall again call the committees in regular order for one hour, upon which call each committee, on being named, shall have the right to call up for consideration any bill reported by it on a previous day, on either the House or Union Calendar. And when any committee shall have occupied the said hour for one day, it shall not be in order for such committee to designate any other proposition for consideration until all the other committees shall have been called in their turn; and when any proposition shall have occupied two hours on this call, it shall thereafter remain on the Calendar as unfinished business and be taken up in its order: Provided, That when the hour herein prescribed shall expire while the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union is considering a bill under this clause the said committee shall rise without motion therefor.

The committee is of opinion that this hour will facilitate useful legislation.

The committee further recommends an additional clause to this rule to be numbered 6, as follows:

6. After the hour under the preceding clause shall have been occupied, it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business in which the House may have been engaged at an adjournment, and at the same time each day thereafter, other than the first and third Mondays, until disposed of; and it shall be in order to proceed to the consideration of all other unfinished business whenever the class of business to which it belongs shall be in order.

This clause is simply a transposition of clause 4 of Rule XXIV of the last House changed only as to the order of time of considering the unfinished business, and conforms to the new clauses inserted.

The committee proposes to strike out clauses 4, 5, and 6 of Rule XXIV, and insert in lieu thereof the following as new clauses, numbered, respectively, 5, 6, and 7:

7. Unfinished business, if any, having been disposed of, motions shall be in order as follows:

First. That the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider, first, bills raising revenue and general appropriation bills, and then other business on its Calendar.

Second. To proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar.

Third. On Friday of each week, after the morning hour, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House to consider business on the Private Calendar; and, if this motion fail, then public business shall be in order as on other days.

This amendment is merely a transposition and renumbering of clause 6 of the old rule, which is not changed in any respect.

RULE XXVI.

The committee recommends striking out the words "a two-thirds vote of the members present and voting," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "the House." This is necessary in order to make it harmonize with the third paragraph of clause 7 of Rule XXIV.

There is a conflict between the two provisions which has occasioned frequent controversies in the past, and the committee believes it should be settled by allowing a majority to decide what business it will take up.

Recognizing the necessity for the early adoption of such rules as will enable the House to complete its organization and proceed with the public business, the committee has not considered it wise to attempt at the present time such a general revision of the practice as was contemplated by the several measures referred to it, but has endeavored to confine itself to such recommendations as appeared to be essential to the proper distribution of the work of the committees and the promotion of necessary legislation.

The committee does not ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the other proposed amendments, but retains them for further examination.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following as the views of the minority:

The undersigned, a member of the Committee on Rules, respectfully dissents from the report of said committee proposing material and important changes in the rules heretofore in force in the House of Representatives, and begs leave to submit his reasons for such disagreement.

There are three principal changes submitted. First, it is proposed to take from the Committee on Appropriations six of the general appropriation bills, and turn them over to the several committees having jurisdiction of general legislation on the same subject-matters. In other words, these separate committees are to bring forward their special legislation, and at the same time say what shall be the measure of expenditure to carry it into execution. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill will go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, the Army bill and the Military Academy bill to the Committee on Military Affairs; the Navy appropriation bill to the House Committee on Naval Affairs; the Post-Office appropriation bill to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; and the Indian appropriation bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Such distribution of the labors of the Committee on Appropriations is without example in any enlightened legislative body in this country or in Europe.

Before the war, the Committee of Ways and Means prepared and reported the necessary appropriation bills to execute the laws and carry on the Government, and it also arranged the taxes requisite to provide income sufficient to meet the proposed expenditures. Those who were for lessening taxes were of course in favor of economical expenditures, and those who were not, favored the largest appropriations. Instead of returning to the old system it is proposed still further to separate these closely related and interdependent subjects. General appropriation bills are to be still further divided and scattered, and the result inevitably will be that it will be impossible to keep up any just relations between receipts and expenditures.

Experience and observation demonstrate such distribution leads to continually increasing appropriations, and renders it more difficult to keep expenditures within the limits of receipts. In the instances where appropriation bills have been taken from the Committee on Appropriations and given to the committees having charge of general legislation on the same subjects, it is susceptible of proof that those particular appropriations have steadily increased, and to such a degree that, if the same ratio of increase were to be followed in all the other appropriations, the result would be not only to exhaust the surplus revenue, but compel the levying of increased taxation.

The best interests of the people require that the subject of appropriations should mainly be committed to the charge of one committee—not that one set of men is abler or more honest than another set, but because experience has shown it is the safest course to pursue. Such body of men can make careful scrutiny into every detail by itself, and, in connection with others, and taking a survey of the whole field of receipts and expenditures, it will be responsible to the House to see to it that the latter shall be reduced to an economical basis, and kept within the limits of the public revenue.

If that responsibility be disseminated through many committees it will become so loose and uncertain as to be lost altogether, and it is not unlikely, as we have been told in debate on this floor by men of the highest distinction in our councils, that if the proposed distribution of appropriation bills among the several committees shall take place it will be at the "peril of the public interests, and will release the grasp which the Committee on Appropriations can alone keep on the purse-strings of the Government." The result, as we have also been told, would "absolutely break down all economy and good order and good management of the finances."

If, as it is unadvisedly alleged, the duties of the Appropriations Committee are more than the present number of that committee can manage, the remedy naturally would be to increase the number. But such is not the proposition. On the contrary, it is proposed to distribute the work of that committee in such a way as to make it practically impossible to secure anything like harmony of action and unity of purpose in making up the general appropriation bills. This change is not based on any pretense that the Committee on Appropriations has been extravagant or reckless in reporting appropriations. The reverse is the truth.

In the Forty-fourth Congress the reduction in the appropriations reached thirty millions for the next fiscal year. This was accomplished against the protest of the heads of Departments and influential leaders in Congress, who said that it would hamper the operations of the Government. In the sequel it proved to be the first practical step to specie resumption and the return of business to its former safe channels. Confidence was fully restored, and the credit of the Government became so fully re-established that it was able to place its loans at extremely low rates of interest.

If, in place of the responsibility and certainty of keeping appropriations within economical limits, we are to inaugurate a system of making appropriations by many committees, without regard each to the other or the amount of money involved, increased expenditures will ensue, and the party in power and responsible for the control of legislation in this House will be held to strict account by the people.

It has been stated heretofore in the debate on this subject that the history of legislation in Congress shows that amendments to appropriation bills coming from other committees having jurisdiction of general legislation concerning kindred subjects have been invariably in the direction of increased expenditure. When these same committees shall have the power not only to originate legislation, but also the power to provide appropriations to carry that legislation into effect, who can tell what the end will be?

A particular Department or bureau may prefer to have its special committee, with which it has intimate and cordial relations, to make the appropriations for its use rather than to undergo the scrutiny of an appropriations committee having control of the appropriations for all the Departments and having attachment no more to one than to another. But it is the part of wisdom to adhere to the precedents of the past, which have proved so efficacious heretofore in promoting economy and good government.

If the proposition shall prevail, and the work of the Appropriations Committee be divided among other committees and added to their present duties, the extinction of the Appropriations Committee is not far distant; and when appropriations shall be withdrawn from the consideration and control of one committee, and no longer kept within due order and subordination to each other, and to the burdens of taxation imposed upon the people, and those several committees are launched out into unrestrained freedom of appropriations, each striving to surpass the other in greater recognition and larger appropriations for its special charge, it will not be difficult to prophesy the day of wasteful extravagance and all its attendant corruptions is near at hand.

As the session grows in length, and it comes toward its termination, what a scene of confusion will be presented, with many appropriation committees antagonizing each other, each seeking precedence and passage for its own particular measure! The session would be procrastinated to the latest period, and after the adjournment it would not be unlikely that the appropriations would be found to be greater in amount than the revenues of the Government.

Who would then be responsible to the people for such grave blunder, if not crime, in a time of profound peace? Not the Appropriations Committee, for that would be degraded and rendered powerless; nor the many committees separarately making appropriations for special objects regardless of the aggregate appropriations coming from all other committees. No; it would be the party in power in this House that would be held to the strictest account. And even if it should be discovered before the adjournment that the appropriations far exceeded the revenue, where would the reductions take place?

What committee would step forward and offer to surrender any share of the amount of money deemed by it necessary to carry on its special department of the Government? Would not each one strive to impose the unpleasant scaling down upon the others?

If it should be agreed there should be a 20 per cent. reduction all along the line, in order to bring expenditures within receipts, it would turn out that in some cases, where the amount is already fixed by law, a deficiency would be left over, which would necessarily have to be provided for at the next session. So even that way would not answer the purpose, and debt would grow until it must be met by new taxation.

Then, when differences occur between the two Houses, how are they to be adjusted on any plan recognizing the whole field of appropriations, when the members of a special appropriation committee can only know, in detail and accurately, what relates to their own committee?

It is the glorious tradition of the land from which we get our laws that the House of Commons shall protect with every safeguard the money of the people. It is an inheritance which this House of Representatives has maintained during the existence of our Government with singular fidelity. At this hour to disregard the prudential lessons of the past, to surrender to the Senate the protection of the Treasury, is to dethrone the House of Representatives from the exalted position it has occupied in our history, and leave it powerless. For the protection of the people's money means the practical control of the people's Government, because freedom from uncertainty in our finances, and stability, which can alone come from comprehensive and harmonious action, will be found in that body which refuses to yield itself up to the almost chaotic confusion of a score of committees, all seeking to outvie each other in the career of expenditure in order to enhance the importance and consideration of the special interests confided to their care.

In the second place it is proposed to change clause 3, Rule XXI, by striking out the following proviso, originally adopted during the first session of the Forty-fourth Congress, and in operation for the intervening ten years:

"Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill: Provided, That it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures."

This provision has been so frequently debated pro and con in this House, it must be taken for granted its character, extent, value, and beneficent results are generally known. We recognize the fact that most of the reductions in recent years in public expenditures have been greatly promoted by the operation of that rule. It has purified the House from public scandals.

If, then, the majority should determine so to amend it as to exclude all general legislation from appropriation bills, very well if the right shall be left to reduce salaries and force of officials engaged in administering the Government when such motion is made to the bill providing for such payment. In that view the following is submitted as an addition to the proposition reported by the Committee on Rules:

"But provisions or amendments for the direct reduction of the number, salary, and compensation of officers and employés of the United States shall be in order on a general appropriation bill if germane to the subject-matter of the bill, and it shall be in order further to amend such bill upon the report of the committee having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of such amendment, which amendment, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures."

The third principal change in the rules proposed by the Committee on Rules is to establish a morning hour for the consideration of business reported from the committees of the House. Any fair and reasonable measure to bring about expedition in disposing of the public business, instead of meeting my dissent, will have my approval.

There are, in fact, two morning hours, one for reports for reference and printing, and another immediately afterward for consideration of business previously reported and called up for consideration by committees in their order. If the committee calling up a bill shall occupy the said hour for one day it is not in order for that committee to designate any other proposition until all the other committees shall have been called in their turn. If it shall occupy a second hour with the same proposition, then that subject goes to what may be called a preferred calendar of unfinished business, to be called up subsequently on motion or reached for action in its order.

It provides for what I have denominated a calendar of unfinished business. This will not, in my judgment, accomplish the object in view to the extent expected, but, favoring what fairly looks to expedition in the transaction of the public business, no objection will be interposed to its adoption on my part.

Other points of a minor character I will defer to the discussion of the report of the committee in the House as it proceeds.

As fully reflecting the views I now entertain on this proposition to send to certain standing committees of the House general appropriation bills, thereby rejecting the principle that the whole expenditures of the Government should be reviewed and reported upon by one committee, constituted without reference to the claims of any particular branch of the public service, but to deal fairly and justly with the whole, and with due consideration for the sum total of revenues, I earnestly call attention to the views expressed by the Committee on Rules in the report it submitted to the House during the Forty-sixth Congress, and to the opinions expressed by certain gentlemen who participated in the protracted discussion which followed upon a proposition made to distribute the appropriation bills.

The Committee on Rules (the Speaker, J. C. S. BLACKBURN, A. H. Stephens, J. A. Garfield, and W. P. FRYE) said:

* * * * * * * *

* * * "It follows as a logical sequence that if any other committee is to take charge of one of the general appropriation bills, the interests therein involved and considered will stand separate and apart from the interests involved and considered in the other bills, and as a further result any scheme of reduction of expenditures made necessary by a deficit of revenue for that fiscal year must be executed by the Committee on Appropriations without respect to the interests involved in the bill so taken from them, thereby leaving that particular interest to stand independent of and without any relation whatever to the other interests for which appropriations are annually made."

Mr. Garfield, of Ohio, said:

"There are two committees of this House that stand, if I may so speak, with their backs to each other and facing in opposite directions. One is the Committee of Ways and Means. That committee faces out upon all the business of this country from which a revenue can be had. They ask the nation this one question: Where can we get a revenue to supply the machinery of this Government, to fill the Treasury as it ought to be filled? And they apply to all of the people of this country, to all its wealth, to all its trade, its commerce, and ask what contributions shall be gathered and how they shall be gathered from the people.

"But that committee wants one thing before they start out upon this inquiry—they want the figures, the sum total. And they turn to the other committee which stands back to back to them, the Committee on Appropriations, and inquire of that committee how much money must we give you to run this Government for the coming year? And they get the figures from the Committee on Appropriations. That committee says to them, we will require so many millions of dollars. Thereupon the Committee of Ways and Means turns to the nation and asks for a contribution. It passes a law that tells how much the burden shall be and how that burden shall be distributed.

* * * * * * *

"It is a fact within the experience of every member who has been here long that the Committee on Appropriations always finds itself confronted with a demand from each of the committees having a special subject in charge for larger appropriations than the Committee on Appropriations think should be made. There never was a time within my knowledge since I have been here when the Committee on Military Affairs did not resist the tendency of the Committee on Appropriations to cut down the appropriations for the Army. The Committee on Naval Affairs has always been found resisting the reduction of the naval appropriation bill. For this reason, I say that if each of these several committees had charge of getting up the appropriation bills on these several subjects the amount of the bills would be very large; they would outgrow the grasp of the House, and there would be no unity in the appropriations of public money.

* * * * * * *

"I do say, sir, without the slightest question in my own mind of the truth of the statement, that the scattering of these appropriations as suggested by gentlemen here will be absolutely breaking down all economy and good order and good management of our finances. It can not be otherwise.

"We know the length of our session depends on the appropriation bills. Whatever other things fail, these must pass. However far into the hot weather of the summer we go, we must go by the pressure of the appropriation bills; and unless we say to one committee, take this in charge and make it your chief business, we give you the primacy, we give you the priority, we waive all other things off to carry this through and accomplish it—I say unless we do that, there can be no reasonable end to our session and there can be no safety to our Treasury. I hope, therefore, gentlemen will not break down the old conservative habits we have thrown around the Committee on Appropriations."

* * * * * * *

Mr. RANDALL, of Pennsylvania, said:

* * * "If you undertake to divide all these appropriations and have many committees where there ought to be but one, you will enter upon a path of extravagance you can not foresee the length of or the depth of, until we will find the Treasury of the country bankrupt."

* * * * * * *

Mr. Whitthorne, of Tennessee, said:

"When I first entered Congress, in the Forty-second Congress, General Coburn, of Indiana, was a member of the Committee on Appropriations. He at that time proposed to divide the labors of that committee as is now proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Shallenberger] and by others. At that time I was heartily in favor of that proposition. But during all these years that I have been here my experience and observation have led me to believe that if we turn loose a half-dozen committees upon the subject of appropriations it will be impossible to control the amount of those appropriations. I believe that it is for the interest of the people that the subject of appropriations should be committed mainly to one committee. I say this not out of any feeling with respect to my own committee, because if I considered that I should be jealous of its rights and should speak jealously of its intelligence and its power of comprehending the duty before it. But, speaking in the interest of the people, in the interest of the public Treasury, in the interest of a proper control of public expenditures, I may say, what has been forced upon me contrary to my original convictions, that it is the duty of this House to have the subject of appropriations controlled by one committee." * * *

Mr. Robeson, of New Jersey, said:

"Mr. Chairman, the business of the country to be transacted in a great assembly like this must of course be committed to committees for examination, digestion, organization, and accomplishment. The general business of Congress divides itself naturally into three classes: First, legislation; second, revenue; third, appropriations. First, legislation for the purpose of doing the business of the country, or carrying on the Government, for securing the rights which that Government guarantees to its citizens, and for the progress and development of the country. These three general propositions include within their compass all the subject-matters of general legislation. The second class comprises the subject-matter of the revenue—the means by which the money of the country is to be raised and collected from the people and property of the country. The next and final division is, naturally, the appropriation of that money. Let me repeat—first the requirements of legislation; second, the raising of the money; third, the application of that money.

"It is not possible, Mr. Chariman, for any one committee to do all this business. No one committee can investigate and understand everything necessary and proper to originate legislation, to raise the money for it, and to divide and appropriate that money. Therefore this House is divided into subcommittees, to each of which is committed a portion of its business. These subcommittees are divided into three general classes corresponding to the divisions I have indicated. To the great departmental committees and those of like nature are committed the legislation for the maintenance of the Departments, and for carrying on the business of the country. To them is committed the investigation, the digestion, the organization, and accomplishment of that business; and to them it should be left. They are specially delegated with those duties; they are specially clothed with those powers. They give to the different subjects special investigation and special study. By long continuance of service on particular committees, they acquire a knowledge of systems and of details; and it is only by leaving legislation to them that you have a settled and harmonious policy in any Department of the Government.

"Wise economy is brought about by system and settled policy; and you can have no really economical service in any Department unless you have a committee which year after year and session after session, as long as the party which they represent dominates in the country, establishes a settled and continuous policy which can be worked out from its base to its consummation.

* * * * * * *

"I do not believe that the various committees to whom is intrusted the legislation of this country should also be intrusted with the appropriation of the money, because this last I hold to be the province of the Appropriations Committee—a committee which not only adds, multiplies, and subtracts, as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] said yesterday, but a committee which must investigate and take into consideration the results of the action of all other committees.

"They must examine work of the Congress as a whole. They must take into consideration what are the requirements of each particular Department as represented by its appropriate committee; what are the means supplied by the Ways and Means Committee; and looking over the whole field, and aggregating and considering the whole system, they must determine what it is wise to appropriate to each particular object; not the objects, but how much can be appropriated to each. No individual committee, which has in hand only the interests of its own business, can possibly know what are the results of the work of all the other committees. This is not their province, and it is not expected of them. Therefore it is that this Appropriations Committee is necessary. It is a sort of universal solvent that deals with the results of the action of all other organized committees, and puts them in a systematic policy, for which the party which they represent is responsible." * * *

Mr. Cox, of New York, said:

* * * "But if the Committee on Foreign Affairs would rid the country of these superfluous appendages, have they not the chance without having exclusive control of the diplomatic appropriation bill? Have we not the right to report a general bill repealing existing laws creating these offices? Can not we prepare amendments to the appropriation bill for such a purpose and take the sense of the House upon them? When the majority of the House favors such a motion can not it be done? If we have left the right to amend appropriation bills, when they come up in Committee of the Whole, or if preliminary we may report appropriation bills on special subjects for the final revision of the Appropriations Committee, what then? Nothing except greater guards over the strong-box in the Treasury. Let us, therefore, leave to the Committee on Appropriations its general supervision, which is indispensable to our fiscal system."

* * * * * * *

Mr. Young, of Tennessee, said:

"There are, I think, few members of this House who have had more cause, real or imaginary, of complaint against the Committee on Appropriations than I have had, though I am glad to number every member of it among my personal friends; and few members, I presume, are more willing to curtail and impose every restraint upon that absolute dominion which has heretofore been allowed it in the management and direction of public legislation upon the floor of this House; yet I would not do this at the peril of the public interest. I know, sir, whenever we relax that rigid grasp which the Appropriations Committee can alone keep upon the purse-strings of the Government, whenever we wrest from it the key of the national Treasury, we will at once enter upon a vast field of public expenditure that has no bounds, and embark upon a turbid ocean of public extravagance which will soon swallow up our entire public resources."

* * * * * * *

Mr. REED, of Maine, said:

* * * "But if we say that appropriations are to be made according to law by one committee, then we have control of the great general appropriations of the Government, and we know what we can appropriate; and then the other committees can carve out of what is left."

Mr. Simonton, of Tennessee, said:

"The question of the distribution of the powers of the Appropriations Committee is one that has engaged the attention of this Committee of the Whole for some time. A great many reasons have been offered why such distributions should be made. Among others, it has been gravely argued on this floor that if the duties and powers of that committee were divided among other committees, then gentlemen would have a better opportunity to put themselves forward in this House. I have no doubt that would be true.

"We have been told that if there was a distribution of the powers and duties of the Appropriations Committee there would not be any increase of the expenditures of the Government. I would ask, gentlemen, how do you know that the Agricultural Committee will not bring in a larger appropriation for that Department than would the Appropriations Committee? I would ask this question: If gentlemen do not want more money for the particular departments to which their committees relate, then why are they dissatisfied with the action of the Appropriations Committee? If it is not in order that they may obtain more money, why then do they want the powers of the Appropriations Committee distributed among the other committees of this House? Why must the Committee on Agriculture say what amounts shall be appropriated for the Department of Agriculture; or the Committee on Military Affairs say what amount shall be appropriated for the maintenance and support of the Army? Is it not because members are not satisfied with the amounts given by the Appropriations Committee? Now, if the Appropriations Committee should give too much, gentlemen can very easily move amendments to cut down the amount proposed.

"Mr. BLACKBURN. They never move to cut down.

"Mr. SIMONTON. I have never known an amendment offered to cut down the amount proposed. The truth is the difficulty with gentlemen arises from the fact that the Appropriations Committee does not give the Departments to which their committees relate enough of the public money; that is the difficulty."

* * * * * * *

Mr. BLACKBURN, of Kentucky, said:

"I know very well that it is proper and right that each Department of the Government should have its own special friends upon this floor. The Committee on Naval Affairs is selected by the Speaker with the view of getting together men who are friendly to that Department. So with the Committee on Military Affairs; and it is the same way all through the list of committees. They are appointed that they may see to a change of the law wherever it is necessary to guard the interests of the particular Department committed to their care. That is the theory of the construction of the committees of this House; and it is a proper theory.

"The Committee on Appropriations stands in a very different attitude. Bearing no special relation to any Department, selected as a fair and impartial arbiter, with no more concern for the Navy or the Army than for the Interior Department or the Post-Office Department, it has been selected as the one grand reservoir into which all these proposed disbursements of money should pour, in order that fairly, judiciously, impartially it may make its recommendations to this House. Now, if you mean to take these bills from that committee—and the Committee of the Whole seem so determined—if the amendment now pending be adopted, I enter a solemn protest against it, not in the interest of party, but in the interest of economy and fair administration.

"But I go further, and remind the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Garfield], my colleague on the Committee on Rules, that we are not yet reduced to the dire alternative which he describes. We are not yet forced to extricate ourselves from this threatened dilemma by adopting his suggested amendment and striking off the only limitation that the rule now puts upon the increase of appropriations by amendment after an appropriation bill comes into the House. He says that the alternative suggested by him is the only escape. I remind him that he has spoken hastily. There is another escape, and I trust it will be embraced. If this proposition for the distribution of the appropriation bills shall be adopted without limitation, and then if the only safeguard that we hold to-day under the rule upon the people's Treasury is to be stricken down, I sincerely, honestly, and earnestly trust that the report made by the Committee on Rules in the shape of a revision, so mangled and marred, with all its sins, if it has any, and with whatever good may belong to it, may be rejected and spewed out of the mouth of this House."

Mr. KEIFER, of Ohio, said:

"I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if you transfer to the various committees of this House the duties of preparing the several appropriations bills there will be a strife between those committees, the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and so on through, each striving to obtain the most appropriations for the Department of the Government directly under its charge, and in that way we will necessarily augment the annual appropriations beyond the ordinary revenues of the Government."

* * * * * * *

Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, said:

"Now, taking this as an illustration, the Committee on Appropriations, the general supervising committee of amounts to be granted, would be better able to reach a harmonious balance with reference to the wants of each branch of the service than could be attained if each of the various committees should control the appropriations for its particular Department. It is inevitable that a committee in charge of any subject will, I will not say unjustly, magnify the importanec of that subject, but will see it in all its force. I know this from my experience as a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and also as a member at one time of the Committee on Banking and Currency." * * *

During the first session of the last Congress an amendment was proposed to the rules of the Senate referring the District of Columbia appropriation bill to the District of Columbia Committee. The following are extracts from the debate which occurred in the Senate on that proposition:

Senator BECK said:

"This is the beginning of a raid on the Appropriations Committee that if allowed to proceed can not be resisted, because each committee will claim that it has special knowledge and special information that the Committee on Appropriations does not have and can not have, because of the intimate relations of the various committees with the different Departments; and it will end in abolishing the Committee on Appropriations substantially. Perhaps that may be a good thing to do. It is a good way to get money out of the Treasury; there is no doubt about that.

* * * * * * *

"I do not believe that the effort to take cognizance by special committee of the appropriations relative to the District of Columbia or to the Agricultural Department, or the Military, or Navy, or any other Department of the Government, is based upon the idea that the Committee on Appropriations are too extravagant in their appropriations for any of those things, or that it is now proposed to take any bill away from us for the purpose of curtailing extravagance or economizing expenditures in any of the different Departments of the Government. I think if this movement succeeds that the reverse will be found to be the fact. I think the history of legislation in these halls will show that wherever amendments have been moved to appropriation bills as they came from the Committee on Appropriations by gentlemen representing any other of the great interests of the Government, whether military or naval, or the District of Columbia or anything else, it has generally been asking an addition to an increase of appropriation over what the Committee on Appropriations had seen fit to allow; and I predict now that if this move is successful, and the Committee on Appropriations is abolished, as it will virtually be if all these motions carry—because I suppose if one shall carry all will—the result will be increased appropriations and a want of harmony, instead of strict economy and a thorough knowledge of all that has been done, and we shall have hereafter a good deal of extravagance in the management of our public affairs.

* * * * * * *

"I have made notes of the remarks made by many of the leading men of the House, agreeing, almost without exception, that the rule was that each of the special committees charged with special interests were demanding more than the Committee on Appropriations was willing to give, and that there would be no uniformity if they were allowed to control appropriations. One committee would succeed in getting more than its share, while another would get less than its proportion; trading, bickerings, and heart-burnings would follow, to the detriment of the public service. The Post-Office Committee, whose jurisdiction reaches all the people, or the Agricultural Committee, banking on its popularity by representing the farmers of the country, might get more than the Army or the Navy, which are not so popular in time of peace, whereas when the bills all went to one committee composed of gentlemen some of whom are on the majority of the important committees, and are acting uniformly to see how the aggregate that can be afforded from the taxation imposed may be best distributed, doing justice to each one, ignoring none, giving none an advantage over others as far as they are able, then uniformity and equal justice would be obtained.

* * * * * * *

* * * "Each Department of the Government would be represented by a different body of men in each conference who are not advised as to any of the other appropriations which have been made, and have to begin at the beginning and get the appropriations of all the other Departments from the different committees in order to get the information before they can tell what is going to be anything like an approximation to the aggregate of the expenditures of the Government for any fiscal year.

"For these reasons, among others, I think it would be a misfortune to break up the unity of the action of the two Houses, as these propositions, if carried, certainly will, because if one be taken away from the Appropriations Committee the others I assume will be.

* * * * * * *

"It surely must be better to allow one body of men to frame the laws and another to provide the appropriations to carry them out than to allow one set of men to frame the laws and that same body of men provide the appropriations to make them operative. It at least gives two bodies in the Senate a chance to understand all about these things; and if the committee that frames the laws sees that the Appropriations Committee is not making sufficient appropriations to carry them out in good faith, each member of that committee can on the floor of the Senate show wherein injustice has been done, and he will overrule the Committee on Appropriations, of course, and ought to do it.

"This is the trouble about the move now made; it is in the wrong direction; it is a consolidation of all power in a single committee. If one committee frames the law and votes the money to carry it out, no other man in the Senate will know anything about it. The Agricultural Committee will frame the law and vote all the money they can, and no man not on that committee will know anything about it. So of the Post-Office Committee, so of the Naval Committee, so of the Military Committee, so of the District of Columbia Committee. They become autocrats, not only in the framing of the law, but in the appropriation of the people's money to carry it out; and outside of that committee-room no man can get the information to enable him to contradict what they say if they are wrong; and they are selected because they are special friends of the Department they are appointed to represent, for each Secretary ought to have men he can trust before whom he can present the wants of his Department here.

"What is the direction we ought to move in, and that I hope the great party I have so long been connected with has been moving in? Checks and guards ought to be thrown around all official acts. Discretion should be restricted by positive laws, and no man or set of men should hold unrestricted power. We ought to have one committee a check upon another, one guard placed upon another, so that no body of men sitting as a committee of Congress shall have absolute power over the money of the people. * * *

* * * * * * *

"Whenever we depart from the present system of legislation and say that the committee that have the right to frame the laws for the Navy, or the Army, or the District of Columbia, or the Post-Office, or any of the great Departments of the Government, shall at the same time declare what money is necessary to carry those laws into effect, and no other committee, no other member of this House, shall have the power or the opportunity to see whether they are right or wrong, then we are taking a step in a wrong direction and concealing from the great mass of the Senate and the great mass of the people the facts on which we act; but when one committee frames the law and another provides the money, the two committees will develop all the facts, so that the whole body of the Senate will understand what is the proper thing to do.

* * * * * * *

* * * "While I admit—and I wish that distinctly understood that I not only admit but I believe—that every other member of every other committee, whether of the District of Columbia, on Agriculture, the Post-Office, or any other committee, is as honest and as able and better informed as to his special matter than the members perhaps of the Committee on Appropriations in the aggregate, still it is not wise that the framing of laws and the voting of money to carry them out shall be united; and if you put them in the hands of a single committee, who will look over the aggregate, summons the different committees, reason together, and see what the Government, with the money produced by the taxes levied, can afford to expend, then the books of one committee will show what can be done with justice to all."

Senator EDMUNDS, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said:

* * * "I wish to say that in the main part of the observations of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] I entirely agree. I think it would be injurious to the interests of the Treasury, and so to the interests of the people who supply the Treasury of the United States, to send appropriation questions for reports of sums to be appropriated to the various committees that have charge of the classes of the public service about which appropriations must be made, and that the practical result would be, if we divide them up, that the sum total of appropriations would be enormously increased. If there be a standing order of the Senate which says that all appropriations respecting the judicial establishment of the United States should be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary, the relations between the Committee on the Judiciary and the Department of Justice and the judicial establishment are of such an intimate and friendly character that we should be quite likely to be acting under a bias and to be more liberal in the money that we would recommend to be expended for the judicial establishment than a body of men not under such a bias would be likely to be. And I confess I do not see any distinction between the matter of the District of Columbia and any other of the various branches of the public service—the Army, the Navy, Indian affairs, post-offices and post-roads, public lands, and every one of the scores of separate subjects of public expenditure. I repeat I do not see any distinction between one and another.

"If it be correct to send appropriations regarding the District of Columbia to that committee, so far as I can see it is perfectly correct to send all judicial appropriations to the Committee on the Judiciary, all naval appropriations to the Naval Committee, all military appropriations to the Military Committee, all Indian appropriations to the Indian Committee, and so on through the whole catalogue. I am fully persuaded that the aggregate of the separate bills, when we got to the end of a session of Congress, would be altogether beyond that which we now have; and I think we should find, in the main—although there are and probably must be more or less deficiencies that we have to make up (in general they are small)—that the aggregate of the public expenditure would be largely increased, on account of the necessary fact in human nature that committees charged with particular subjects and in direct communication with particular branches of the public service get to be impressed with the ideas of the special Departments with which they have to do, and feel, with the Departments, that the public service would be better promoted with still larger appropriations to carry it on.

"That is perfectly natural, perfectly reasonable in the philosophic sense, and is certain in my opinion to occur; and therefore, while I should be very glad to have the Judiciary Committee consider appropriations for the judicial establishment, because I think that the laws ought to be furnished with more money to carry them out, and the judges ought to have higher pay, and the marshals and everybody else be provided with more funds, I do not think it would be for the public interest that the Committee on the Judiciary should be charged with reporting appropriations for that branch of the public service. If it is true as to the Committee on the Judiciary, I assume that it would be true as to all the other committees in this body.

"I should hope, then, that we would adhere to the idea, with all the assistance we can get and suggestions from the several committees charged with the various branches of the public service, of having an independent committee, not charged with the administration of any particular branch of the public service, but only charged with following the law providing for appropriations, have all these bills under their general charge grouped as they generally have been. That is my opinion, and I shall feel obliged, therefore, to vote with my friend from Kentucky to keep the appropriation bills (and I would extend it to appropriations for rivers and harbors which have been by some custom sent to the Committee on Commerce) in the care of the Committee on Appropriations."

Senator SHERMAN said:

* * * "I concur generally in the views expressed by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Vermont, but I say that the argument they make does not apply to the bill providing for the government of the District of Columbia. * * *

* * * * * * * *

"I agree with what has been said as to the tendency of dividing out the appropriation bills among different committees being to increase the expenditures. * * *

* * * * * * *

* * * "I will not vote to transfer the naval appropriation bill to the Naval Committee, because these naval expenditures are fixed by law and the Naval Committee can report, if they choose, under our rules, amendments. Nor will I vote to carry the appropriations for agriculture to the Agricultural Committee. That is an interest represented by every man among us. * * *

* * * * * * *

"Sir, I would not do anything at all to weaken the restraint or power of the Committee on Appropriations. I believe that it is necessary, as my friend from Vermont says, to bring all the items of expenditure for the nation under the eye and control of one committee, so that they may limit the amount of expenditure."

* * * * * * *

Senator PLUMB said:

* * * "Not as expressing my ultimate judgment on this question of detail, but to some extent voicing this idea, I propose the following amendment to this Rule XVII:

"'That the general appropriation bills shall be referred as follows:

"'Making appropriations for the support of the Army, for the erection and repair of fortifications, and for the support of the Military Academy, to the Committee on Military Affairs; appropriations for the payment of pensions to the Pensions Committee; appropriations for the Navy and for the Naval Academy, to the Naval Committee; appropriations for the Post-Office Department, to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; appropriations for the Department of Agriculture, to the Committee on Agriculture; appropriations for the Indian Bureau, to the Committee on Indian Affairs; appropriations for the District of Columbia, to the Committee on the District of Columbia; and the several items of appropriation contained in the remaining general appropriation bills, germane to the general jurisdiction of other committees of the Senate, shall be referred to such committees respectively. All such subjects of appropriation, and all appropriation bills so referred, shall be reported to the Senate by the committees to which referred, with proposed amendments, within one week of the date of such reference, and shall be printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.'"

* * * * * * *

Senator MORRILL said:

"I trust that the amendment will not be adopted. It would evidently procrastinate the session of the two Houses for an indefinite period if we were to have all the committees report and wait until they did report before the Committee on Appropriations should have possession of the bills. My opinion is that the business of the two Houses has never been so well performed as it was before the former duties of the Ways and Means and Finance Committees were separated. One committee ought to have the charge not only of the receipts of the Government but of its disbursements; but it was found that in the short session one committee in each House could not dispose of all the business in proper season if it had charge both of revenue matters and of all the appropriations, and, therefore, it was thought best, very properly, to separate the business of appropriations by having an independent committee for its consideration. I do think that this independent Committee on Appropriations is so large that it will overlook the details of the business that may be referred to it upon every subject, and this does not deprive the other committees of their potential power. Whenever a subject is brought here they will have their legitimate influence, and if there is anything wrong in the appropriations proposed by the Committee on Appropriations they will be heard fully."

* * * * * * *

Senator BAYARD said:

* * * "I am entirely opposed to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas; yet at the same time I do not regret that he has offered it, because it serves to emphasize the error into which, I respectfully submit, the Committee on Rules have entered in proposing, even as far as they have, to commit to the two committees here named, Internal Improvements and the District of Columbia, the conjoint consideration, first, of general legislation of matters relating to the subject-matter respecting which the committee is generally charged, and, at the same time, the duty of appropriating money to carry into effect existing laws relating to those subjects. If there be one thing that the rules of the Senate have been questioned about, if there be one subject that has constantly been challenged in the Senate, it has been the offering of inappropriate amendments to appropriation bills; and if there be one form of legislation worse than another, it is the ingrafting of provisions of general law upon appropriation bills, and yet the same effect is produced when you shall combine the two under the name of either a legislative or an appropriation bill.

"I concur very largely in what was said by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] and what was added by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and I hope the Senate will not abandon the rule of legislation which enables the estimates of the Executive Departments to pass before a separate committee for the purpose of being examined with reference to the needs of existing law. I am very sure that when the two functions shall be found combined in the same committee of general legislation, and providing money to carry it into effect, the expenses of this Government will be found to be enormously increased.

"When we speak of a system of checks and balances in powers, it is not the subject of distrust of the individuals in this body who may be charged with the performance of the duties of certain committees; it is simply that under the circumstances there is certainty by delay and there is increased security in having separate and distinct judgments upon the same subject-matter. Therefore it is that I am glad that the error, or, as I may call it, the legislative vice, proposed by the Senator from Kansas has been brought more emphatically and more broadly before the Senate by the amendment that he has offered; and I hope before the rule is accepted by the Senate that the amendments in italics proposed by the committee will of themselves be rejected."

* * * * * * *

Senator DAWES, chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, said:

* * * * * * *

"I think with the Senator from Vermont who last spoke [Mr. MORRILL], that it was a misfortune when it came to be necessary to separate the duties of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House, when that committee which considered the resources and receipts of the Government was unable also at the same time to consider and determine upon the expenditures of the Government. For seventy years or more the Government was administered upon the idea that the receipts and expenditures of the Government should be considered in both branches by one and the same committee, and they were, I think no one can doubt, more wisely and economically administered under that system than under any other possibly devised. There can be no considerable expenditure of money in the Government that does not have its proper relation to the receipts of the Government and be determined in some measure by the receipts. What is in the Treasury, what is coming into the Treasury, and what is to be expended out of the Treasury are questions which ought to come under one general eye and one supervision as far as possible.

"I admit that when the duties of the Committee on Ways and Means were separated and a new Committee on Appropriations was created in the other branch, and also here, it was a necessity. The great amount of the business necessary to be considered as the country grew, and as the war brought new and great questions to be decided with rapidity and upon the moment, made it absolutely necessary, and there has been no time and no possibility since that they could be united. And just so far as we do depart from that idea, that they are a unity, it is a defect; it results in larger expenditure, and in my opinion in a less careful scrutiny. Every special committee, if I may so style the standing committees, to which the appropriation bills shall be distributed, has its specialty to amplify its jurisdiction and to accomplish more for its specialty than its predecessor has done, and I have never known the instance where such a reference has been made that the committee has ever come back with a bill that commended it to consideration because it had been cut down. When in the other branch they succeeded in having the agricultural bill taken from the control of the Committee on Appropriations and referred to the Committee on Agriculture, it was doubled in amount. It went on increasing, and it has gone on from that very reference to this day; and so it will be with every particular appropriation bill which goes to any other committee, especially a committee that has the general subject of legislation upon any particular branch of the public service committed to it; if you put along with it the appropriations for that branch they will legislate and appropriate at the same time.

"I think the Senate will find it has made a very great mistake if it goes any further than existing rules as to the reference of the different appropriation bills, if it does not hold them just as far as it can under the control of a single committee, responsible to the body and to the country for the aggregate as well as for details, a committee whose duty it is to survey the whole field when they consider any particular appropriation bill. I say this proposition to refer the river and harbor bill to a particular committee separate from the Committee on Commerce will not meet that to which I think there is a response in the country; it will disappoint those who think that by thus doing they are going to cut down river and harbor bills. That is not the way to do it. I am not one of those who join in the cry against just and proper and ample and large appropriations for rivers and harbors, but I do not want to see such a bill magnified, swollen, extended, to objects not proper to be expressed within it, which has brought all this scandal on river and harbor bills heretofore, by the ambition of any committee to which it may be referred. I would rather see it take the general course of all appropriation bills, and let the amount appropriated for particular improvements, for great public works, be measured and determined by a fair view of the whole field, by a proper consideration of the entire amount of receipts and the amount of expenditures for other matters, and let other matters be determined also by the amount proper to be appropriated for these great and important duties devolved upon the Government. The improper features of the appropriation bills, that one in particular, do not creep into them, if my experience teaches me anything, from the regular committees. The proper Committees on Appropriations of the two bodies cut down bills; they scrutinize; it is their duty to do so. They are responsible to their respective bodies for the reports they make as a whole, while each separate committee is responsible only for the particular bill referred to it, and does not consider it with the aggregate, for it does not have the aggregate before it."

Senator HALE said:

* * * "I do not want to take up the time of the Senate upon this question; it is not a new one either in this body or in the other body, where my colleague, the chairman of the committee reporting this rule, had somewhat long service. There never was the time there when there was not some form or condition of a struggle to shear the Committee on Appropriations of a large part of its power; it was a struggle that constantly came up. In the course of that debate, as everybody will see who has read it, and as is shown in the extracts from it read here by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], there was found, what will undoubtedly be found here, that there is a feeling on the part of other committees that the control of the money of the Government which is to be applied to any particular branch of the service should be in the hands of the committee raised to consider the interests and concerns of that Department. A Senator expressed it to me only a few moments ago quite epigrammatically. He said: 'You give us power to legislate, but that is good for nothing without the money to carry it out.' Of course it was precisely to meet that condition that one Committee on Appropriations was raised to consider all such subjects.

"I know from my own experience that the tendency of the mind of a member of either of the other committees calling for appropriations each year—the Military or the Naval Committee (I will speak of the latter because I have had service upon that committee)—is to gain all the power in appropriating money possible, and connected with that is the unerring result of desiring to have the power to appropriate more money. There has never been any exception to that. I think few Senators will dispute the statement that if all the business of the Committee on Appropriations was taken from it and given to the several committees we should then be confronted with a general scramble upon the part of each committee for more money. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] urged that point much more forcibly and clearly than I can, and his experience, never a member of the Appropriations Committee, but belonging to other committees here, taught him that.

"The Committee on Appropriations is liable to make great mistakes; there is no committee that is not; but it is so situated that it has no favoritism for any branch of the Government; it considers all. First, it determines, so far as in it lies, how much money in all shall be appropriated. In the work that is now going on in the other legislative branch of the Government, in the work that is laid out by the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, one of the first things that will be considered by the moving spirits of that committee is, how much money can we afford to give for all the branches of the Government? If there is to be a movement in the interest of what is called economy, that is the fundamental question that is first attacked, and that is a proposition in which the Committee on Appropriations has, as I have said, no favoritism. It does not want to unduly build up the Army; it does not want to extravagantly increase the Navy; it does not want to waste money on the Indian service; and so on throughout all the Departments; and so you get an action complete in itself, though, as I have said, by no means perfect. The tendency of the mind upon other committees, that is, of my own mind I know, is the other way. I am looking, if upon the Naval Committee, to that as a question of great importance. I do believe it to be. I do not think that there are many questions likely to come before this Congress of more immediate importance than that; and if I were guided only by my investigations and desires upon that committee, I know that my mind inevitably would run to a larger appropriation than it would if it was considering all the needs of all the branches of the Government. This is so apparent that it is trite to say it, and I need not urge it."

* * * * * * *

Senator CALL said:

* * * * * * *

* * * "It seems to me that the chief object of the Committee on Appropriations is to preserve a proper correspondence between the receipts and revenues of the Government and its disbursements, its appropriations. How can that be done if each committee of the Senate has a right to fix the amount, so far as a committee can do it by a recommendation of the amount to be appropriated? Manifestly there can be no revising power by the Senate after the specific appropriation is fixed if separate appropriation bills are to come from each committee. There can be no general aggregate presented by any agency whatever for the consideration of the Senate, and there can be no proportion preserved between the receipts, the revenues of the Government, and its disbursements. This, undoubtedly, is a necessary object, and one to which there can be no exception. If one committee, the Committee on the District of Columbia, has it, still the disproportion will exist. It is true there will be no great difference if that committee appropriates only a small amount, but the principle is unquestionably violated. It is necessary that there shall be a correspondence preserved between the amount of revenue received by the Government and the amount appropriated, and so far, as an incident, the Committee on Appropriations is vested with authority to make recommendations as to items of appropriation which are excessive, extravagant, or too little for the object proposed. That is a necessary incident of the great power of making such recommendations to the Senate as will preserve the proper proportion between the disbursements and the revenue of the Government.

* * * * * * *

"I do not perceive that there is any force in the arguments which have been submitted to us, because the committees have now absolute power to make recommendations such as they see fit upon all the subjects within the jurisdiction of each committee. As I interpret the rules, a committee has power when an appropriation bill comes here to take every item of that appropriation bill, relating to the subjects within the jurisdiction of that committee, and either recommend the appropriation according to the bill, or in excess of it or in diminution of it. The simple difference, as it appears to me, proposed by this rule, is that of a compulsory reference to a committee, except so far as the rule now stands without the amendment of the Senator from Kansas that it gives to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Internal Improvements the absolute right to recommend such appropriations as they see fit for the immediate action of the Senate."

SAML. J. RANDALL.

TEMPORARY RULES.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That, until the adoption of permanent rules for the government of the House, there shall be, on to-day and each Monday hereafter, a call of States for the introduction of bills for reference, as provided by the rules of the Forty-eighth Congress; not to interfere with the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, does the consideration of that resolution require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. CANNON. But it is subject to a point of order, I take it. Under the rule it would go to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I think not.

The SPEAKER. The resolution does not propose any change in the rules. It simply proposes a method of procedure in the House, in relation to a particular subject, until the rules are adopted.

Mr. CANNON. I understand that the rules have been adopted.

The SPEAKER. The rules have not been adopted.

Mr. CANNON. I thought they were temporarily adopted.

The SPEAKER. If the rules had been adopted, even temporarily, no such resolution as this would be necessary, because the Chair would proceed to call the States and Territories under the rule; but there being no rule in force which requires the Chair to make that call, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] proposes the adoption of this resolution for to-day and other Mondays until the House shall have adopted its permanent rules.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, have we not adopted the parliamentary rules laid down in Jefferson's Manual, as modified by the rules of the last House? And if that be so, then are we not temporarily acting under the rules of the last House?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman is incorrect, I think.

The SPEAKER. In response to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] the Chair will state that on motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] a resolution was adopted providing that the House in its proceedings should be governed by the general parliamentary law as modified by the usage and practice of the House of Representatives; but the Chair is not prepared to say that the adoption of that resolution revives any committee or any rule or practice of the last House in relation to the jurisdiction of committees.

The Chair is inclined to think that the purpose and effect of that resolution simply are, to govern the proceedings and deliberations of the House—that is, the proceedings on the floor—by the common parliamentary law and the practice heretofore prevailing in the House.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand a resolution has been adopted by the House requiring all propositions affecting the rules of proceeding to be referred to the Committee on Rules without debate. Now, while this resolution does not, in direct terms, undertake to establish a permanent rule, it does propose a temporary rule; it provides that as a temporary arrangement the business of the House shall be conducted in accordance with this resolution. I think, therefore, that in accordance with the resolution adopted by this House on a former day this proposition must go to the Committee on Rules. I raise that point of order, and object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] is mistaken in the statement that a resolution has been adopted by the House providing for the reference of propositions of this character to the Committee on Rules without debate. All the propositions heretofore referred to the Committee on Rules, at the present session, have been so referred by a vote of the House upon a motion of some member on the floor. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER], the mover of this resolution, is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I have no remarks. I call for a vote.

Mr. ROWELL. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. If bills be introduced under this resolution, is there any rule by which they may be referred to committees and printed?

The SPEAKER. The resolution itself provides that they shall be referred to committees when appointed, as provided in the rules of the last House.

Mr. KING. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] whether this resolution includes to-day.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It does.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that we shall make no progress by introducing bills to-day, while we put ourselves in such a condition that great confusion may arise. This resolution provides that bills introduced to-day and until we adopt permanent rules shall be referred to committees, as if the rules of the House in the Forty-eighth Congress were now in force. This House is about to try to change the jurisdiction of a number of the committees. If we refer to the Committee on Appropriations to-day a bill which under the rules as they may be modified would go to some other committee, a question will hereafter arise whether the bill can be taken from the committee to which it has been referred—whether the jurisdiction of that committee, having attached under this resolution, will not continue.

This method of introducing bills before the appointment of committees has been tried once or twice before—only once, I believe—and I have been told by gentlemen who were then officers of the House that the proceeding produced a great deal of annoyance, vexation, and confusion, in consequence of the transfer of bills from the hands of committees that had had the custody of them ad interim. If any good could come from introducing bills to-day I would have no objection; but I do not see what advantage can arise, and I am told that a great deal of difficulty may be produced, even apart from the matter of confusing jurisdiction.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. HAMMOND. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman will remember that during the extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress, when a resolution was reached not to enter on general legislation at that session, a large number of bills were introduced, and one of the officers of the House who then had charge of the bills told me on Saturday that during that Congress it was never possible to get the bills entirely straightened out, and that great confusion resulted. I think the gentleman from Georgia is correct in his statement.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thank the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] for aiding my memory in that particular. I have heard the general remark that this proceeding when heretofore attempted caused confusion, there having been, as I am informed, only one occasion when it ever was done. I think this resolution ought not to pass.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I can not see how any difficulty such as is suggested by the gentleman from Georgia would arise.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] permit me to suggest one of the difficulties?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. MCMILLIN. At present there is no chairman or clerk of any committee to receive bills which may be introduced and ordered to be referred; so that, after they are printed, they can not be distributed. There ought to be some officials of the committees to take charge of bills as they are referred; but under this arrangement, if they are dumped down into the committee-rooms, no committee clerk will be authorized to receipt for them, and the officers in charge of them can do nothing with them. It seems to me likely that we shall get into some trouble if we adopt this resolution.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Certainly there is nothing in the suggestion made by the gentleman from Tennessee. These bills, if introduced, will be ordered to be referred to the regular committees. I do not understand that the report of the Committee on Rules will change the regular committees at all. How can any confusion arise? No gentleman will be compelled to introduce bills under this resolution. If any gentleman is afraid his bills, if referred now, may be lost or may not go to the proper committee, he can withhold them until the regular committees are appointed.

Mr. SPRINGER obtained the floor.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. SPRINGER. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]; but will recognize next the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am not at liberty to refer to any of the substance of the proposed report of the Committee on Rules of this House; but I am at liberty to refer to a proposition which was laid before the House and referred to that committee, and which I believe will be reported back with the recommendation that it be adopted as a part of the rules of the House. I refer to a proposed amendment to the twenty-first rule, to the effect that—

No bill for the payment or adjudication of private claims against the Government shall be referred, except by a two-thirds vote of the House, to any other than the following-named committees, namely: to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to the Committee on Pensions, to the Committee on Claims, to the Committee on War Claims, to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and to the Committee on Accounts.

I hope this rule will be adopted before any bills are introduced for reference, because if bills are now introduced, in the present condition of the rules of the House, and referred to other committees than those to which they would properly go under the new rules, such committees will have obtained jurisdiction of the subject-matter referred to them in this hasty and inconsiderate manner.

This rule is for the purpose of sending all bills of a private character to committees to be raised for the purpose of considering them, instead of sending them to the general committees of the House as has heretofore been the custom. During the last session of the House, and in fact for many years past, it has been the custom to refer a number of bills of a private character to the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Ways and Means, and other committees of the House having jurisdiction of general subjects, thereby giving them jurisdiction and charge of matters of a purely private character I hope, until this amendment to the rules shall have been finally adopted—I mean this proposition to provide special committees having charge of matters of private legislation—that no bills will be introduced in the House to flood the committees having control of general legislation.

In addition to this it has been proposed, sir, to require all bills of a private character to be placed in the petition-box, along with bills for the establishment of post-roads and those which have reference to the improvement of rivers and harbors. If that be adopted, as I believe it will be, and ought to be, it will avoid the necessity of printing a vast number of bills of a private character. The mere printing of these bills heretofore has cost the Government thousands and thousands of dollars. The document-room of the House is now loaded down with bills of a private character which have been printed from Congress to Congress at an enormous expense to the people. If we open up this flood-gate of bills to-day and allow them to be introduced under the former rules of the House, they will all go to the Printing Office and be reprinted at Government expense; and the cost of reprinting bills already in print, which will be presented under this resolution and ordered to be printed, I venture to assert will not be less than from $10,000 to $15,000.

But if this were not a matter of economy I should still object to the passage of this resolution for the reasons I have already stated. I hope, therefore, that it will not be adopted, and that no bills will be introduced until the jurisdiction of the committees has been finally determined by the House on the report of the Committee on Rules. After that there will be ample time to introduce bills. If they are introduced now, they can not be considered; because no committees are organized or ready to receive them, and hence no time is saved by letting them in now and referring them to committees which have no existence. I hope, therefore, the resolution will not be adopted.

Mr. HOUK. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the first thing the House wants is a set of rules. If you commence introducing bills to-day, they will only contribute more to the confusion prevailing, when no rules exist, as has been well said by other gentlemen on the floor. There are no clerks, no committees, no authorized authority to receive and distribute the bills after they are introduced, and I hope the House will vote down the resolution and let us begin at the beginning, take up the question of the rules, adopt what we are going to adopt, and proceed, like business men, in an orderly way.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have not as yet heard a valid objection to the resolution I have introduced. It has been the practice of this House from time immemorial to receive bills before the appointment of the standing committees of the House for reference to the committees when they are appointed. That is the purport of the resolution—that the bills be introduced for reference to committes when appointed.

The suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has no weight, because bills printed in the last Congress are worth nothing but that much blank paper. They can not be considered by the committees of the House hereafter unless they be introduced, nor can they be considered by the House itself until they are introduced and printed. Hence I see no objection to the resolution. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire simply to call the attention of the House to the fact that what is proposed by the resolution of the gentleman from Iowa is simply what has been done by former Houses of Representatives without objection, certainly in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses. It has been the custom on the first Monday after organization, before the committees have been appointed, to introduce bills, and they have been received for reference to the proper committees when they are appointed. I see no confusion that can arise if we proceed to-day according to the custom that has prevailed in previous Congresses.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, there is another objection to the proposed resolution which has not yet been stated. If this resolution shall pass, the lists of all of these bills will have to be printed twice—first in the RECORD when they are introduced, and afterward when they are referred to the committees.

I move, therefore, that this resolution be referred to the Committee on Rules.

Mr. HATCH. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I call for a division of the House on that vote.

The House divided; and there were 151 ayes.

Mr. LONG. No further count.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes; there is.

The nays were counted; and there were 58.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I demand the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER. Twenty-nine have voted in the affirmative; not being one-fifth of the last vote, the yeas and nays are not ordered.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. As the rules of the House are not now operating, is not the gentleman from Kansas entitled to the yeas and nays by general parliamentary usage?

The SPEAKER. He is entitled to the yeas and nays by the Constitution of the United States when one-fifth of the members present demand them. [Laughter and applause.]

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BALLENTINE: Petitions and papers of Mary C. Starnes; of Ann McLaurine, widow of F. T. McLaurine; of J. W. Nance; of Ira B. Martin; of Henry P. McMillion; of Luke Lee; of R. F. By Mr. T. B. WARD: Petition of John Kennedy, for relief—to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 15, 1885.

Prayer by Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D., of the city of Washington.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, communicating a report of "tests of iron and steel" made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication, together with the accompanying papers, of which there are a great number, will be referred to the Committee on Printing for the consideration of the question of printing them, as was done at the last Congress, if there be no objection. If there is any motion made in respect to their printing it will be entertained.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What are the papers?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They are voluminous papers in respect to the tests of iron and steel. As they are quite voluminous, probably the question of their printing, as was done last year, had better be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Decidedly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Printing, together with the communication of the Secretary of War transmitting them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 10th instant, a report in four parts by Capt. W. H. Bixby, Corps of Engineers, on the seacoast fortifications in Europe in 1881-'82.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This communication is accompanied by a great number of voluminous reports. What shall be done with them?

Mr. EDMUNDS. They had better be referred to the Committee on Printing, I should think.

Mr. DOLPH. I had the honor to introduce the resolution calling for this report. It is a very important one indeed, being the report, as stated, of an agent sent to Europe to examine and report on the seacoast fortifications of the different countries. I think I shall ask to have the papers referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses in the first instance, with a view of having them make some recommendation, and then have their report referred to the Committee on Printing.

The object in calling for the report was to have it printed, as there seems to be no authority in the War Department to have it printed; but I think perhaps it had better be examined in the first instance by the Committee on Coast Defenses.

Mr. MANDERSON. I hope the communication will be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses, and that that committee will pass upon the question of printing the document. Of course it is extremely difficult for the Committee on Printing to take these voluminous documents and decide as to their importance and the necessity for their printing. I hope the Committee on Coast Defenses will also report as to the number of the document which should be printed.

Mr. DOLPH. My object in suggesting that the report be first referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses was to enable them to make some recommendation as to the number of the document to be printed and the character of the printing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses without an order to print.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The communication ought to be printed, so that the records of the Senate may show that the report has been sent in, but not the papers, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be so modified, and the letter of the Secretary of War will be printed, but not the accompanying papers.

Mr. DOLPH. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 8th instant, a report of the Chief of Engineers in reference to the improvement of Broad Creek, in Delaware; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from W. W. Corcoran, transmitting, in compliance with law, the annual report of the Joint Commission for the Completion of the Washington Monument; which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Adjutant-General of the Army, together with petitions of officers and non-commissioned officers of twenty-two regiments, favoring the passage of an act to equalize the pay of certain non-commissioned officers. The communication from the Secretary of War will be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that the letter of the Adjutant-General, which probably contains the largest amount of information upon the subject, should be printed also, but not the papers that accompany the Adjutant-General's letter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order to print will include also the letter of the Adjutant-General, but without the accompanying papers in the form of petitions.

Several SENATORS. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a communication from Hugh J. Campbell, president of the State executive committee of the Territory of Dakota; which was read, as follows:

SIOUX FALLS, DAK., December 8, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to herewith transmit a certified copy of the constitution and memorial of the State of Dakota, and ask that it be presented to the Senate.

Yours respectfully,

HUGH J. CAMPBELL,
President State Executive Committee.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it the pleasure of the Senate to order the printing of the accompanying constitution?

Mr. HARRISON. I have a copy of that document in my hand, which I intended to present when the call for bills was reached, in connection with a bill I shall introduce; but as the document is laid before the Senate by the Chair, it obviates that necessity. I suggest that there be no order for the printing at present, but that the communication and accompanying paper go to the Committee on Territories.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Territories without any order to print.

Mr. HARRIS. Though not in sympathy with the views of the petitioners, I present resolutions, in the nature of a memorial, of the Tennessee Teachers' Association favoring national aid to education. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Mrs. Margaret A. Watson, Mrs. R. C. Shepherd, Mrs. E. H. Atkinson, Mr. D. H. Pierce, and 100 other citizens of East Liberty, Logan County, Ohio, praying the adoption of a sixteenth amendment to protect the women of the United States in the exercise of their citizen's right to vote; which was referred to the Select Committee on Woman Suffrage.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of H. C. Lane and 102 other citizens of Sheldon, Iowa, praying for the passage of an act of absolute forfeiture of certain lands within the limits of the grant to the Sioux City and Saint Paul Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of members of the bar of the fifth judicial district of the Territory of Dakota, praying for two additional judges of the United States court for Dakota Territory and for a redivision of the judicial districts of the Territory; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CALL presented two memorials signed by 141 citizens of Hillsborough County, Florida, remonstrating against the forfeiture of the land grant made to the State of Florida for the construction of a railroad from Amelia Island to Tampa Bay, Florida; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of Mrs. Mary M. Semmes, widow of the late Commodore A. A. Semmes, praying for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of James Crutchett, of Washington, D. C., praying payment for property taken by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SEWELL presented the petition of Daniel F. Hammell, praying compensation for his services as first sergeant and second lieutenant in the One hundred and twenty-second Regiment New York Volunteers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of Hyland C. Kirk and other citizens of New York, praying that their claim for compensation for the use by the United States Government of a perforated tax-paid spirit stamp may be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GIBSON presented the petition of the minor heirs of John W. King and Edward M. Lane, of Warren County, Mississippi, praying to be allowed the proceeds of certain cotton taken and sold by the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of William R. Testerman, of Missouri, praying for the reference to the Court of Claims under the act of March 3, 1883, of a bill for his relief which I shall introduce when bills are in order. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of William H. Wymore, of Missouri, administrator of the estate of Cary Nall, deceased, praying compensation for sundry articles furnished to the officers of the Army for the use of scouts, &c. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Claims, to accompany the bill which I shall present when in order.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present additional evidence to accompany the bill (S. 295) granting a pension to Columbus C. Kerr, and move that this additional evidence, consisting of the petition of Mr. Kerr and the affidavits of Dr. S. S. Stacey and Lieut. John B. Mittus, be referred to the Committee on Pensions, to accompany the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 382) to authorize the Merchants' National Bank of Little Rock, Ark., to change its name to the First National Bank of Little Rock, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 126) to change the name of the National Bank of Winona, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BECK, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 416) for the relief of J. M. Lobban, reported it without amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary to report, without amendment, the bill (S. 335) to provide for protecting the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats, in the District of Columbia. The bill relates to what is commonly known as the Kidwell patent to the Potomac Flats, upon which, as is now well known, the Government is expending vast amounts of money for the improvement of the river front. While the claim appears to me to be vague and insubstantial, yet it is a cloud upon the title of the United States, and it appears to me important that the Attorney-General should be authorized to commence proceedings without delay to determine the rights under that patent. Although I can not at this time, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] has the floor, ask for the consideration of the bill, I shall in view of its importance ask the Senate to consider it as soon as possible after the Presidential succession bill is disposed of, perhaps to-day.

Mr. HOAR I will state for the information of the Senate that I announced yesterday that I would ask the Senate to take up to-day the Presidential succession bill, and then in view of a possible amendment to be offered to it would ask to have it go over until to-morrow. I am not sure that that amendment will be offered, but still Senators who heard the announcement probably supposed that the chief consideration of that bill would take place to-morrow. I shall therefore, after the bill has been read at the desk so as to have it understood that it has started in its consideration by the Senate, without any further delay give way and let the bill go over until to-morrow and let any other business that Senators may have ready come up.

Mr. INGALLS. Then I shall ask, after the consideration of the Presidential succession bill to-day shall have been concluded, that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill that I have just reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed upon the Calendar.

ALEXANDER R. LAWTON.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am authorized by the Committee on the Judiciary to report back favorably the bill (S. 118) for the relief of Alexander R. Lawton, of the State of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered. It is a bill to remove the political disabilities of Mr. Lawton, of Georgia, who, it may be remembered, was nominated last spring to an important office, but it is understood from the public papers that he was thought to be laboring under certain disabilities. Mr. Lawton, with a high sensibility to the question, withdrew himself from the consideration of the President in view of this difficulty, about which there was a difference of opinion, and has now petitioned Congress in a perfectly respectful and proper way, stating that while he himself does not think that he was under disabilities yet, in deference to the opinion, as he understood it, of a good many people, he now applies that his disabilities, if there be any, may be removed. I, therefore, ask unanimous consent that the bill be now considered.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to relieve Alexander R. Lawton, of the State of Georgia, of all political disabilities imposed upon him by the third section of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 556) for the relief of Betts, Nichols & Co.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 563) authorizing the partition of certain land in Louisville, Ky., belonging jointly to John Echols and the Government of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 564) to limit fees for the consular verification or authentication of invoices; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 565) for the relief of Joseph H. Maddox and others; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GIBSON (by request) introduced a bill (S. 566) for the relief of E. Troisgros; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 567) for the relief of the estate of Lucien Goyaux; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 568) referring the joint claim of T. Alonzo Walker and Augusta C. Todd, for proceeds of cotton, to the Court of Claims for adjudication; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. 569) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square numbered 406 of the city of Washington for the enlargement of the Post-Office Department building and to provide accommodations for the city post-office; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 570) for the relief of Jabez Burchard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 571) for the refunding to Josiah F. Bailey and Samuel W. Groome, lately trading as J. F. Bailey & Co., the amount of certain duties on steel blooms illegally exacted from them by the collector of customs at the port of Philadelphia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 572) granting a pension to Lena Kebler; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CULLOM introduced a bill (S. 573) granting a pension to Lewis P. Howard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PIKE introduced a bill (S. 574) for the relief of Robert Strachan; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also introduced a bill (S. 575) for the relief of Lysander H. Carroll; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 576) to authorize the Chicago, Freeport and Saint Paul Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Saint Croix River (or Lake) at any accessible point between Prescott, Wis., and Taylor's Falls, Minn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 577) for the erection of a public building at Stillwater, Minn.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 578) providing for the admission of the State of Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRISON. In connection with the bill I desire to present to the Senate an engrossed and certified copy of the constitution adopted by the convention held at Sioux Falls on the 25th of September. I ask the reference of the bill with the accompanying papers, without any present order for the printing of the constitution submitted, to the Committee on Territories.

I desire to say in this connection that the bill I have presented is the bill prepared by the executive committee appointed by the constitutional convention with a view of advancing the work of that convention to its completion by the admission of Dakota as a State. I do not desire to be understood as giving my assent to all the details of the bill, but I have thought it better to submit it for consideration and amendment by the committee rather than to undertake that work myself in advance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Territories with the accompanying papers.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 579) granting a franking privilege to Julia D. Grant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also introduced a bill (S. 580) granting a pension to Julia D. Grant; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say as to both these bills for the widow of the late President Grant, that they are precisely in the form of the bills heretofore passed by Congress into laws granting the franking privilege to the widows of ex-Presidents and granting pensions to the widows of ex-Presidents; and I hope that the respective committees will find it convenient to report them as early as possible.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 581) to establish a forest reservation on the headwaters of the Missouri River and the headwaters of Clark's Fork of the Columbia River; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 582) for the relief of the board of field officers of the fourth brigade of South Carolina Volunteer State troops; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (S. 583) to provide for the settlement of the rights of the States, and of the corporations and persons interested in any grant of lands in aid of railroads and canals which shall be declared forfeited by act of Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VEST introduced a bill (S. 584) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship Railway Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 585) for the relief of William R. Testerman; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 586) for the relief of William H. Wymore, as administrator of the estate of Carey Nall, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 587) to provide for the sale of the Kickapoo diminished reservation in Kansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 588) to resume to the United States certain lands granted to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ALDRICH introduced a bill (S. 589) to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes, regulating inspection districts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 590) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to pensions, and certain laws enacted since the revision of the statutes, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to say in this connection that this is almost precisely the bill reported by the Committee on Pensions last Congress. It relates to a large number of minor defects in the pension laws. It was recommended from the office of the Commissioner of Pensions and was very carefully considered by the Committee on Pensions at the last Congress. The bill includes a number of cases which give Senators trouble very frequently, cases of inequality and other cases which we have to relieve now by a multitude of private measures. I desire that Senators shall be interested in this matter and endeavor to cure these small defects of the pension laws by a general act. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON introduced a bill (S. 591) granting increase of pension to Edward Hill, late of the Sixteenth Regiment Michigan Volunteer Infantry; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 592) for the voluntary retirement of lieutenants in the line of the Army after twenty years' service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BROWN introduced a bill (S. 593) for the relief of Morgan Rawls; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GEORGE introduced a bill (S. 594) granting pensions to the soldiers and sailors of the Mexican war; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GEORGE. The bill does not express my idea of the measure of justice and right that is due to the soldiers of the Mexican war, but I introduce it rather in conformity to what I believe to be the wish of the Senate so far as the soldiers of that war are concerned. It is in fact the bill which was passed by the Senate on the subject, divested of all extraneous legislation, of all legislation that does not refer to the soldiers of the Mexican war. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 595) granting a pension to David Peterson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 596) for the relief of Russell Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 597) for the relief of Mary Heron; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 598) granting an increase of pension to Charlotte D. Crocker; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 599) to refund excessive duties caused by extraordinary overvaluation of the Austrian florin in the year 1878; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 600) for the relief of the assignees of Addison C. Fletcher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 601) for the relief of the Sone and Fleming Manufacturing Company (Limited), of the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HARRISON introduced a bill (S. 602) to legalize the election of the Territorial Legislative Assembly of Wyoming; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 603) for the relief of J. R. Jones, late postmaster at Boydton, Va.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. EUSTIS introduced a bill (S. 604) providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the declared discovery of inoculation of yellow fever and protection so afforded against that disease; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Select Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. JACKSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 11) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States changing the terms of office of President and Vice-President of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PAYNE introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 12) to authorize the application of money appropriated by act of July 5, 1884, for continuing improvement of harbor at Cleveland, Ohio, to construction of an eastern arm to the breakwater; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SABIN. I introduced a bill several days since, the bill (S. 267) for the relief of Edway A. Grant, and through a misapprehension asked its reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. The bill should have been referred to the Committee on Claims, and I now ask its transfer to the Committee on Claims by permission of the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That change of reference will be made if there be no objection.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. GORMAN, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of Joseph H. Maddox be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the joint claim of T. Alonzo Walker and Augusta C. Todd be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion of Mr. PIKE, it was Ordered, That the papers on file relating to the claim of Robert Strachan be taken therefrom and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

On motion of Mr. EVARTS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of the Sone and Fleming Manufacturing Company (Limited), of the city of New York, on the files, be referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, it was Ordered, That the papers in the claim of William J. Gamble be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion of Mr. VOORHEES, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of George F. Roberts, administrator of the estate of William B. Thayer, deceased, surviving partner of Thayer Brothers, be taken from the files and referred to the Committee on Finance.

On motion of Mr. ALLISON, it was Ordered, That A. V. Richards have leave to withdraw the papers in his case from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. BECK, it was Ordered, That Charles D. Pennybaker have leave to withdraw from the files the papers in his case for the refunding of taxes alleged to have been illegally collected from him, subject to the rules.

CONSULAR FEES.

Mr. BECK. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, requested to cause inquiry to be made, and to inform the Senate whether or not any consular officer or commercial agent of the United States is now, or has been since 1868, personally interested in, or benefited by, the fees paid to the notarial, consular, or commercial officials of any other nation, for oaths administered or verifications made on invoices destined to the United States, and if any are, or have been, so interested or benefited, to report the amount of such benefit or interest as to each officer or agent.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that lie over until to-morrow. I should like to look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to its consideration, the resolution lies over under the rule.

Does the Senator from Kentucky desire to have the resolution printed?

Mr. BECK. I would rather it should be printed for the information of the Senate. I shall call it up to-morrow.

PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Calendar is now in order.

Mr. HOAR. I move to take up the Presidential succession bill. I believe that is the first bill on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 471) to provide for the performance of the duties of the office of President in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability both of the President and Vice-President.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] desired to take up a bill which he has indicated, but I understand that he now prefers not to ask the consideration of that measure at this time. I will therefore, if there be no other desire on the part of the Senate, state very briefly the purpose of this bill and proceed with it to-day as far as may be, and then let it go over until to-morrow.

The bill provides for two changes in the existing law. First, it substitutes for the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House as the officers upon whom the duties of President shall devolve in case of a vacancy in the office of President and Vice-President, the members of the Cabinet in the order of their official seniority—the order in which the various Departments were created, except that the head of the Department of Justice, which is the last Department created by law, is continued in his old place as Attorney-General, ranking the heads of the Departments created since the original establishment of the Cabinet. That is the first change proposed in the existing law.

Second, the bill as reported from the committee provides that the officer who shall be called upon to act as President in case of a vacancy in the office of President and Vice-President or in case of inability, shall continue so to act during the term for which the President and Vice-President had been elected, and abrogates the provisions of law providing for an election in the interval.

Without undertaking to make a full and elaborate speech upon this question, I will state, what I suppose are well known to most Senators, the reasons for proposing both these changes.

Certainly the present arrangement, which devolves the office of President of the United States in any contingency upon the President of the Senate or Speaker of the House, is a most awkward and inconvenient one. It was adopted originally in opposition to the opinion of Mr. Madison and in opposition to the opinion of the first House of Representatives, of which he was the leader. It was adopted as the result of a continuance of the old controversy in the convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, of the struggle for the equality of the small States in the Government as against the claim that the powers of the Government should be wielded by the people of the different States in proportion to their population. The scale was turned, however, in favor of the adoption of the existing principle by the jealousy entertained toward Mr. Jefferson by the leading Federalists of the first Administration; and undoubtedly but for the apprehension of the growing public influence of Thomas Jefferson and of the political opinions of which he was the representative the provision would have been made in the First Congress that the Secretary of State should succeed to the executive function in case of a vacancy.

The present arrangement is bad, first, because during a large portion of the term there is no officer in being who can succeed. That was the case during the whole of the last vacation after the expiration of the last Congress.

It is inconvenient, also, because it would be almost impossible for the President of the Senate to continue to perform the functions of his office, which is the principal office, to which the Presidency of the United States is made a mere adjunct or appendix in the contingency which is provided for by law. Nothing can be conceived more awkward, more repugnant to our sense of propriety, than for the President of the United States to sit in the chair of the Senate and preside over and listen to discussions in regard to his own nominations, voting upon them himself as an equal in the Senate, and presiding over and listening to the severe criticisms of executive policy which in times of high party antagonism must be always heard in this Chamber, and ought to be always heard in this Chamber.

Then, the political functions are devolved by the present arrangement upon an officer changeable at the will of this body. The President of the Senate may be removed from time to time by the majority of the Senate, after the Presidential functions have devolved upon the office as before; and that suggests many very grave and doubtful constitutional questions as to the title in certain contingencies to the Chief Executive office, a matter which should be removed by every possible legislative precaution from any question whatever.

The President of the Senate is not elected with reference to his fitness for executive functions. He is to be under our constitutional theory a senior, representing the principle of seniority, one of the elders, as his name implies. He is chosen for his capacity as a debater and a framer of legislation. If, as is usual, his life has been passed specially in the discharge of like duties with those which he is performing here, he will have little or no executive experience. Both these two last suggestions, which apply with great force to the case of President of the Senate, apply with uncontrollable force to the case of Speaker of the House of Representatives. It would be almost a physical impossibility to discharge the duties of these two great offices, that of President and Speaker, for any considerable time by one man—offices the two most laborious, responsible, and anxious probably known to our Government, each of which properly performed is enough to tax the strength and shorten the life of a strong and capable man.

The statistics of this matter are very remarkable. I have here a list of the Presidents pro tempore of the Senate, the Speakers of the House of Representatives, the Secretaries of State, and the Secretaries of the Treasury, and it is a very curious list in the suggestion which it affords upon this question. Here is the list of the Presidents pro tempore of the Senate, which I will read:

PRESIDENTS PRO TEMPORE OF THE SENATE.

John Langdon, Richard Henry Lee, John Langdon, Ralph Izard, Henry Tazewell, Samuel Livermore, William Bingham, William Bradford, Jacob Read, Theodore Sedgwick, John Lawrence, James Ross, Samuel Livermore, Uriah Tracy, John E. Howard, James Hillhouse, Abraham Baldwin, Stephen R. Bradley, John Brown, Jesse Franklin, Joseph Anderson, Samuel Smith, Stephen R. Bradley, John Milledge, Andrew Gregg, John Gaillard, John Pope, William H. Crawford, Joseph B. Varnum, John Gaillard, James Barbour, John Gaillard, Nathaniel Macon, Samuel Smith, L. W. Tazewell, Hugh L. White, George Poindexter, John Tyler, William R. King, Samuel L. Southard, W. P. Mangum, D. R. Atchison, William R. King, D. R. Atchison, Lewis Cass, Jesse D. Bright, Charles E. Stuart, James M. Mason, Thomas J. Rusk, Benjamin Fitzpatrick, Jesse D. Bright, Solomon Foot, Daniel Clark, Lafayette S. Foster, Benjamin F. Wade, Henry B. Anthony, Matthew H. Carpenter, Henry B. Anthony, Thomas W. Ferry, A. G. Thurman, T. F. Bayard, David Davis, George F. Edmunds, John Sherman.

Here is the list of the Speakers of the House of Representatives:

SPEAKERS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

F. A. Muhlenburg, Jonathan Trumbull, F. A. Muhlenberg, Jonathan Dayton, Theodore Sedgwick, Nathaniel Macon, Joseph B. Varnum, Henry Clay, Langdon Cheves, Henry Clay, John W. Taylor, Philip P. Barbour, Henry Clay, John W. Taylor, Andrew Stevenson, John Bell, James K. Polk, Robert M. T. Hunter, John White, John W. Jones, John W. Davis, Robert C. Winthrop, Howell Cobb, Linn Boyd, Nathaniel P. Banks, James L. Orr, William Pennington, Galusha A. Grow, Schuyler Colfax, James G. Blaine, Michael C. Kerr, Samuel J. Randall, Joseph W. Keifer, John S. Carlisle.

Now, on the other hand, with reference to the question of fitness in the public estimation for the Presidential office, listen to the list of Secretaries of State:

Thomas Jefferson, Edmund Randolph, Timothy Pickering, John Marshall, James Madison, Robert Smith, James Monroe, John Quincy Adams, Henry Clay, Martin Van Buren, Edward Livingston, Louis McLane, John Forsyth, Daniel Webster, Hugh S. Legaré, Abel P. Upshur, John C. Calhoun, James Buchanan, John M. Clayton, Daniel Webster, Edward Everett, William L. Marcy, Lewis Cass, Jeremiah S. Black, William H. Seward, Hamilton Fish, William M. Evarts, James G. Blaine, F. T. Frelinghuysen, and T. F. Bayard.

Six of the Secretaries of State have actually become Presidents, though not originally appointed with reference to any succession. Thirty-six years out of the ninety-six that this Government has been in operation, the office of President has been held by men who had once been Secretary of State. See, too, how the others who have not been elevated to the Presidency have been men who have been great leaders and exponents of the political opinions of their countrymen. In addition to the six Presidents (Jefferson, Madison, Monroe, Adams, Van Buren, and Buchanan) are Timothy Pickering, John Marshall, Henry Clay, Edward Livingston, Daniel Webster, Legare, Calhoun, John M. Clayton, Edward Everett, William L. Marcy, Lewis Cass, William H. Seward, Fish, Evarts, Blaine, and Bayard; and the list of the Secretaries of the Treasury, while not so impressive, emphasizes the same point.

No President pro tempore of the Senate, except Lewis Cass, has ever been the candidate of any considerable political organization for President of the United States. Of the Speakers of the House there have been four who have been candidates for the Presidency of any considerable political organization, and of those two had been Secretaries of State.

I do not forget, of course, that among the recent occupants of the office of President of the Senate pro tempore the names of Mr. Thurman, Mr. Bayard, Mr. Davis, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. SHERMAN are names of gentlemen who, while not candidates of any political organization, have been in the thoughts and minds of large numbers of their countrymen as persons suited to the performance of the highest executive office. But still the selection of the Secretary of State as the person to succeed to this function, it is clear from the statement which has been read, is the carrying out of the principle which lies at the foundation of the constitutional provisions in regard to executive power.

It was intended by the framers of the Constitution that the process by this great and free people of changing its mind should be a process which should take place but once in four years; and when a man is elected to the Presidency it is not so much the purpose of the American people to confer honor and authority upon an individual, or to put confidence in an individual, as it is to pronounce that certain policies, certain tendencies, certain opinions on great public questions in which the country has an interest shall prevail and have the ascendency in its administration for four years.

Then it is not necessary to say that the protection of the person holding the office of President against political violence and crime is a practical matter deserving the attention of the Legislature. It is unlikely that any person desiring to accomplish by crime a change of the political administration of this country would ever assassinate a President to cause the accession to the Presidency of his chief political adviser and friend. Guiteau would hardly have tried to elevate Mr. Blaine, and Booth would hardly have tried to elevate Mr. Seward. Of our Presidents, four out of seventeen Presidents and five out of nineteen Vice-Presidents have died in office; two Presidents have died by the hand of an assassin; and it therefore is well worthy the practical consideration of the legislative power to provide against this contingency.

Now, Mr. President, the other matter, the matter in regard to which I suppose the Senate will be likely perhaps to entertain more doubt, is the provision to repeal all the sections of the Revised Statutes which provide for an early election by the people in case of a vacancy. In the opinion of a majority of the committee the reasons are very strong that whoever succeeds to the Presidency under the provisions of this bill should carry on the office until the end of the regular constitutional term. In the first place, I think if the question were submitted to the people either after or before the event occurred which gave rise to it, there would be an almost unanimous desire that there should be no increase in the frequency of our Presidential elections. Originally the contest was between six years and four. There were various opinions in the convention that framed the Constitution, but the two opinions which had any considerable strength there were the opinion in favor of a six years' term, or longer, and the opinion in favor of the present term; and there has been, so far as I know, no suggestion anywhere to amend the Constitution of the United States by providing for more frequent Presidential elections, for shortening the Presidential term. All the tendency of the popular feeling has been in favor of the present term or a still longer one.

Then you have practically not only a great disarrangement and doubt and uncertainty attending all business when a Presidential election is coming on, as everybody knows, but you disarrange the whole calendar, the whole olympiad under which we have reckoned, according to which we have adjusted all our political processes and all our statutes. If you provide for an immediate election instead of having the acting President serve out the term—the election being for four years—you have a new four years' term fitting awkwardly upon the present one. All the officers have been appointed by the existing President with reference to his continuance for four years, and all that great class of offices which are, in the opinion of even some men who claim to be civil-service reformers, of such a confidential or personal nature so related to the Executive that they ought properly to be changed with the head of a Department, must be changed again on the coming in of a new President, and that, as I understand it, includes all the foreign consuls, great and small, all the foreign ministers, all the collectors of internal revenue, all the local post-offices, large as well as small, all the collectors of customs, and a very large number of subordinates and clerks in all their offices. That is not my own theory, but I understand it is held by some.

Mr. President, as it has been said, the immediate occasion for this bill, which has given it its prominence in public estimation, although it has passed the Senate once or twice when there was no such contingency—the immediate occasion of this bill is the impression upon the public mind of the grave and serious necessity for casting new safeguards about the life of the President of the United States; it is clear, as I said just now in another connection, that the security against the attempts on the life of the President by any political criminal in a time of great public excitement, when persons are maddened and crazed as the feeble mind of Guiteau was by a political quarrel, or a person who persuades himself that he is performing the part of a Brutus by ridding the country of a tyrant, who is sane—will be much greater under this bill than under existing law. The motive which affects their minds, and which has affected at least two such minds in our country, will continue to affect them if a new election of President is to be the result of the removal of the President and Vice-President. But if the principal adviser, the principal leader and exponent of the policies and principles of the party that elected the existing President, is to succeed to the office, and so in turn his other Cabinet advisers, that motive is entirely gone. And it is not a man, it is under the theory of our Constitution a principle of political conduct for which the people of the United States declare when they elect a President and Vice-President; and that is continued by the provisions of this bill.

I had a few other considerations to present; but I dealt with this matter very fully and thoroughly in introducing a bill substantially like this two years ago, which was passed by the Senate and sent down to the House, and, without repeating myself, I do not think I could profitably undertake to prolong a discussion on this question at this time. If any other Senator desires to address the Senate this morning, I hope he may do so; otherwise I shall ask unanimous consent to have the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Massachusetts takes his seat, I desire to suggest that there seems to be in the bill and also in the remarks of the Senator a little uncertainty whether in case of the death or inability of one of these officers having the duties of President cast upon him as Secretary of State, to illustrate, the succession would be to the then Secretary of State, or whether the law would have fulfilled itself in the case of an emergency of that kind and it would pass to the next officer mentioned, the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand the Senator's question exactly.

Mr. CONGER. In case of the inability of the President to perform the duties, by this bill the duties of the office would devolve upon the Secretary of State, and the other Cabinet officers in succession. Suppose the duties had been cast on the Secretary of State and disability was to arise in his case?

Mr. HOAR. Then it would go to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. CONGER. But suppose another Secretary of State had been appointed meanwhile?

Mr. HOAR. But it could not be. He remains Secretary of State. It is on him ex officio and as Secretary of State that the duties of the Presidency continue to rest all through.

Mr. CONGER. That was the point I wished to have more clearly presented.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that under the existing law if to-day there should be a vacancy in the office of President of the United States, the President pro tempore of the Senate would continue to take that office, but he must continue to be President pro tempore of the Senate. That is one of the debated questions; but the fact that it is a debated question is a reason for abrogating the present condition.

The Constitution says Congress shall in the contingency named provide by law what officer shall act as President. He acts as President by virtue of being that designated officer. It becomes one of the duties of the Secretary of State to act as President of the United States. The Constitution exhausts itself, so far as any special provision is concerned, in providing for an election of two officers who may be President of the United States. Originally they were both voted for as President, as everybody recollects. Then after 1801, after the strife between Jefferson and Burr, that was changed, and the Constitution now provides that the Vice-President shall become President—I do not give the precise phrase but the substance of it. He, as I understand, becomes President. There the Constitution exhausts itself, and remits to the legislative power the designation of an officer who shall perform the duties of the President until the term has expired; or, to use the phrase of the Constitution, until an election is had.

There are many excellent constitutional lawyers who are of opinion, for very grave reasons indeed, that it is not within the constitutional power of Congress to provide for an election in the interim, and that it was intended by the Constitution that the officer on whom this function is devolved by law should serve out the entire term. I have not undertaken to deal with that question at this moment. I think it will probably come up in the debate before the bill passes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOAR. I now ask unanimous consent, as I understand the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] is ready to take up his report from the Committee on Rules, that this bill go over and stand for consideration at the close of the morning hour to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Retaining its place on the Calendar. Is there objection? ["None."] It is so ordered.

JUDICIAL SALARIES.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 6) fixing the salaries of the several judges of the United States district courts at $5,000 per annum, and for other purposes; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out in section 2 the following words:

That no judge of any district or circuit court of the United States, or officer by him appointed, shall appoint to any office or employment in or pertaining to any court presided over by said judge any person related to him, by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity, within the degree of first cousin, shall be appointed to or employed in any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member; and no person heretofore so appointed or employed shall continue in said office or employment after the expiration of six months from the passage of this act.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, or the Senator who reported this bill, whether the language in line 9 of section 2 would apply to an attorney of the court.

Mr. HOAR. No, sir; it applies merely to such officers as auditors, masters in chancery, &c., appointed by the court. An attorney is not appointed by the court.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I would suggest to the Senator that he insert after the word "appointed" the words "by the court," so as to read "appointed by the court, or employed by the court in any office or duty."

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to that amendment if it makes it more clear.

Mr. MORGAN. I think it makes it more clear.

Mr. HOAR. It was intended to prevent the appointment by the judge of a court or by any other judge holding the court temporarily of the judge's brother or son to these lucrative offices. We have had in my part of the country no experience of any scandal or complaint, but the lawyers in the Senate during the last Congress, when this bill passed substantially in this condition, from almost all parts of the country testified to complaints in their neighborhoods which made this section proper. It was with deference to the very pronounced opinion of the Senate at the last Congress that this section was inserted at this time.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend, then, by inserting after the word "appointed," in line 8, the words "by such court;" and also by inserting after the word "employed," in the same line, the words "by such court."

Mr. McMILLAN. "Or judge," I would suggest to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. MORGAN. Very well; I will add that.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest whether it is necessary to insert those words twice, or whether the object would not be attained by inserting them once after the word "employed."

Mr. HOAR. The amendment as moved would allow another judge to come in and appoint. For instance, suppose the circuit court in Alabama or any other State is held by the district judge, as it may be under the law, and he appoints a son of the judge of the circuit court as clerk or auditor.

Mr. MORGAN. The word "court" would apply to that.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read as the amendment will read after it is amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Alabama will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 8, after the word "appointed," it is proposed to insert the words "by such court or judge;" and after the word "employed," in the same line, to insert the words "by such court or judge;" so as to read:

That no person related to any justice or judge of any court of the United States by affinity or consanguinity within the degree of first cousin, shall be appointed by such court or judge to, or employed by such court or judge in, any office or duty in any court of which such justice or judge may be a member.

Mr. HOAR. No objection.

Mr. COKE. I desire to say that I moved this provision as an amendment at the last session, and I think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama is entirely proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Alabama which has just been read.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. There is one other matter which I wish to call to the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts. In line 12 of the second section I suggest whether it would not be better to strike out "six" and insert "twelve," so as to read:

And no person heretofore so appointed or employed shall continue in said office or employment after the expiration of twelve months from the passage of this act.

Mr. HOAR. It seemed to the committee that six months from the passage of the act was long enough, because the pendency of the act will be well known, and these persons will have all that time in addition to the six months to obtain other employment.

Mr. MORGAN. I think I can call the attention of the lawyers of the Senate to a certain state or condition of a cause in which it would be inconvenient to cut off an officer thus appointed by the court from the complete discharge of the duties, such as a receiver, for instance, of a large railroad company or a large commercial corporation or other corporation who might have proceeded for a month or two to acquaint himself with the business of the receivership. If he is cut off now, in six months after the passage of this bill a large portion of the labor that he has performed in acquiring the proper information would be lost to the parties and to the court.

I do not understand that there is any particular case in the mind of anybody where there has been an abuse of the law in the appointment of a receiver, for instance, or a referee in cases on the law side of the docket, where referees are appointed under the practice of some of the States. It might work a very serious inconvenience to have a receiver or referee cut off within six months after the passage of this bill from the conduct of a very important cause which might be nearing completion and where his services would be indispensable.

Mr. HOAR. It has been held by several of the courts, and I suppose is settled throughout the country now, that a judge of a probate court can not appoint to the office of administrator, or the office of commissioner to settle an insolvent estate, a relative of his own within these degrees of consanguinity, because he is incapacitated from passing on the question of the accounts, from exercising that constant and strict supervision and control which ought to be exercised by an impartial and severe judge upon this class of officers.

The committee, I believe, were of the opinion that the original appointment by a judge of a relative of this sort was a scandal in itself, and that six months would be abundant time. If there be such a receiver he should surrender to some person whose official conduct can be controlled in the interest of all parties by an impartial judge, whose accounts and the rates for whose services can be fixed by an impartial judge. Of course in the case the Senator puts, if it ever should happen that there was a receiver who had acquired a special knowledge and skill which was indispensable to the settlement of an estate, he would give the benefit of his skill and experience to his successor, he would give him advice and give him information, and I suppose possibly there might be a case where the employment of such a receiver as an agent by the succeeding one would not be considered a violation of the principle of the law, though there would be very strong cause for watching it. I do not believe there will be any practical injustice done to anybody. This bill will not get through both Houses probably for some time, and when it does get through there will be six months allowed. I think that is sufficient.

Mr. MORGAN. I have no case in my mind at all.

Mr. HOAR. As the bill passed the Senate last year, if I recollect aright, there was no time given after the passage of the act.

Mr. MORGAN. I was about to say that if the object of the bill is to destroy and remove the scandal of the appointment of a receiver or referee or any other officer of the court by a judge who may be related to him within a certain degree, let the ax fall at once and remove him instantly; but if you give six months it must be not in consequence of the fact that the man who holds the office needs protection, but because the parties need protection, and I think that is not quite time enough in all cases. Now you have a practice in the Northern States with which I am not at all familiar, and which I do not think exists in many of the other States, that of having referees in causes in the common-law courts.

Mr. HOAR. We have a class of officers called auditors who are probably what the Senator refers to.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes; but in New York they are called referees in certain cases, and then in this District——

Mr. HOAR. They are not appointed by the court, but chosen by the parties, in my vicinity.

Mr. MORGAN. I was quite mistaken, then. I supposed that in this District referees were appointed by order of the court in certain cases.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Alabama will pardon me. I think the practice in a good many of the Northern States is that these appointees, by whatever name they are called, sometimes auditors in certain classes of actions, sometimes referees—the referees usually must be agreed upon by the parties—and sometimes commissioners, sometimes masters, and so on, depending upon the nature of the jurisprudence which is being exercised, are constantly appointed in the discretion of the court. This bill would certainly, as I think it ought to, prevent the judge of a court from appointing his own son or nephew, because it only goes to sons and nephews, to carry on this administration of justice, because human experience has proved, as all men must see from a great many sad instances of it, that it is not a good thing to do, and this time which is given is needed to allow the judge to find a suitable successor wherever this scandal may exist, and to allow the person, who in many instances has been appointed in good faith and is a good man, to wind up his affairs and transmit them fairly to his successor. So I hope my friend from Alabama will see that six months is about the right time.

Mr. MORGAN. I have said that I had no case in my mind. I have no experience with such provisions of law as have been referred to in this debate; we have no referee system in the Southern States; but I take it that if a judge had appointed a cousin as referee in a law cause or a receiver in an equity cause, and had died leaving him in this office with some important trust placed in his hands, this man would under the bill be removed from office after the expiration of the term of six months although the judge who appointed him may be dead at the time of the passage of this act. It makes no difference how important he may be to the parties or to the cause, he would be removed absolutely, and they could not consent that he should remain in that receivership or in that position of referee and continue to wind up the case.

I have merely suggested that if we are going to destroy an office that already exists in conformity with law, a right that exists among the parties to have the referee chosen by the court go on and finish up the case, it seems to me prudent that we should not do it very hastily, that we should give twelve months rather than six months for the dispatch of that officer and his function, whatever it may be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, as to the case my friend from Alabama has alluded to, of a judge being dead and his son continuing, this bill would not apply then at all, because the referee or master or commissioner would not be akin to the then judge of the court; the connection would have been entirely severed, and he would be entirely within the propriety of the law then.

Mr. MORGAN. Has the Senator from Vermont read the language of the tenth line?

And no person heretofore so appointed or employed shall continue in said office or employment after the expiration of six months from the passage of this act.

Who is the person "so appointed or employed?" The person who was at the time of his appointment or employment a cousin of the judge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think my friend is technically right, but that can be corrected in a minute.

Mr. MORGAN. I will yield to an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My suggestion is to relieve that difficulty, which of course is a very distant one, by inserting after the word "employed" the words "being so related to such judge." That will relieve it of the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Alabama. It brings it down to the then time; if he is then related to the judge he shall go out; if he is not, he can stay in unless the succeeding judge chooses to name another.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment in the second degree already pending.

Mr. MORGAN. I withdraw my amendment to let the Senator from Vermont get his in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Alabama withdraws his amendment so that the Senator from Vermont can submit his.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary by inserting, at the end of line 10, the words "being so related to such justice or judge;" so as to read: "and no person heretofore so appointed or employed, being so related to such justice or judge, shall continue in said office or employment after the expiration of six months from the passage of this act."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama renew his amendment?

Mr. MORGAN. No, Mr. President. If the Judiciary Committee are satisfied that they have got the law liberal enough, it will suit me. In the South we have very little such practice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It suits us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I have an amendment to propose. I move to amend by adding as a third section to the bill:

The first section of this act shall only apply to judges who are hereafter appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

I did not suppose this bill would be called up to-day. In fact, I did not suppose that it had been reported by the committee, inasmuch as we have no printed Calendar, and I desire to submit some observations on this feature of the bill which I think is an important one and a just one to the people as well as to the judges in office; but I do not feel quite prepared to go on with it this morning, unless the Senator has some reason for pressing the consideration of the bill at once.

Mr. HOAR. I have no objection to having this bill go over. I do not want it to go over as unfinished business to supplant the Presidential succession bill, which, of course, is of larger public importance than this.

Mr. MORGAN. Of course I would not ask that.

Mr. HOAR. But trusting to the Senator from Alabama to help me get it up as soon as that bill is disposed of, I will consent that it go over.

Mr. MORGAN. I regard the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts on the Presidential succession as the most important one we can possibly consider at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over by unanimous consent, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the amendments which have been agreed to may be printed, showing what they are in the form of the print, so that we may see exactly how the bill stands to-morrow, together with the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill as amended will be printed, if there be no objection, and also the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. MITCHELL. Senate bill No. 541, for the relief of Alexander J. Mueller, was referred to the Committee on Pensions. The Senator introducing it [Mr. INGALLS] thinks it should go to the Committee on Claims, and I ask that the Committee on Pensions be discharged from its further consideration and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that change of reference will be made.

JOINT RULES FOR THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the concurrent resolution proposing joint rules.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution reported by Mr. FRYE from the Committee on Rules on the 14th instant.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed rules will be read.

Mr. FRYE. I ask that the first reading of the joint rules in Committee of the Whole be dispensed with, and that they be read by clauses for amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection that course will be taken, and the first reading will be dispensed with. The rules will be read seriatim and considered open to amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I desire just to say one word. These are precisely the same rules that were adopted without dissent by the Senate at the last Congress, with the exception of an amendment which has been reported. There are now no joint rules, and the Congress of the United States is the only legislative body in the world that is without joint rules. The matters of special importance are contained in section 2, clauses 2 and 3, which provide that each House shall dispose every morning of all messages from the other on its table. That would prevent the other House from adjourning at the close of a session with two hundred and forty Senate bills on its table, and it can be done just as well as not, and would expedite business greatly.

The next is clause 4, "general appropriation bills," which prevents any general legislation on appropriation bills and amendments to that effect. That every Senator knows would be a relief.

The next of importance is on "conferences." There is now no regulation touching conferences.

The next is "10. Calendars," a provision that each House during the last days of the session, in proceeding to its Calendar, shall take up the business from the other House. That is what the Senate does to-day. This simply provides that both Houses shall do it.

The next is a provision for a joint committee on the Library. There is now no provision for a joint committee on the Library, and that article provides that the Senate portion of the Joint Committee on the Library shall continue in existence and power during vacation. There is now no authority for it, although the Senate continues it.
